Mr. BISSELL. Yes, and more than twenty years. And now gentlemen are heard clamoring against the idea of having a riding hall there at all. This is nothing new in the history of this institution. A riding hall has been kept up for this long period, without complaint upon your part, or upon the part of the people. An appropriation was made of $30,000 years ago for that purpose, and was expended for that object, and the hall has been used ever since.

Gentlemen talk as if we were about starting out with a new principle, or about to establish a new department of the West Point Academy. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] does not want a hall to be erected, because he desires that the boys shall be exercised on the snow and ice and sleet, in order to make them hardy; and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Benson] says that the boys in his State can ride well enough, and they are not taught in riding halls. I do not doubt that the boys in the gentleman's district can ride as well as country boys and village boys elsewhere. But I would like to know how the gentleman from Maine would like to see his own sons, or the sons of his neighbors, charging as cavalry upon a line of infantry. How many of them does he suppose would be sitting upon their horses by the time the line was reached?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, made a remark not heard by the reporter.

Mr. BISSELL. Not even the gentleman himself could sit upon his horse in such a charge.

Mr. SMITH. Does the gentleman think we shall have no cavalry unless we have riding halls to train them in?

Mr. BISSELL. I mean to say that you can have no efficient cavalry without the riders and the horses being thoroughly drilled as cavalry—the horse as well as his rider.

The horse must be learned to halt in an instant, and to plant his feet when he halts so that he will not slip. He must be learned to turn in an instant on a very small space, with other horses in very close proximity, and on each side of him, so as not to jostle those on the one side or the other. And the rider must learn to hold his reins in one hand and to wield his broadsword with the other, and in such a manner, too, as not to cut the head of his own or his neighbor's horse. All this must be done, unless you have dry covered earth, as in a hall, upon ground which is slippery with ice, or where it is soft and miry. It cannot be accomplished even where the ground is dry and tolerably smooth, without very much practice and drilling; and gentlemen can form their own impressions of how much drilling is necessary to complete the cavalry soldier.

The gentleman from Maine tells us that the boys in Maine can ride well enough. Sir, I should like to know if the gentleman from Maine has ever seen the difference illustrated between volunteers, who may have been what are commonly called good riders, and cavalry which have been regularly trained as such? I am sure he can never have seen it, or he would not venture to make the statements with which he has attempted to defeat this bill.

We are told—and I think it a strong argument in favor of this appropriation—that the institution at West Point was rapidly lessening in the public estimation until the Mexican war arose. So it was. A strong prejudice had been excited against it, and in which I, to some extent, participated. But, it is added, since the Mexican war, that prejudice has passed away. I reply emphatically, and well it may pass off since the Mexican war.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I recollect upon one occasion that in a suit instituted at law, the conduct of the horse was made a subject of inquiry; and the conclusion was solemnly come to that the horse was more reprehensible than that of the rider. From the case made out by the gentleman from Illinois, the only conclusion I can arrive at is, that it is much more important that there should be a school for training the horses than the men.

Mr. BISSELL. It is highly important that the horses should be properly trained.

Mr. SMITH. Then the bill before us is certainly a very imperfect one, for it does not provide all the machinery necessary. But I do not deny that it is highly important your cavalry should be properly trained. The point at which I desire to arrive is whether, in order to have efficient cavalry, you must have a hall to train them in. Now I maintain that the most efficient cavalry which ever existed was that which was trained in the open field.

Mr. BISSELL. With the gentleman's permission I will put him right just here. I do not pretend to say that you cannot have efficient cavalry without a hall to ride in; but I do say that it is the better, the more efficient, the quicker way to make your cavalry soldier, to have a place where he can be drilled every day regularly, and at stated times, and under favorable auspices.

Mr. SMITH. I am myself perfectly satisfied that this attempt, if it were really known to the country, would excite a general feeling of ridicule and indignation. The idea that at West Point there is not sufficient dry weather to train your cavalry officers out of doors, is to me strange and impossible.

Mr. BISSELL. It is so. They keep ninety horses there all the time.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; they keep ninety horses there all the time, and yet the young men cannot be brought out in the snow and trained, and they are not to learn anything. Train them on the plan of the hippodrome, and what is the consequence? When you put them in snow to encounter the enemy, they would be defeated; they would be unfit to meet the foe in battle. We have illustrations on that subject. They are to be abundantly found in history; and even the French cavalry could not stand before the British cavalry at Waterloo, though they were trained in a house of the sort indicated.

Mr. BISSELL. And the British have them of the same kind exactly.

Mr. SMITH. Perhaps the finest cavalry in the world was that which revolutionary history tells us existed here. I want to know whether the cavalry of Tarleton, educated in a house of this sort, could stand before that of Washington and Lee?

I think that this is only one of the fancies, the thick-coming fancies of the day. Nobody can do things as their ancestors did them. They do not only fear the peltings of the pitiless storm, but the scorching sunbeams of heaven. That is it; and they will want to perform in the shade as they now want to perform with a view to escape the showers of heaven. The whole doctrine is wrong; and I do hope, for the honor of the soldiery of this country, that there will be no additional luxuriousness in appropriations for them.

But I differ with the gentleman, in saying that the recent experience of the Mexican war has had the slightest tendency to revive the reputation of this institution. I would say that the history of the Mexican war is calculated—well calculated—to establish the great and preëminent fact that we are able to do without military schools, except such as are provided by the enterprise of the country. I appeal to the gentleman, and ask him who were more efficient in the public service than the volunteer regiments of the northwest and southwest?

Mr. BISSELL. I wish the committee would allow me a single word of reply.

[Cries all over the Hall "Consent!" "Hear him!"]

Mr. BISSELL. I will, with the unanimous consent of the committee, withdraw the amendment pending.

There was no objection, and the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BISSELL. I move a pro forma amendment. I will answer, at the outset, the pointed queries put to me by the gentleman from Virginia. Nobody is prouder than I am of the gallant and glorious services rendered by your volunteers—volunteers untaught, except such teaching as they received after they reached Mexico, in a war with that Republic. I accord to them the highest praise. At the same time, I declare my positive conviction that but for the science and skill drawn from the institution at West Point, our army would have been driven in disgrace from Mexico, in less than six months after they had entered it. What would have become of all your battles?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BISSELL. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. It is this: Whether it was West Point science or untrained valor that gained the field at Buena Vista?

Mr. BISSELL. Without the science and skill drawn from that institution, as I before remarked, the battle would have been lost to the Americans in thirty minutes.

[Several MEMBERS. "Undoubtedly," and "That is true."]

Mr. BISSELL. Now, let me go further and say, that without the gallantry displayed by the volunteers on that occasion, which has never been surpassed on earth, added to the skill of the artillery, the battle would have been lost in half an hour. Neither could have succeeded without the other.

Mr. JONES. I would ask the gentleman one other question, with his permission.

Mr. BISSELL. I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman think that science, without the volunteers, but with an equal number of regular troops, would have won that battle?

Mr. BISSELL. Well, sir, I cannot say, nor is it material that I should answer the question. But I say that without the science of which I have spoken, that battle would not have been won. I also say that without the gallant conduct of the volunteers, it would not have been won. Without the regular troops, but with an additional number of volunteers equal to the number of regular troops, we could not have succeeded without that skill and science of which I have spoken, and which was especially manifested in the serving of the artillery there.

But what strange things do we hear? For thirty years and more your cadets, sneered at as they have been, have been riding in a hall.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I do not sneer at science, or at the cadets. On the contrary, I am one of those who appreciate science; but I would not effeminate our soldiers.

Mr. BISSELL. Well, the gentleman speaks of the cadets being effeminated, and sneers at the mode in which they are taught to ride. That is what he does. And yet they have been taught to ride in that way for thirty years; and who ever heard the least complaint from the country, of which he speaks, before. Thirty thousand dollars was formerly appropriated for a riding hall; but the hall is found to be too small, and is filled with columns and so forth, and they want to enlarge and improve it; and instead of $30,000, they only ask for $20,000 to make it complete, so that the ninety horses which are kept at the institution, a great expense, may be employed for three or four months in the year more than they are now employed. Is not that economy? If it is not, in what would economy consist?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? He is occupying the floor by the indulgence of the committee, and therefore I shall not deprive him of any of his time.

Mr. BISSELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH. My question is this: Are not those ninety horses employed now in the room which the gentleman says has always existed?

Mr. BISSELL. Yes, sir; but, as the officers there say, to very great disadvantage.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, of course, they say so.

Mr. BISSELL. Well, who can say the reverse? The officers at the institution say those horses are employed at a disadvantage. "Oh, yes," says the gentleman; "they say so, of course." Well, who says otherwise?

Now, sir, we have heard some strange things during this discussion. For instance, that the Czar of Russia does not know how to make hardy soldiers. He, too, makes his soldiers effeminate, does he? The riding hall at Moscow is six hundred feet in length and two hundred feet in breadth, without a column or pillar through the whole of it. Napoleon Bonaparte did not know how to make hardy soldiers when he established his three riding halls. Neither did the Duke of Wellington know how to make hardy soldiers. Why, the very troops that gentlemen have referred to were taught their cavalry exercises in riding schools.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. Benson] declares that it is unbecoming and quite ridiculous for us to undertake to copy foreign nations in these things. Why, does he not know that officers have very frequently been sent to Europe to look into things there, and see if they could not bring home some valuable suggestions in regard to the Army?

Mr. DEAN. General Scott was sent.

Mr. BISSELL. Yes, sir; General Scott was sent to Europe for this purpose, and nobody complained about it.

A MEMBER. And General Wool.

Mr. BISSELL. General Wool was sent, also, and others whom I might name. Those officers found riding halls in every country that pretended to have regular cavalry. They came back and so reported here. This country has always had one, and yet now, when a proposition is made for an appropriation of $20,000 to repair and perfect that hall, we have a discussion of the whole question—the propriety of keeping up the institution at all, the effeminate of the cadets who go there, and the folly of attempting to make hardy soldiers in this way.

Mr. HAVEN. I do not desire to weary the committee, and I hope this debate will not be protracted to any unreasonable length; but I wish to say a few words in answer to the gentleman who last addressed us. He referred to foreign practices, and to the course of similar instruction in other countries, and gentlemen upon the other side of the Hall have also made the same reference. I agree with them, that we should enlighten ourselves, and draw instruction from whatever sources may be within our reach. I am far from shutting my eyes to improvements abroad, or to light from any quarter. I do not understand, however, that the instances to which gentlemen have referred are the end of knowledge upon this subject. One gentleman has told us that the Mamelukes of Egypt could not succeed against the French army there, because they were not trained and educated in cavalry exercises in riding schools; and that, for that reason, they could not succeed against the army of Napoleon, when it was thrown into hollow squares. Let me state to gentlemen upon the other side, also, that the best cavalry of France, the Old Guard, under the command of Marshal Ney, and who were instructed, for aught I know, in the riding halls of France, so highly eulogized by the gentlemen opposite, could make no impression upon the troops of Wellington, when they were thrown into hollow squares to receive them at the battle of Waterloo.

We have no information that is to guide us absolutely in these matters, without a proper exercise of our own judgment and our own senses. Gentlemen disagree upon this question as to the propriety and uses of a riding hall. Upon one side they tell us that it is intended for the benefit of the horses, so as not to injure them; and, upon the other, they say it is for the instruction of the cadets. The colonel, Lee, says that a sheltered room is necessary, in his opinion, for proper and economical instruction in this course. Which of these shall we follow? No, plan, no detailed estimate has been communicated to, or ever reached the Committee of Ways and Means, or this committee, in regard to this riding hall.

The gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. Bissell] tells us that battles in Mexico would have been lost but for the science displayed by the officers who had graduated at West Point. I agree with him, and I accord to the graduates at West Point, in those battles, as high a place on the roll of fame as the gentlemen does, but I desire him to remember that all the science from West Point displayed in the battles of Mexico, so far as the movements and operations of the cavalry was concerned, was taught in the present riding hall, in "the old shed" at West Point, for no appropriations for this new enterprise had then been made. It was capable then to turn out efficient men, and I believe it is still. I have never visited the present hall; I suppose it to be a tolerably good one. I am not sure but it is coeval with cavalry instructions in that institution. I am not aware it is out of repair. Some of it, I know, is of indestructible materials, for we are told here that the lives and limbs of the cadets are endangered by a liability to run against the iron posts that sustain it.

But I will not detain the committee with extended remarks; and I only desired to make these suggestions, not because they are to have any influence one way or the other, but because I feared that the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, if nothing was said in reply, would conclude the recommendations of the committee who reported back this bill. It is sufficient for me to say, that the Committee of Ways and Means did not intend or desire to pettifog or urge this measure upon the House. They wished that this committee and the House should have all the facts before them, and then make such disposition of the matter as the good judgment of the House should lead it to, without any regard to the opinions of the Committee of Ways and Means, or their recommendation. I hope the vote will now be taken.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise.

The question was then taken; and the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL.]

The question was then taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon concurring with the Senate amendment appropriating $20,000 for a cavalry exercise hall.

Mr. KERR called for tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. McNam and Van. were appointed.

Mr. LETCHER. It is manifest that there is no quorum present, and I object to doing business without a quorum.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is evidently a quorum present, and I hope we shall go on. It is too early to adjourn.

Mr. PECKHAM. The fact can be ascertained by counting the House.

The CHAIRMAN. It would appear that there is a quorum present. The question is upon concurring in the Senate's amendment. Upon that question tellers have been ordered. The tellers will take their places.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 56; no quorum voting. [Cries of "Call the roll!" "Call the roll!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ascertain by counting the House whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman cannot make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first ascertain whether there be a quorum in the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If we cannot rise and adjourn without a quorum, we should have to sit here all night. I ask that the question be put on the motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no quorum present, and the Chair cannot entertain the motion.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to understand this point. If I understand the decision of the Chair, I shall take an appeal.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman cannot take an appeal. The rule requires that the roll shall be called whenever the committee finds itself without a quorum; and no motion can be entertained until it has been called.

Mr. LETCHER. Do I understand the Chair to decide that the motion for the committee to rise cannot be entertained when there is not a quorum present?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that no motion can be entertained when the committee finds itself without a quorum.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair. We might be kept here a week, if that decision were to prevail.

Mr. JONES. I rise to a question of order. The rule prescribes that when the committee shall find itself without a quorum the roll shall be called, and the facts stated to the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. JONES. I am stating a point of order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The gentleman is discussing his question. No debate is in order, and I submit that the gentleman from Tennessee is out of order.

Mr. JONES. I am not debating the question. The gentleman from Virginia appealed from the decision of the Chair; and the point of order I make is, that no appeal can be entertained.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I call the gentleman to order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that no motion is in order; and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. KERR. I appeal from that decision.

Mr. JONES. I again raise the question of order that no appeal can be taken. The Chair has decided that there is no quorum present, and less than a quorum cannot decide a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so decided; and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LETCHER. I insist upon my appeal. The motion that the committee rise is always in order, whether there is a quorum present or not. I insist that the committee shall decide the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize no such appeal in the present stage of the proceedings.

Mr. LETCHER. But suppose a quorum of members do not make their appearance, how am I to have my appeal decided? Am I to wait here a week for them to come?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk then called the roll, and the names of the absentees were noted.

The committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. JONES, of New York) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the Military Academy bill, with the Senate amendments thereto, and having found itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, and the names of the absentees to be noted, and had directed him to report the facts to the House, with the names of the absentees, as follows:

Messrs. Abernethy, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Barry, Bell, Bennett, Benton, Bliss, Boreock, Breckinridge, Brooks, Campbell, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chase, Chastain, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craig, Cunningham, Curtis, Cutting, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Everhart, Feller, Gamble, Goode, Goodrich, Florence, Franklin, Grey, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lyon, McCulloch, Macdonald, McMullin, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Meacham, John G. Miller, Milson, Morgan, Morrison, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordant Oliver, Orr, Packard, Peck, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Scudder, Seward, Shaulder, Shaw, Simmons, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Strabers, Frederick P. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stoll, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, Trout, Tweed, Watker, Walsh, Warren, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zolliecoffer.

The SPEAKER announced that 107 members (less than a quorum) had answered to their names.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HENN. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, if the gentleman will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not withdraw the motion.

The question was put; and the motion agreed to; and

Thereupon (at fifteen minutes before four o'clock) the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 19, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. WADE presented resolutions of the Presbytery of Portage, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the Nebraska bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a memorial of the President and Directors of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, praying the passage of an act assenting to the act of the Legislature of Maryland incorporating said company; and also the passage of an act incorporating said company within the District of Columbia, with authority to extend and construct said road from its terminus in Georgetown through said town and the city of Washington, to the depot of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad in the city of Washington, and to the navy-yard and Potomac river; and a donation of public land, or an appropriation of money, to aid in its construction; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLEN presented the petition of George W. Lippitt, United States consul at Vienna, praying compensation for diplomatic services; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COOPER presented twelve petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of the Nebraska bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Also, a petition of steamboat inspectors, engine builders, and others, citizens of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, representing the importance of Evans's safety guard for preventing the explosion of steam-boilers, and praying the purchase of the patent right, or the adoption of some other means of making the same free to the public; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a petition of citizens of western Pennsylvania, praying that the duty on salt may not be abolished; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, the petition of Joseph S. Kite, praying the extension of his patent for an improvement in the construction of railroad cars; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented a memorial of citizens of the Territory of New Mexico, praying the establishment of a custom-house on the Rio Grande, near the town of El Paso, either within the limits of New Mexico or the State of Texas. The petitioners state, that a just regard to the interests of the citizens of New Mexico, in their commercial relations with the Republic of Mexico, requires the establishment of a custom-house, as above described, in consequence of the late regulations of the tariff of Mexico, the duties imposed by which have effected an entire prohibition of the introduction of all classes of goods. The petitioners state further, that as the matter now stands, the commerce of New Mexico and the United States, by way of Missouri, is entirely prohibited by the onerous duties levied at the frontier custom-house of El Paso; while, on the other hand, the citizens of Mexico introduce into New Mexico, free of duty, all their products, manufactures, and imports, and by their competition, exclude from the market the products and manufactures of their own country. The petitioners also suggest that, geographically considered, the place called Frontera, about eight miles north of El Paso, on the Rio Grande, in the State of Texas, would be the most suitable point for a custom-house; that point commanding all the now traveled passes to and from the town of El Paso. The petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ROBERT C. THOMPSON.

On motion by Mr. COOPER, it was Ordered, That the bill for the relief of Robert C. Thompson, together with the report accompanying it, be recommended to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, it was Ordered, That the memorial of John R. Jefferson and James H. Jenkins be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion by Mr. RUSK, it was Ordered, That the petition of J. S. Gibson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the petitions of Harriet A. Wilcox and Elizabeth A. W. Gibson, praying to be allowed pensions, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred sundry petitions praying relief for persons disabled by captivity in the Dartmoor and other prisons during the late war with Great Britain, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred documents in relation to the repeal of the tonnage duties on Spanish vessels, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, on the ground that the committee had already submitted a report on the subject; which was agreed to.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the petition and papers in the case of William Darby, praying remuneration for the time and money spent by him in the survey of the Sabine river, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

Bill for the relief of John Guzman, of Louisiana;
Bill for the establishment of a land office in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan;

Which were signed by the President pro tempore.

FACILITIES IN UNLOADING CARGOES.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill to prevent unnecessary delays in the unloading of cargoes arriving from foreign ports, have directed me to report in favor of the passage of the bill, with an amendment. As this is a matter of considerable public importance, as the amendment of the committee is recommended by the Department, and as there can be no serious objection to the bill, I ask that it be now taken up. The object is simply to dispense, where the owner requires it, with the delay of five days in unloading cargoes arriving by steamships.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That whenever merchandise shall hereafter be imported into any port of the United States from any foreign country in vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and it shall appear by the bills of lading that the merchandise so imported is to be delivered immediately after the entry of the vessel, it shall be lawful for the collector at such port to take possession of such merchandise and deposit the same in bonded warehouse. But whenever it shall not appear by the bills of lading that the merchandise imported, as aforesaid, is to be immediately delivered, it shall be lawful for the collector of the customs to take possession of the same and deposit it in bonded warehouse at the request of the owner, master, or consignee of the vessel, on three days' notice to such collector after the entry of the vessel. And all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the foregoing provision are hereby repealed.

Mr. SEWARD. The chairman of the committee has received from the Secretary of the Treasury a letter, recommending this substitute in these words:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 11, 1854.

Sir: I have the honor to return herewith the bill and other papers inclosed in your letter of the 15th ultimo, intended to prevent unnecessary delay in the unloading of imports from vessels from foreign ports.

I inclose, also, a draft of a bill which, in my opinion, is calculated to meet the necessities of the case, and which is respectfully recommended as a substitute for the draft inclosed in your letter.

You will perceive that its operation is confined to steam-vessels, as it is understood that the difficulties and delays complained of, are mainly in reference to that description of vessels employed as regular and established lines for the transportation of merchandise and passengers between ports of Europe and the United States.

To make the provisions of the bill applicable to all vessels, would so increase the business of the customs as to require a very considerable addition to the force now at the disposal of collectors, to superintend the delivery and storing of imports.

For the foregoing reasons, it has been thought best to limit the operation of the bill to steam-vessels.

It is not deemed necessary to insert any special provision in the bill, in regard to the lien for freight. It is thought best to leave it under the operation of existing laws.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES GUTHRIE,

Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. H. HAMLIN, Chairman Committee on Commerce,
United States Senate.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

CLERKS' COMPENSATION BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the House had passed the bill of the Senate, to amend the third section of the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, and for other purposes, with two amendments, in which they ask the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate take up the message with the view of moving, as I have authority to do, to concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments.

The first amendment of the House was to strike out the words "and all vacancies in any of the classes named in said section mentioned shall be filled by promotion from the class next below."

The second amendment was to add, at the end of the bill, the following proviso:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as making an appropriation for any period beyond the 30th of June, 1854."

Mr. ADAMS. The first amendment relates to the filling of vacancies; the second only limits the provision contained in the act to the present fiscal year, which was intended by the Senate anyhow. As the amendments are not important, I move that the Senate concur in them.

The amendments were concurred in.

PRACTICAL ANÆSTHESIA.

Mr. EVERETT. I am desirous of asking the attention of the Senate this morning to Senate bill No. 210, to recompense the discoverer of practical anæsthesia. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

Mr. EVANS. I hope that bill will not be taken up this morning. It requires some investigation. I have not yet given it that examination which I should desire to do. It is, I believe, considered a private bill, and I did not anticipate that it would be called up this morning; and, therefore, I am not prepared to present my views upon it.

Mr. EVERETT. I did not distinctly hear the Senator's objection. This is a bill which passed the Senate last year; and it is very much desired by the parties interested that it should be acted upon at an early day. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. EVANS. I cannot withdraw my objection. I had no idea that the bill would be called up this morning. If I have the right, I object, therefore, to its being taken up out of its order.

Mr. WALKER. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, I suppose, is at the disposition of the majority of the Senate. I hope that the Senate will agree to the motion, and that the bill will be taken up. It is a subject which has been long before the Senate; and I think the Senator from South Carolina has not yet turned his attention to it, or he would not object to it. The bill has been as thoroughly investigated in both Houses of Congress as any other which has been before them for a number of years. I presume the Senate are prepared to vote upon it; and I should hope very much that we might now get a vote upon it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The amendments of the committee were to insert the names of William T. G. Morton, Charles T. Jackson, and Horace Wells, as the probable discoverers; and to fill a blank in the bill, relative to the amount to be paid, with $100,000.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, recites that a discovery has been made, and is now in practice, whereby the human body can be rendered safely insensible to pain in dental, surgical, and obstetrical operations. by the use of what are commonly called anæsthetic agents, and the Government of the United States has been and is in the enjoyment of the discovery, in the military and naval service; and that it is believed that the discovery was made by some one of the following persons: William T. G. Morton, Charles T. Jackson, each of Boston, and Horace Wells, of Hartford, deceased; but it does not appear, to the satisfaction of Congress, which of those parties was the original, true, and first discoverer thereof; and as Congress is willing to provide a recompense for such discovery when ascertained, it proposes to appropriate $100,000, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury as a recompense for the discovery, and the use and benefit thereof by the Government and people of the United States.

It is to be the duty of the district attorney of the United States for the northern district of New York, within a reasonable time after the passage of the bill, to file in the circuit court of the United States for that district, sitting in equity, a bill of interpleader, wherein, reciting the act, or its substance, the Secretary of the Treasury, as trustee of the sum appropriated, shall be complainant, and William T. G. Morton, Charles T. Jackson, and the personal representative or representatives of Horace Wells, and any other person or persons who may make application to the court for that purpose, shall be defendants; of which bill those parties shall take notice, and may appear, and answer, and make proofs; and the circuit court is to have jurisdiction of the case, and it is to be tried according to the practice of the court, in equity cases; and the issue is to be, which one of the parties named was the original, true, and first discoverer of the discovery; and by final decree in such case, the court is to decide that issue, and direct that the sum of $100,000, without any costs, to be paid over to the party who shall be found to have been such discoverer, or to his personal representative or representatives or assignee. But if one or more of the defendants shall conceive himself or themselves to be aggrieved by the decree, he or they may, within twenty days after the making of the decree, appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the payment of the sum shall be suspended until final disposition be made of the case by that court; and if it shall appear that either of the defendants holds a patent for the discovery, or the means of applying it, which, in the judgment of the circuit court, is valid, it is to be the duty of that court to certify the fact to the Secretary, who is thereupon to withhold from that defendant the sum appropriated, should it be decreed to him by the final decree, until he shall have executed, under his hand and seal, an instrument in writing surrendering the patent, and granting the free use of the discovery, and the means of using or applying it, to the Government and people of the United States; which instrument shall be lodged in the Patent Office, and entered on the records thereof. Before the sum of $100,000 shall be paid to either of the parties named, he is to make oath in due form of law that he has not been guilty of collusion with either of the other parties named, in any way whatever.

Mr. EVERETT. I wish to move a further amendment, in the second section, to strike out the words "or assignee," in the provision directing the payment of the amount to the discoverer, or to his personal representatives or assignee. In the early stage of this discovery, when two of the persons named, Dr. Morton and Dr. Jackson, were in connection with each other as partners, Dr. Jackson made an assignment of his interest in it to Dr. Morton, for a small consideration. The state of things is now entirely changed; the relations of the parties to the subject and to each other are changed; and neither of them wishes to take any advantage, or to make any use of the assignment; and at the joint suggestion and request of both of them, I am desirous that the bill shall be so amended as to strike out these words, in order that when a decision is made by the Supreme Court, the benefit shall accrue to the individual who shall be adjudged to be the discoverer, and that this old assignment, which was made in a very early stage of the history of the discovery, and which does not apply at all to the existing state of the case, shall not interfere with the decision which the court may make. I move the amendment at the request of both the parties principally interested, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWSON. I regret that I failed this morning to bring up some papers connected with this subject. I wish now to ask that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until tomorrow, in order that I may produce those papers. I have in my possession a letter from Dr. Jackson, and one from Dr. Long, of Athens, in the State of Georgia, on this subject. Dr. Long is a very young man, but he commenced his practice as early, I think, as the year 1843, and has, therefore, been over ten years in the profession. The evidence which I have will, I think, establish the fact beyond controversy, that this young man applied this discovery in the same form in which it is said to have been applied by one of the three individuals mentioned. I have forgotten his given name, or I would propose to insert it in the proper place.

Mr. EVERETT. It is provided for by the general provision allowing all persons to come in.

Mr. DAWSON. I know that, but I wish Dr. Long to stand among the four named in the bill as one of the individuals who, in all probability, made the first discovery. Perhaps it would be sufficient to put in "Dr. Long, of Athens, Georgia."

Mr. WALKER. I will state to the Senator from Georgia that I heard of this gentleman, and procured of Mr. HILLYER, of the House of Representatives, his name, and I thought I had it in my pocket, but I have lost it. The terms of the bill, however, are broad enough to embrace him.

Mr. DAWSON. But I wish to have him distinctly mentioned in both sections. I move, therefore, to insert the name of "Dr. Long, of Athens, Georgia," in every place in the bill, where the names of Dr. Jackson and Dr. Morton occur.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. I desire either to make a similar amendment, or to ask that the bill shall be laid over until tomorrow. I have no doubt myself that another gentleman than any of those who have been named, is the discoverer of this remedial agent, whatever it may be. I am satisfied that I can show to the Senate, beyond a doubt, that Doctor Samuel Guthrie, of New York, made this discovery as early as 1831. He is now dead, but his heirs are living; and they have had a correspondence with me this winter on the subject. I have their letter, and the references which they make to authorities acknowledging him to be the discoverer; and this acknowledgment is from New England. I ask then that "the heirs of Doctor Samuel Guthrie, of New York," shall be inserted in the proper place.

Mr. EVERETT. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts an amendment, which I think ought to be appended to this bill, to carry out its objects. The latter part provides, that if it shall appear that any of these persons claiming the discovery has a patent, and if the court shall decree the sum appropriated to belong to him, it shall not be paid to him until he surrenders his patent. It will be seen, therefore, that this bill proposes to try the validity of his patent; and, as a matter of course, if the court should determine to pay this money to any other person, it would determine the question of priority of discovery—the very foundation of the patent. Hence, I submit that the bill should further provide, that if the decree should be in favor of any other person than the patentee, the patent should be thereby annulled.

Mr. EVERETT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. STUART. Then I move to amend the bill by adding:

Provided, further, That if the decree shall be in favor of any party other than the one holding a patent for the said discovery, it shall be the duty of the said court to decree further, that any patent so held by any party to the proceedings shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. It has just been suggested to me that Dr. J. G. Dickinson claims to have made this discovery; I move, therefore, to amend the bill by inserting his name.

Mr. EVERETT. I have no objection to that, though there is a general clause which covers all the claimants.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT. The question is, "Shall the bill be engrossed, and read a third time?"

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I do not know much of the merits of the alleged discovery, but I cannot for my life see any earthly jurisdiction in the Senate either to pass upon its merits, or to compensate the alleged discoverer. I recollect a discussion which took place upon it heretofore, when some gentlemen entertained different opinions from those which I entertain; but I should regret that it should pass into a precedent, without its appearing upon the record how the vote stood; I trust, therefore, that the Senate will indulge me with the yeas and nays upon the engrossment of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Since the yeas and nays are to be called upon this proposition, and I am to be required to record my name, as I shall do, in favor of the passage of the bill, I wish to say, in a single word, why I do so. That the Government has the right to pay for the use of patents, or for the use of things which have been patented under the authority of law, is established, as far as we can establish it, by precedent; and I risk nothing in saying, that in more than fifty cases has the Government paid for the use of patents. We paid Mr. Colt, Dr. Maynard, of this city, and various others, for the use of patents. There are many such cases, which I have not now in my mind, but which can be established by reference to the records.

In this case, after a careful investigation of all the facts in reference to it, I state it to be true, that the Government has for years used this patent without paying to the patentee one solitary sixpence. In all your hospitals, on board of all your men-of-war, habitually during the late war with Mexico, and wherever your Army and your Navy surgeons are located, this discovery has been used without the Government paying or pretending to pay, in any manner, shape, or form, anything to the patentee. That being true, I hold, that according to precedent, you are bound to pay, and by the facts of this particular case, you are especially bound to compensate the patentee for the use of his discovery.

That the importance of the discovery may be known, as it stands in my mind, I will simply remark that for more than two thousand years the world has been in search of this discovery. At last it has been made. It is the most important boon, I think, which has been given to mankind for many centuries. When the Government has taken possession of it, and is using it without pay, without compensation, and without acknowledgment to the patentee, its acknowledged discoverer, I think we ought to pay for it. I do not desire to detain the Senate. I rose merely to put upon the record some justification of the vote which I intend to give.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, resulted—yeas 24, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bright, Brown, Chase, Cooper, Everett, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Aitchison, Brodhead, Clay, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Mason, Rusk, Shedd, and Stuart—13.

The bill was then read a third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the House bill "to grant a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers."

Mr. WADE. I move to amend the bill in the sixth section, by striking out after the word "individual" to the word "and." The words proposed to be stricken out are, "a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and." The object of my amendment is to strike out the limitation which restricts the benefits of the bill to persons who are now residents of the United States, and prevents its operating in favor of those who may come into the country after its passage. I can see no good reason for the distinction now made in the bill.

I am willing that foreigners who come into this country, and go on to the public lands and settle there and labor for five years, should then have the advantages of this law. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, that the law shall operate as an inducement for such persons to come here and settle our public lands. The effect of the amendment will be barely to strike out this restriction, and to make the bill operate in favor of all foreigners who may come in hereafter, as well as those who are now here. That is the only object of the amendment.

Mr. WALKER. Will not the effect of that amendment, in this connection, be to confine the benefits of the bill entirely to foreigners?

Mr. WADE. No, sir; the first section provides for all who are now residents of the United States. They are provided for without this section, and this amendment will only strike out the limitation to which I have referred. Let the section be read as it will stand if amended, so as to ascertain whether I am right or not.

The PRESIDENT. The section, if amended as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Ohio, reads:

"If any individual now not a citizen of the United States, but at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native-born citizen of the United States."

Mr. ADAMS. I cannot, Mr. President, vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. Since I have had the honor of a seat here, I have been very anxious for the passage of a bill to reduce the price of the public lands. My own opinion is, that a proper graduation of the price of the public lands, so as to dispose of them at their intrinsic value, will be worth a great deal more to the country than what is known as the homestead bill. I am opposed to the principle of this bill which, disguise it as you may, is at last but taxing one portion of the people for the benefit of another; taking money out of the pockets of a portion of the people, and placing it in the pockets of others by legislation. However meritorious, and however deeply my sympathies may be excited in favor of the necessities of the poor, I consider this bill a violation of principle, a principle which I look upon as almost vitally important to the legislation of this country.

But, sir, the proposition of the Senator from Ohio is, that you shall not only tax one portion of the people for the benefit of another, but that you shall tax the native born and adopted citizens of this country for the benefit of foreigners; that you shall say, by this bill, to every man who may reside without the limits of the United States, if he will come here, that your citizens shall be taxed to the value of one hundred and sixty acres, and a bounty of that amount of land bestowed upon him. To that I am opposed.

I have no hostility against foreigners. My friend from Iowa, the other day, on a collateral issue, on a question which came before the Senate, remarked that I had deserted him, and those who act with him, on this bill. Sir, I am not conscious that I have ever favored the bill, or the principle of the bill; therefore, I am not a deserter from it. I think, if we will cast our eyes around us, we shall see that the time has passed when it is necessary to hold out inducements to individuals to emigrate to this country. My friend from Iowa said he hoped the time would never arrive when the people of this country would cease to remember with sentiments of gratitude, the claims of the descendants of the Lafayettees and Montgomeries, and others who aided our fathers in the Revolution. I hope so too; but times have changed. The time has ceased, in my humble judgment, when we should continue to hold out other and different inducements to individuals to immigrate and become citizens of this country, than are afforded by the character of our institutions. I would not change the policy of this Government, and refuse to hold out inducements such as we have heretofore held out to foreigners. I desire to see this country continue to be a home and an asylum for the oppressed of all nations. I desire, whenever a foreigner sets his foot upon our soil, to have thrown over him the panoply of our free institutions, to protect him in his person, his property, in the pursuit of happiness, and an unbounded liberty of conscience; and with that, from this day forth, I will stop. To every man who has come here under existing laws, I would extend all the rights which our present laws promise him; and to every man who comes to this country in the future, with the rights I have indicated, I would cease to offer more.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 60.

Have you not seen, sir, within the last few months, petitions presented here and laid upon your table, remonstrating, in the name of foreigners, against the action of this body? Not content with that, have you not learned through the public newspapers, that a mob of foreigners, under the style of foreigners, assembled together, and hanged in effigy an honorable member of this body? What does that indicate? If the act indicates anything, or has any significance, it is that, in the estimation of those men, the individual referred to, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] ought to be hung by the neck until he is dead; and for what, sir? For doing his duty to the Constitution, to his oath, and to his country. I ask Senators, if they do not see indications in this of a combination in retaining the notions of the olden country, which shows that it is necessary, not that we should check it by legislation—I do not propose that at the present time—but that we should cease to hold out any further inducements. What do we need of further immigration from other countries? We have a sufficient population to protect ourselves against all the world. We have a sufficient population to settle every portion of our country which it is necessary to settle. For the purpose of a free and happy Government, we have a sufficient population, and I think we should not adopt the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and thereby tax native born and adopted citizens to purchase one hundred and sixty acres of land for those who may think proper to come here hereafter. My friend from Iowa, a few days ago, manifested his great anxiety for these foreigners. Well, sir, when I remembered that that Senator, by his speech and his vote here, had done the very same thing that the chairman of the Committee on Territories had done, I supposed that the hanging of the chairman in effigy, signified that they believed that my friend from Iowa, also ought to be hung for discharging his duty upon this floor fearlessly, impartially, and manfully, as he always does. Sir, when I saw what they had done, and the disgrace which they had attempted to heap upon that Senator, I thought he might well have used language which was used in olden times. A certain individual went to Absalom, who had usurped the throne of his father, and proposed to serve him. Absalom remembered the many favors which his father had conferred upon this individual, and he turned to him, and in place of accepting cordially his proposed services, said: "Is this thy kindness to thy friend?" I think my friend from Iowa, when he was battling here for the rights of these foreigners, might well have turned as Absalom did, and said, when they, by their conduct, declared to the world that he ought to be hung for discharging his duty here: "Is this thy kindness to thy friends?"

Sir, the time has come, if combinations are formed, if separate distinctions are kept up by those who think proper to adopt this as their country, when we should at least cease to tax our own citizens for their benefit. These circumstances may not weigh with others; with me they have their influence. But I am opposed to the bill upon principle. You may reduce the price of the land as low as you please, so as to restore to the Treasury the cost of it; but to tax one portion of the people for the benefit of another, is a thing to which, to my knowledge, I have not consented; nor will I ever consent to such a proposition.

Mr. President, I hope I will not be considered unkind or unfriendly to foreigners. I showed my regard for them during the present session, when they were denounced in this body for alleged mob in the Bedini affair. I was the first Senator to furnish an apology for what seemed to be (from the reports in the papers) a breach of the peace, and that hospitality to the stranger for which our countrymen are so justly distinguished. I thought, and then said, in substance, that some allowance was to be made for those who had participated in the meetings referred to; that they had suffered from the oppressions of the Pope; that many of them had come from a country where the name of the Pope's Nuncio was synonymous with tyranny, the stake, and martyrdom for conscience sake; it was not, therefore, strange, when they heard that name in this country of unbounded liberty, that they should have committed some excesses in manifesting their disapprobation of the part he was supposed to have taken in the oppressions of their countrymen. I repeat, sir, that I am not opposed to foreigners, but have briefly stated my opinions as to the true future policy of this Government.

I will not consume the time of the Senate by going into details as to what will be the effect of this bill if it should become a law. I will say, however, that I had the honor of making a few remarks upon a graduation bill, and upon this subject, at the last session of Congress. Since that time, I have mingled with my constituents, and conversed with them freely upon this subject, and I have found but one man in the State of Mississippi, with whom I conversed, who did not express a preference for the graduation bill to the homestead bill. For what reason? By the homestead bill you give a man one hundred and sixty acres, upon condition that he will remain upon it five years. Men feel, and every freeman must feel, that you are making him a pauper upon this Government by doing so. Men would prefer paying twelve and a half cents, twenty-five, or fifty cents an acre, according to the intrinsic value of the land, with the liberty of selling it when they think proper. They would greatly prefer that; and I tell you that the man does not understand the people, who supposes that they prefer having lands given them to their buying them, and giving for them their intrinsic value.

I know that holding up all the lands at $1 25 per acre, charging for poor and valueless lands the same price that you charge for the most valuable and rich lands, has created, and justly so, a prejudice against the present system; but graduate the lands according to their value, and public opinion will be very different from what it is now. I say that the people prefer paying a reasonable compensation for their land, and thus be independent freemen, feeling that they have purchased their own homes, and that they are not paupers upon the Federal Government, to having it given to them, and requiring them to remain upon it for five years; which is a sort of penance, a kind of penitentiary, that does not suit the genius of the people of this country at all. They prefer being free, having lands of their own, being at liberty to sell them whenever they please, and for whatever they may be able to obtain for them. I say, sir, that, according to my humble judgment, ninety-nine out of one hundred of the landholding States will greatly prefer a graduation system to this homestead bill, as it is called.

Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of entering into anything like a general argument on this question; but as this homestead bill has created some interest in the country, and as I have heard, upon various occasions, its paternity claimed, I think it due to the dead, as I have the floor on this occasion, to say that the father of the principle of this bill was the late Felix G. McConnell. My friend from Indiana [Mr. PETTIT] will remember, that when we were in the House of Representatives, the first that was ever heard of such a bill in the Congress of the United States, so far as I know, was on the proposition of General McConnell. He offered it upon every occasion, in season and out of season. His amendment was this, "that one hundred and sixty acres of the public domain is hereby appropriated to every head of a family, man, maid, and widow." He was the father of the bill, so far as I know; and if credit is due to any one, it is due to his memory. I do not know that I should have alluded to the fact, but still, as I have heard others claimed as the authors of it, I thought I would state it, though I do not think that the bill is right in principle, or that any credit will result to any one from it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The first section of the bill grants to every man who is a citizen of the United States, or who shall hereafter become a citizen of the United States, who is the head of a family, or twenty-one years of age, one hundred and sixty acres of land, without paying for it, after five years' residence and occupation. The sixth section authorizes any resident of a State or Territory, who is not now a citizen of the United States, also to make a like application, and take one hundred and sixty acres. If I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, it is, that hereafter citizenship shall be no prerequisite to the making of the claim, nor shall residence in a State or Territory be a prerequisite; but that, on the actual filing of a declaration by a foreigner from any portion of the world, when he comes here, of his intention to become naturalized, he shall also be enabled, without pay, free of cost, to take and occupy one hundred and sixty acres of the public land. Am I right in reference to my understanding of your amendment?

Mr. WADE. They must live five years on it. Mr. THOMPSON. That is true. They must live five years on it. Now, in reference to the amendment as well as to the bill, I desire, although I am not prepared as I wished to be, to say some few things.

A few days since, at the other end of this Capitol, when it was proposed to donate to the different States land for the purpose of taking care of the needy citizens of this country, who, by the visitation of Heaven are insane, and are incapable of taking care of themselves, it was reported upon adversely, as being against the Constitution of the United States. When it was proposed that our own citizens, the insane, the pauper, and the necessities, who need this aid, should have such a grant made for their benefit, we were told that it could not be done under the Constitution of the United States. Such a donation to States for the purpose of taking care of the insane, we were told was unconstitutional; but now the Senator from Ohio offers a proposition which, if it be adopted and carried into effect, will enable us to give to every criminal, every fugitive from justice, every vagabond, and every pauper from Europe, and from every portion of the world, who lands on our shores, that which we deny to our own citizens who, under the visitation of God, need it, of whom we ought to take care, and to whom we are bound by ties different from any which unite us to foreigners.

Mr. President, I had intended, when I heard this measure spoken of as one of justice and propriety, to move its commitment to the Committee on the Judiciary, that they might lick it into shape before we were compelled to vote upon it; for, in its operation, it should be equal, equitable, right, and just. There should be no class legislation as is now proposed—no class legislation in favor of foreigners. In our legislation we should begin with our own people at home. But if you give land to the landless, why not amend the bill, and give money to the moneyless? One man needs land, but another needs money. Amend the bill then, and give $200 to each of those who are out of change; to those who need money. And in addition, Mr. President, make some provision for mechanics, professional men, merchants, in short for that large class of people who are not agriculturists. If it is intended as a donation, as a bonus, equity and justice require that you should likewise give to other vocations and professions, to artisans, mechanics, and merchants, the bonus, the donation, the largess, the pauper's gift, or whatever you choose to denominate it. As in the one case you give land, in the other you should give money, and make no such discrimination as is proposed by this bill. Let there be equality. If you claim that, under the Constitution of the United States, in making rules and regulations in reference to the territory of the Union, doing no injustice to the respective States, you have a right so to donate the lands, donate them with no invidious discrimination; make no unequal distinction; donate to those who are not able to bear the toil, and burden, and hardships of frontier life—your old men, your cripples, your widows, your workmen, your mechanics, and people of that description, outside of agricultural interests—in money, what you donate in land to those who are agriculturists.

Mr. President, I have said that I thought this bill should be committed to the Committee on the Judiciary; I think it should go there for several reasons. I have heard it said that so far as the public domain is concerned, at least so much of it as we owned anterior to the Mexican war, we had pledged it for money to prosecute that war. I ask, then, as a legal question, can you take this property, which is thus under mortgage and lien, and give it away? I ask, too, as a question of morals, whether you should give it away when it is bound and pledged for the payment of your debts? Are you to neglect this private claim, and say now to strangers, and foreigners, to aliens in blood and in language, that they may have it? Ought it not to be held as a sacred treasure to redeem your plighted honor, to pay the debt which you incurred in the prosecution of that war?

But further, Mr. President, this bill is offering a bonus and a premium to those men in Europe, who are unwilling to remain there, under the hazards of the approaching war, to emigrate to this country. It tells those men, who, because they do not wish to stand by their king or country, or who, from want of patriotism, or from a deep feeling of cowardice, will not stay there to fight for republican interests, and stand by their own country, "if you become renegades from your country, in trying to escape the dangers of war which threaten there, and if you will flee to the United States, and make a declaration of intention, we will set you up with a nice little farm of one hundred and sixty acres of land. You can settle on it, and live there, whether you left your country for your country's good, or escaped from it because you happened to be a liberal, although unwilling to fight for liberal institutions." Are you, sir, to offer them this bonus? And what else do you hold out? Why, you tell all your own citizens, your lazy, trifling men, that have never made $200, and would not work for it, fellows of a bad stock, whose ancestors were as lazy and improvident as themselves—a bad breed in the beginning—"we will shield you with a sort of bankrupt law; we will give you, you trifling lazy pauper rascals, if you will go out there, one hundred and sixty acres of land, and neither constable nor sheriff shall take it for debt; you are of no account, you may keep it, you shall be bankrupts as to all previous debts." [Laughter.] And that, sir, you offer as a premium to loafism and laziness; and a nice set you will have when you get them there, with vagabonds and vagrants from Europe, to build up a new State, and a new community.

But, Mr. President, if you intend to give one hundred and sixty acres of land to men of this description, I ask you if it will not be an act of great injustice to all who have bought public lands heretofore; and ought not the Judiciary Committee to introduce a provision to pay back to all those from whom you have wrung $1 25 per acre for the land which they have purchased? Ought you not to refund what they have paid? They were our own hardy pioneers, kith and kin to us, bone of our bone, our brethren, hardy men, and Indian fighters. They have paid for their land, and whipped out the Indians; they have possession of the country; but if you are going to send out to these lands all the offscourings of foreign countries, in the name of justice and common sense, pay back to all the men who have bought public lands their $1 25 an acre, with interest upon it. It is a just claim, and those men are worthy of it. Introduce such a provision, and we shall very soon sweep away the twenty odd million of dollars which are now in the Treasury. But, as a matter of justice, if you pass this bill, do it.

This bill proposes a radical change in our system of public lands. Nothing of the kind has ever been sanctioned under the action of the Government. It is a premature, radical, revolutionary proposition to waste away the public inheritance, and give it to ragamuffins coming from all parts of creation, [laughter,] congregating here as buzzards do around the carcass to eat it up. Such is the proposition which we have before us.

I ask you, sir, has any President ever recommended such a thing? Has the present President of the United States recommended it? Did President Polk recommend it? Did President Taylor recommend it? Not at all. Did Jackson or Jefferson recommend it? Did Washington or Adams? Take them, Federalists or Republicans, Whigs or Democrats, where is the President of the United States, who has ever recommended such a policy, or has ever given his name to such a proposition for the public plunder, and dissipation of the public treasure? Has any President ever had the audacity or fortitude to come to the American people, and recommend such a disposition of this rich inheritance, which we have had bequeathed to us, which we have looked to as a home and a homestead for our children, and our children's children—not for strangers, but for us and for our families? Has any President, of any party, of any stripe, of any faith, ever recommended it? However weak in power, however abandoned by his party, however abused, has any man ever done it? No, sir, no man ever thought of it, no man ever alluded to it. Why, sir, General Jackson, I believe, in his message of 1829, thought that, under the articles of cession, the land rather belonged to the States, and ought to go that way. It is true that he afterwards strangled the land proceeds distribution bill, when he found that the child was to be called after Henry Clay, and named as one of his brood and generation. But from Jackson down to the present period, has any Administration ever put its credit and character upon the recommendation of a plan of this sort? No, sir.

Mr. President, in reference to this subject, I will ask gentlemen if it would not be tolerably prudent, considering the way in which we stand about matters of this sort, to take it a little more deliberately, and a little more considerably? We know that at this time there is over the continent of Europe an impending struggle and contention, the like of which perhaps has not transpired before in the times of civilization. We want this land fund. We want it as a matter of finance; we want it as a fund to build up a navy; we need it for our own purposes; we need it for our own people; and just at this juncture, and at this time, up comes a proposition that to every man who is twenty-one years of age, married or unmarried, to every foreigner now resident in any State or Territory, and to every foreigner who will congregate on our shores from the difficulties of Europe, we shall give this land, instead of holding it as a fund to protect ourselves, to build up a navy, establish an army, and use it in time of need for war purposes. You are told that with a profusion, and with a profligacy, and without reference to economy or a prudent judgment or sense, that it is to be all drifted off to that population which is coming from the troubles of Europe to our shores.

The bill, Mr. President, is to me singular in many of its aspects; and I hope I shall not be out of order in alluding to the action of the other House. They passed this bill a short time ago, giving away, so far as it will be settled, the whole of the public domain to the first occupant, or the first comer, whoever he may be. Since that time they have passed a bill graduating the price of the public lands. It looks to me as if there was a sort of demagoguery over the land, and that the House, in reference to this subject, was acting thus because, when the next August election comes round, they do not want to make any explanation to the whisky boys of the country when they wish to be returned to Congress. [Laughter.] They seem to pass the bill as if they thought the Senate would have steadiness and sense enough to reject it. [Laughter.] They pass this bill, and then one for graduating the price of the public lands, and then bills for railroad purposes; and they are proceeding as if the whole of it was a solemn farce, with the hope that no explanation was to be made in reference to it at all. I hope that we shall not disappoint them. They voted for the homestead bill; they voted for the graduation bill; still, they are going on, voting for railroad bills as if nothing had ever happened in any shape whatever in the world. [Laughter.]

about the Pacific railroad; and, in fact, I admire his enthusiasm upon that subject, however much I think that it is a wild and Utopian project; however much I reflect that in making it you will have to carry it through deserts, where there is neither wood nor water, and over mountains and snows, many feet deep, over a vast continent; however impracticable I may think it, and although I think that it will cost the Union, if it is ever made, as much as it cost Napoleon to march his grand army to Moscow; still, if, in the prospect of things, we are to have the Pacific railroad, and if, by the mere extension of territory, we are becoming as weak as a rope of sand; if, as is said by the poet, Roma ruit suis viribus; if, by the mere extension of territory, we are becoming like a rickety hog-head, which must be bound together; and if we need this Pacific railroad to bind us together, for the Lord's sake keep this land. Do not touch the people of South Carolina, of Kentucky, and other portions of the country, to get the means to build it. If you are to have these emigrants, catch them as you catch the Irish and Germans, and keep them at work until they make the road to the Pacific; but give them land and no money. That is my opinion about it. A nice chance you have to build a road there; it will cost the Lord knows how many millions of dollars, for I would be afraid to calculate it. But if you are ever to have a road, do not give away the only fund upon which you can rely for the making of it; and if you bring these emigrants in, let them work for what they get; do not make them a present of it. [Laughter.]

I suppose, Mr. President, that according to the notion of progress, and the bellicose propensity of our people, we must acquire territory—for a fuss they will eternally and everlastingly have. You can hardly keep old-fashioned Whigs now in the traces, for they want to annex Canada, and get another State or two from Mexico; war, or some little fight, they must have; for the whole Union, in reference to that, seems to be like Simon Wild-fire; if they do not have a fight they would spoil about the breast and shoulders merely for the want of it. [Laughter.] But, sir, if you are to go on in acquisition, keep the territory to pension the old soldiers with, as you have done heretofore. Go with my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. EVANS,] and pay off the claims which you owe to the old revolutionary fathers and their descendants; pay off what you owe to the men who fought in the war of 1812; pay those who fought in Mexico, and keep a little back for future fighting. Do not dispose of it all in the way you now propose; we shall want it, because—I suppose it is a sort of North American sentiment—there is no people in the world who respond to the call of liberty as readily as ours do. Send a fellow to Texas and Mexico to fight, but keep a little land to let him know that when he has done fighting he will have a home to come to. Do not give it all to foreign adventurers who come here merely as criminals or from cowardice. Do not give it to those who come here on such accounts; not because they love America, but because they can here impose upon American hospitality and generosity.

I have not had an opportunity to prepare the statistics which I should like to have before me in reference to this bill, and I therefore cannot go at length into it now. But if some older and abler Senator does not argue it before the discussion on it terminates, I will prepare myself to make a speech in reference to this amendment, and about the bill generally. I wish to deliver my own opinions. What is now proposed? They say, for instance, to the Senator from Massachusetts, who comes from one of the old States of this Union, We are going to give this land all away. It is true, under the cessions that were made by the original thirteen States, it was held for the benefit of all the States. I will not now go into a discussion of the questions about tenancy in common, or joint tenancy; but I ask the Senator from the State of Massachusetts, knowing the effect of this pauper population as you have it now crowded in the poor-houses and in the lazar-houses of every description in Massachusetts, when they tell you it is true that the old thirteen fellows fought through the revolutionary war, and are entitled to this land, and own it, and although we have a sort of half-way, lively recollection of Concord, and Lexington, and Bunker Hill, where your fathers fought for the land, still, we will give it to these foreigners, will you, I ask the Senator, agree to it? Although there are a few things in reference to niggers, and other matters, and various Yankee and Puritan notions that do not exactly come up to our notions down South, still we have a lingering affection, and are willing to do your State of Massachusetts justice. Out of the granite and ice you make fortunes; with your invention and education you are progressing in the world; and you stand, a noble Puritan population, obstinate and perverse though you may have been with the English Government before you landed here, and against it afterwards, and pretty generally against your own Government—[laughter]—still, in reference to a matter of equity and justice, I will ask you what you will say when a man turns round and tells you that the old States of Massachusetts and Connecticut are not to get any of this land; that he wants to take it from you, and that you shall not have it, either for schools, or insane, or paupers, or for anything else; that it shall be snatched away from you, and given to some Hessian that butchered your ancestors in the revolutionary war; that it shall be given to some man who then was in the army of our enemies; that it shall be handed over to some German, with his broad figure, which it would take three generations to lick into the shape of an American gentleman? [Laughter.] A nice proposition, that is; and yet that is the proposition made by the Senator from Ohio. The old thirteen States are to get nothing. Whatever we may claim, we are to have nothing. The Senator's proposition not only comes up to that, but it turns round and says, in reference to Nebraska and the Missouri compromise, to southern Senators, not only are the old thirteen States to be deprived of their rights, but we will let these Irish, and Dutch, and anybody you please—I do not speak in disrespectful terms—come into the territory, and, if you want to go anywhere from Virginia, or Louisiana, or Texas, you must stand back and let them take the land. Is there a southern man, who has a regard for his constituency, or the interest of the section which he represents, who intends—as he knows it is a foregone conclusion that this is all to be free-soil territory—to let them take it, and let them snatch it away from them, and say that men from the South are not to go into it, because they are tainted with a nigger? Are we to be told that we must stand back, and let strangers, and aliens in blood, in feeling, and language, have it? But I do not know what southern Senators, or Senators from the old States, may think in reference to this sort of thing, because they have got recently to arguing about matters in such a way that a man scarcely knows, unless he examines closely, what they really design.

The Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PETTIT,] for whom I entertain a very high regard, yesterday said, that this bill approved itself to his heart and his head. I can easily see how, he being a liberal man, such a thing would approve itself to his heart. He is a man of large head, a man of a great deal of faculty; but I rather think that his heart has got the better of his judgment in this case. In support of the proposition, he set out to prove, historically, that this was a right policy. He alluded, I believe, to the Assyrians, and the Jews, and the Spartans, and he came down to the Gracchi, but being a Democrat, in this age of progress, he never could cite an instance that had occurred this side the discovery of America, or since the birth of our Saviour. [Laughter.] In talking about this liberality, I want you just to look at the question, and ask yourselves how this territory stands; for it is well enough to look to it in that way. When the territory, under the oppression of a system which will restrict slavery from going there, comes to be settled, how will it stand, and how do we stand? We stand as a powerful and a great nation. I know—at least there are newspaper rumors, and I suppose I may speak legitimately of newspaper rumors—we propose to buy an immense territory in addition to our present territory. For what do you buy that territory? Are you to pay $5,000,000 or $20,000,000, and as soon as you get it are you to give it away? Are you to adopt such a policy in the disposition of the lands which you obtain, I may say, by violent solicitation; that is to say, by whipping and flogging the Indians, by browbeating the Mexicans, until you whip them into a peace, and as a salvo to the conscience, get what territory you can? Are you, not only in reference to the poor red man, who is fading away before the face of the white man as the snow melts before the face of the sun, but in reference to the neighboring Republic, are you, by bullying and browbeating, to obtain territory, and when you have obtained it, are you to turn round and say that you will give it to these foreigners and emigrants, who come here, and to lazy fellows and loafers, in our midst? I ask, in the name of common sense, is that what the Government is to do; and then, after the General Government has done that, and you come to make a distribution of the spoils, is one half of the nation to turn round and say to the other half, you smell of the nigger, and you shall not have any of the land; we will give it to the foreigners, and you shall not take a particle? And then, as to the old States and land States, although no President of the United States has ever recommended this, we will rob you of it, and give it to the foreigners, and then we will get up a German interest, having its center at Cincinnati and Louisville, and other places over the Union; and although you boast of being Anglo-Saxons, you shall be like that other Anglo-Saxon race, which has been for centuries ruled by half crazy Dutch Princes and Queens. We will have the same influence over you, with your Saxon influence and Saxon blood. We will build up a foreign power that shall control the whole American people. This we will do in the name of generosity and liberality, and in the name of our modern Democracy. This is what is to be done by a radical change in our policy.

I have some other things to say in regard to this bill; and probably, if I get a chance in the progress of its discussion, I shall go into it more fully; for I am not prepared to speak to-day upon some points to which I desire to address myself. It seems to me, since I have had the honor to come to the national councils, whether in this or the other House of Congress, the public lands have been banded about eternally as a bribe in the shape of cession and retrocession, in the shape of graduation and of distribution, and of every imaginable project. Thus ambitious men act with them, instead of standing up as the guardians of the public domain and public treasury, doing what they ought to do. Millions upon millions of acres of lands have gone for railroads and canals in the way of grants of alternate sections and swamp lands; and the advocacy of such appropriations has eternally been predicated upon the ambition of some presidential aspirant. It is useless to discuss it. It is useless to talk about it. If there had been a provision in the Constitution of the United States that men standing on this floor, or on the floor of the other House, should be forever debarred thereafter from looking to the other end of the avenue, such propositions would never have been made. Members of Congress would have husbanded the lands as old fellows take care of their lands as their sons and daughters grow up, for the purpose of giving the young fellows a home, and a place to emigrate to. Thus, instead of looking to the other end of the avenue, and making such propositions, they would have held on to these lands as an inheritance to our children, and our children's children, for ages to come. I do not know, sir, of any man in this body who looks to anything of that sort, [laughter;] but one thing I will say, I have scarcely ever seen a public man in this country who had once turned his eyes upon the purple, and gazed intently at the White House, that ever afterwards seemed to be fully a sane man. [Laughter.] His head reels as if he had the vertigo, and he puts up at auction whatever he thinks, if once defeated, would help him for the Presidency at a succeeding election; and that is the way in which the public domain has been controlled. Say what you will about it, all men feel it and know it.

Mr. President, I do not know that I exactly concur with him who said some years ago, in commenting upon this matter, that we never would have a first-rate man again as President; for, he said, that understrappers and understrickers would never let a man of prominent ability attain to the position; that no such man could ever come to the presidency of the nation, because the understrappers and seekers for office would be eternally for catching a man whom they could control. He thought we never would have a President of any size or account again. So far as that is concerned, the first thing that you see these presidential aspirants do—I am sorry to say it; I apply it to no party, or men—is to start out a demagoging; and, sir, he draws himself up; he is not an American at all; his father was an Irishman, and his mother a Dutchman. [Laughter.] That is the beginning of it. Then, though he has no respect for religion, no regard for things of that sort, supposing himself in his peculiar views to be in, the minority, and though he may be an infidel, and hate all religion, the next thing we hear he is making the sign of the cross, and muttering all sort of insensible jargon over the country to catch Catholics; [laughter;] and then, sir, to top off the thing, he offers all this land to these men, just as the wicked one of old offered to our Saviour the kingdoms of the world, if he would fall down and worship him, when the old scoundrel had not an inch of terra firma in all creation to put his foot upon. [Great laughter.]

Why, sir, every man understands this measure and knows what it means. It is the most hollow, perfidious, deceptive, cajoling thing in the world. It proposes to give our public land to these people, when it is pledged for the payment of the debt incurred by the Mexican war, and belongs to the States equally. It does not belong to politicians; but still some of them propose this largess or bribe, for such it is, and say, "Come in, all ye Dutch and Irish." Perhaps they may expect, in return, to hear: "We will make you Presidents."

Now, sir, I wish gentlemen to understand that I am not a Native American, in the political sense in which that word is used. I have a profound respect for the original policy which was inaugurated or installed at the origin of this Government in relation to foreigners. I believe that we now commonly use regal and imperial terms when speaking of a matter of policy; everything now-a-days, whether a principle or a measure, is "installed" or "inaugurated." I say, therefore, that I have a very great reverence for the original policy installed or inaugurated by the founders of our Government in relation to foreigners. I have no objection to allowing a foreigner to come here; I would extend to him the right hand of friendship; I would allow him to become a citizen, and, after sufficient residence, be eligible to office. I would encourage him and take him into the body-politic. Sir, if I had any doubt about the propriety of this policy, it would be removed by the appearance here of my honorable friend from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,] from the land of Emmet and other patriots—a land which has been crushed down by tyranny for a thousand years. It does good to the heart of a philanthropist and patriot to see a man of his integrity and character come here. But, sir, I adhere to the motto, Festina lente—do not hasten onwards too fast. There is a gentleman from Louisiana here, who, I suppose, may be considered as of the tribe of Benjamin. When one thinks of these men, he is apt to inquire, in the language of the poet:

"Where shall Israel lay her bleeding feet?
Where shall she find a resting-place?"

We are proud to answer that, under the folds of the stars and stripes, she shall find protection and succor; and to her children, as to others, shall be extended the rights of citizenship. Thus far I am willing to go; but I cannot agree that now, when there is about to be a great struggle in Europe, we shall invite men from the purlieus and faubourgs of Paris, from the outskirts and brothels of London, and from the civil and revolutionary wars of Italy and Hungary. I cannot consent that, upon a mere declaration of intention, each of them shall have a right to one hundred and sixty acres of our public land. Suppose such fellows should come here in large numbers, and go out to that land of flowers—Nebraska—a country beyond the State in which you live, Mr. President, and one of us should go there. If we went, we should find it a perfect Babel of confusion, where unknown and innumerable tongues were spoken. If a man of the Anglo-Saxon race should go among them, and they should find that he had not been in a riot anywhere in Italy, that he had not been compelled to run away from France, but that he was a peaceable American, they would probably say to him, "How did you come here, sir? Who did you murder in Tennessee, or in Kentucky, for which you ran away? Who did you swindle in

New York, or what did you steal in Ohio, that you have come out here into this Babel of confusion?" Sir, are these the people whom we should build up into a State in that far-off region, out of the ruined fortunes, the ransacked homes, and the broken hearts of the red men of the forest? Is this your philanthropy? I fear this is exactly what it will result in.

Mr. President, I have intimated that there may be some designs for the Presidency connected with this bill. Of course I would not intimate that any gentleman here thus seeks the Presidency. If any should, I would ask them to look at the last few instances which have happened, and, I think, they will find that they need not go out to the people on any great public measure in order to reach that station. For example, we had Mr. Polk, a very clever man, who is now dead. He reached the Presidency accidentally. I will say nothing further of him; for de mortuis nil nisi bonum. President Taylor next reached that station. He was a good soldier, a fine citizen, and a tolerable President.

A SENATOR. He did not know much. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMPSON. Not over much. [Renewed laughter.] Then Mr. Pierce got there. I know he is busy now. I do not mean to strike at him, because at this time I know, and the Presiding Officer of this body knows, that the greatest of his troubles is to decide a question, upon which I suppose he is very religiously and anxiously exercised; that is, in reference to the distribution of the spoils and plunder. He is engaged in deciding whether a fellow who came on the last platform, but who was wrong on the Buffalo platform, is or is not entitled to consideration in the distribution of offices; and the most politico-religious question which I have ever known, in my day, is the grave question now before the Administration of this country, whether the prodigal son came home before he was hungry, or, being half lean, came home because the old man had a good fat calf. [Laughter.] That is the grave question which they are considering at this time.

Well, sir, from these illustrations I would say to men of this description that they should take the thing very quietly; for, sir, no gentleman in the country is safe now. He does not know what day he may be snatched up and made a President before he thinks about it. I would say to gentlemen, therefore, that they had better avoid originating great measures which are wrong in themselves, but should stand by quietly, and somebody may be kind enough to invite them out for the Presidency one of these days. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, there is another consideration connected with this matter. I will not say anything about progress and young America, for some one might wish to contravene it; but I say that our climate, and the character of our soil and population, have engendered and inflamed in our people a wild, progressive, rabid notion. I do not know whether it is socialism from France, or whether it is Kossuthism from Hungary and Italy; but I say that, from the infusion of foreign material, or from the idiosyncracies of our own people, they have become so inflamed and so restive of power that if they were so concentrated in this country, and could make a revolution here as in France or in England, by getting possession of the capital, our inflammable, revolutionary, discontented, dissatisfied people would go far beyond filibusterism or anything of that sort, and would strike for the overthrow of the Government itself. It is a blessing that they are not so concentrated. I ask you, then, sir, for the sake of the safety and the perpetuity of this Union, to keep our public domain, not for foreigners, but as a safety-valve, as a means of escape to let off the wild, unrestrained spirits whom we have amongst us; to keep it as a place where, among Indians and buffaloes, and in the deep recesses of the mountains, and in reckless and perilous adventures, such men, intolerant of society, averse to toil, and opposed to labor, may go out and waste away that spirit which, if cramped up in a capital that controlled a nation, would subvert the institutions of the country. That, sir, with me is a grave consideration.

Sir, I trust that some older member of the body will give the Senate the statistics in regard to the value of our public domain. I am diffident to do so, because I am always averse to speaking. I trespass but seldom upon the attention of the Senate, and when I do so, it is only when I think duty requires it of me. I have ventured now to speak upon this subject, because I think deep injustice will be done to the old States by depriving them of their just share of the public domain. I believe further, that this measure will be injurious to the southern States. They do not want to have foreigners around their plantations, corrupting the people, injuring their children, and excluding them from a fair participation in the benefits of the common territory of the Union.

But, Mr. President, above all things, when you are about to vote this gratuity, remember the eternal principles of justice. Millions and millions of dollars have been paid by treaty in Indian annuities, and in extinguishing Indian titles; vast amounts of blood and treasure have been expended for the acquisition of our public domain. For the payment of the money thus spent you have taxed South Carolina and Maine, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, and all the other old States. Now, after the enormous expenditure at which these lands have been bought, it is proposed to give them to Hessians, and wild men from all parts of Europe! How will the people of the old States like it? Recollect, this bill will cut like a two-edged sword; it will depreciate the value of land in the old States, and at the same time it will diminish their population. The reason for this is obvious. People will not buy land in the old States when they can get better elsewhere for nothing. In this way, the men, by whose blood and treasure the public territory was acquired, will have it snatched from them; and that, too, not by receiving in return its original cost, but it will be followed by a great depreciation of the value of their property, and a diminution of their business and population.

There are some other matters to which I do not now wish to allude, but to which I may probably refer before the bill shall be finally disposed of, if I get an opportunity. In regard to the policy of it, I am almost constrained to say that, rather than see located on the western borders of Missouri a people aliens and strangers to us in blood, aliens and strangers to us in language, as confused in language as were those who were endeavoring to build the tower of Babel; people who do not love us, people of a bad stock, (for the vagabond, the pauper, and the refugee from Europe, or from our old States, are those who are to receive this gratuity;) rather than see such a confusion of tongues, such a ring-streaked and speckled set put up in our far off territory, as a sort of imperium in imperio to hold the balance of power and control this Union, I would wish it destroyed like Sodom and Gomorrah, and lost to the Union forever; for we had better have no public land than have such neighbors.

Again; when the Senate come to consider this question, I wish them to bear in mind that there are now great troubles in Europe, and that, according to recent calculations, it would cost from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, to make our navy equal to that of Great Britain, to say nothing of the navy of France. Suppose three or four belligerent Powers of Europe should unite to send a fleet against us; they could bombard and burn down New York, come up the Chesapeake and Potomac, and take this Federal City, lie off in the Chesapeake Bay destroying property, blockade California, and cut us off from all communication with her, except by the tedious overland route, and not feel the absence of that portion of their navy which would be required for these objects. In this perilous, in this helpless condition, looking to these emergencies, knowing the need of our naval and commercial marine in a proper situation for defense; knowing the importance and value of the property which we have afloat upon the ocean, for the protection of which our navy is necessary; I ask you, in a time of peace, if we ought not to be prepared for a time of war, and for emergencies such as may possibly arise? Let us not act like a drunken boy who wastes away his inheritance by throwing his dollars to the crazy mob around him; but does it not become us, as American statesmen, to husband our resources, to look at eventualities, to look to justice? Let us not offer inducements to bring in reckless foreigners who will lie down, like the locusts upon the land of Egypt. Let us consider whether it would not be a curse to the country; and whether you had not better have all the plagues of Egypt, locusts, frogs, and lice, thrown in, rather than have the country settled up in this way with a State or colony in the West, holding power, predominance, and influence in the Union under the control of alien and wrong feeling.

Sir, I have no more to say at present upon this bill, and I do not know that I shall have anything further to say upon it at any time. I prefer that some one else should expose it. I prefer that some one else should investigate the statistics, look at the real position of the question, and expose the wickedness of the proposition. I have, in a somewhat incoherent way, given my convictions and feelings and notions about it. I think it is based upon a mistaken principle. It is a radical change in our public land system. No President has ever recommended it. There is no call for it. It is not needed by any pressing public necessity. It is wasting away our means for nothing. I hope the bill will not be passed; but if it should pass, though I make no promises, I must say, notwithstanding what has been heretofore urged in reference to the veto power, that if President Pierce should veto the bill, I am not so certain that I would not be for him for the succession; such is my conviction of the impropriety of the measure.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have no intention, at this stage of the discussion, to enter into a full review of this whole homestead subject. It has been very well said, sir, that this is "the land of the free, and the home of the brave;" and if there is anything about which we are accustomed to boast on the fourth of July, and on all occasions of national festivity, it is that this is the asylum of the oppressed of every land. Having been taught, sir, from my earliest infancy, to honor and revere these sentiments, it will not astonish Senators if I say, that I do not fully sympathize in the sentiments which have been uttered to-day by my honorable friend from Kentucky, [Mr. Thompson.]

Like that honorable Senator, I approve, to the fullest extent, the idea that foreigners coming to our country should conform themselves in their conduct to our laws and to our customs; but when they have done so, and have been admitted under our laws to full citizenship, I would not deprive them by my policy here or elsewhere, of one hundredth part of a single privilege which rightfully belongs to an American citizen. I will not vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Wade.] And why? Because it proposes to put foreigners upon an equal footing with American citizens, before they become American citizens. I care not where a man may have been born, whether in France or in Scotland, in Ireland or in Germany, if he seek an asylum upon these shores—that asylum which in all our public declarations, and by our whole public policy we have guaranteed to him—and if he shall live amongst us for the full time required by our laws, and shall be admitted to the rights of citizenship, I would have him enjoy those rights to their fullest and most ample extent. But until that has been done, I cannot consent to grant him, so far as the occupancy of the soil is concerned, the rights of citizenship to which he is not entitled under the general laws and general policy of the country.

But I did not rise, Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, to discuss this question at this time. My object is to give notice to the Senate, at this stage of the proceedings, that I mean, at the proper time, to move a substitute for the whole bill. I may say, in a word, that I have never given the sanction of my own mind to the policy of giving away the public lands to American citizens or to foreigners. I am, however, for guaranteeing to every citizen a home. Whether he be of native or of foreign birth, I would give him a home, and secure him in the possession of it. I have before me, and ask to have read at this stage of the proceedings, a proposition which looks to that end; and without detaining the Senate further, I send it to the Chair, and ask to have it read now, giving notice to the Senate that I shall, at the proper time, move it as a substitute for the original bill.

I will remark further, in this connection, that the substitute has undergone the revision of the Committee on Public Lands; and, like the bill under consideration, has received their full sanction. If one be adopted, the other may as well, or better, be rejected; and it becomes a simple question for the Senate to decide, whether they will take this proposition, which was first recommended by the committee, or the one now under consideration, and which has also been recommended.

THE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi gives notice that he will hereafter move to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause, and insert a substitute, which will be read.

It was read, as follows:

That the laws now in force, granting preemption to actual settlers on the public lands, shall continue until otherwise ordered by Congress, and that the same be extended to all the Territories of the United States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, the rights of preceptors shall be perpetuated, that is to say: persons acquiring the right of preemption, shall retain the same without disturbance, and without payment of any kind to the United States, but on these conditions: First. The preceptor shall not sell, alienate, or dispose of his or her right for a consideration; and if he or she voluntarily abandon one preemption and claim another, no right shall be acquired by such claim until the claimant shall first have testified, under oath, before the register of the land office, when the claim is preferred, that he or she has voluntarily abandoned his or her original preemption, and that no consideration, reward, or payment of any kind, has been received, or is expected, directly or indirectly, as an inducement for such abandonment; and any person who shall testify falsely in such case shall be deemed guilty of perjury. Second. Any person claiming and holding the right of preemption to lands under this act, may be required by the State within which the same lies to pay taxes thereon, in the same manner and to the same extent as if he or she owned the said land in fee-simple; and in case such lands are sold for taxes, the purchaser shall acquire the right of preemption only. Third. Absence of the preceptor and his family for six consecutive months shall be deemed an abandonment, and the land shall, in such case, revert to the United States, and be subject to the same disposition as other public lands.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no lands entered upon, and held under the provisions of this act, or the improvements thereon, shall ever be sold under any judgment or decree for any debt or other liability or penalty to the United States; nor shall any sale of the same for debt, other liability, or penalty (other than for taxes) under the authority of any State, or the courts thereof, entitle the purchaser to any right to disturb the possession of the preceptor by purchase from the Government; nor shall it be lawful to issue a patent for any such land to any such purchaser.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the preceptor may at any time, at his or her discretion, enter the lands preempted by paying therefor to the proper officer of the United States one dollar and twenty five cents per acre.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That in case of the preceptor's death, if a married man, his right shall survive to his widow and infant children; but the rights of the older children shall cease as they respectively come of age, or when they shall reach the age of twenty one years. In all cases the right of preemption shall remain in the youngest child. And in case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children, the executor, administrator, or guardian, shall, upon submitting satisfactory proof of that fact to the register and receiver of the proper land office, be entitled to a patent for the land so preempted for the benefit of said infant child or children, and may thereafter sell said lands, or otherwise dispose of them, for the benefit of the infant child or children aforesaid.

MR. ADAMS. I only wish to say that the amendment of my colleague meets my entire approbation; and that if I shall be here when the vote is taken upon it, I will vote for it. I make this explanation merely because it is probable that, on account of the indisposition of my family, I may leave here in a few days.

MR. WELLER. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow at one o'clock, so that we may have an Executive session.

MR. WALKER. I ask the Senator to make his motion general, to postpone until to-morrow, and not to any particular hour, for we may be able to reach the bill before one o'clock.

MR. WELLER. Then I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of MR. WELLER, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were opened.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by MR. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the Speaker of the House had signed two enrolled bills.

The PRESIDENT thereupon signed the enrolled bill to authorize the school commissioners of fractional township No. 1, of range No. 10 east, in Alabama, to locate one half section of land for school purposes; and the enrolled bill to amend the third section of the act "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending June 30, 1854, and for other purposes."

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General, in answer to the resolution of the Senate, of the 11th instant, transmitting information in relation to the contract of J. W. Kelly, for the transportation of the mail from Bainbridge, Georgia, to Apalachicola, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 19, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by REV. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER presented a communication from the Post Office Department, transmitting specific estimates of money expected to be required for the service of that Department for the year commencing July 1, 1854.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. These are the regular annual estimates from that Department. I move that, without reading, they be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to, and the order entered.

Also, a communication from the same Department, transmitting an estimate for the ocean mail service, payable out of the revenue of that Department, for the year commencing 1st July, 1854; which was also referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call of committees for reports, commencing with the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

MR. OLDS, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported back Senate bill for the relief of Almanzon Huston.

MR. O. said: The committee make an adverse report upon this bill. I do not, however, propose to move to lay it upon the table, as is usual in such cases. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

MR. OLDS. I have no objection to its being laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be so ordered.

MR. OLDS, from the same committee, reported back the following Senate bills, with a recommendation that they do not pass; which were referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed:

S. No. 303. An act for the relief of Llewellyn Washington; and

S. No. 303. An act for the relief of James M. Goggin.

MAIL CONTRACT.

MR. OLDS. I am directed to report back Senate resolution entitled "A resolution for extending an existing contract for carrying the mail in Alabama," with the recommendation that it do pass. I desire to trouble the House with a word or two of explanation; and I am sorry that I am compelled to ask the House to let me put the resolution on its passage, knowing that members have been troubled too much with such applications of late.

The facts are simply these: If this resolution be not passed before the 25th of this month, it will be of no consequence to the parties to have the resolution passed at all. I would state, for the information of the House, that the committee have taken a good deal of pains to investigate this case, which caused some excitement here the other day. In obedience to the resolution of the House, the Postmaster General has sent us copies of all the correspondence and contracts and petitions and reports which have been made to him on the subject. The committee find nothing in this case but what is fair and honest. An attempt was made the other day to prejudice the House in relation to this case. The House was perhaps prejudiced against this claim, from the fact that Mr. Metcalfe, who had been the special agent for the Post Office Department for the State of Alabama, was connected with Mr. Powell in the contract. I desire to disabuse the House of any prejudice they may have received from the representation of this kind. They will see at a single glance, Mr. Speaker, that it is not reasonable that the Postmaster General should have discharged Mr. Metcalfe from being the special agent of the Post Office Department, and that he should still have been such a favorite with him, that after having thus discharged him he should award Mr. Metcalfe a contract unjust in itself. There is an absurdity on the very face of it. It is unreasonable to suppose that there should be such relations existing between Mr. Metcalfe and the Postmaster General as should make him a favorite with that officer, while at the same time he had discharged him from being a special agent of the Post Office Department. He discharged him, not because there was anything wrong in the conduct of Mr. Metcalfe as agent, but under the general rule that obtains that when there is a change of Administration there should be a change of officers—the Postmaster General being a Democrat, and Mr. Metcalfe a Whig.

MR. GREY. With the gentleman's permission, I would ask him to state the date at which Mr. Metcalfe ceased to be the special agent for the Post Office Department, and the date of the commencement of this contract.

MR. OLDS. I am unable, Mr. Speaker, to state precisely the date. I believe that Mr. Metcalfe was discharged some time in June; and that this contract was also made in June, the latter portion of the month, perhaps the last day, or a day or two of the end of June.

Now, what has all that to do with the case? What difference would it make if Mr. Metcalfe had been discharged upon the very day that this contract was made with Mr. Powell? Mr. Metcalfe came into this contract from the fact that he is the special friend of Mr. Powell. Mr. Powell became the assignee of Wade Allen, who formerly held the contract, and he associated with himself Mr. Metcalfe, a discharged special agent of the Post Office Department; and after Mr. Powell had associated Mr. Metcalfe with him, inasmuch as the Post Office Department could have no objection to his being thus associated, it was the duty of the Postmaster General, as a matter of course, in making the contract, to name Mr. Metcalfe with Mr. Powell in that contract.

But I ask gentlemen, in order to disabuse their minds of any prejudice that may have been created against the validity and honesty of the contract by the fact that it has been given to a discharged agent, or, as is represented, an agent of the Post Office Department, to look at the fact that the Postmaster General conceived it to be his duty to discharge Mr. Metcalfe, who was a Whig special agent of the Post Office Department; but at the same time he felt it to be his duty to discharge him for political reasons, and political reasons only, to show that the Postmaster General had no ill feeling against this man, he was willing that he should be associated with Mr. Powell in this contract. Would you infer from that any favoritism on the part of the Postmaster General towards Mr. Metcalfe? Then, why did he discharge him from the post of special agent? He has kept other men in his employ who are Whigs. Why did he discharge Mr. Metcalfe, if that gentleman is such a friend of his that he would show him favoritism in awarding this contract? I hope there is no prejudice of this kind existing in the minds of members.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

MR. OLDS. Certainly.

MR. JONES. The time for receiving bids for carrying the mails in all that section of country where this route is has been closed. I suppose the bids have all been opened, and that it is known to the Postmaster General now what propositions have been made for carrying the mails upon that route for the next four years from the termination of the present contract. Does the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads know anything of such bids?

MR. OLDS. If it were in the power of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to know anything of the kind, it must be known to him in violation of the rules of the Post Office Department.

Mr. JONES. Well, if the gentleman does not wish to answer the question, I will not press it. But this is the condition of this case: The contractors had the contract; the Postmaster General made another contract with them for additional service at $24,000 per annum, with the condition that if he could not get authority to extend the whole contract for four years from the termination of the existing contract, he would pay them at the rate of $30,000 instead of $24,000.

Mr. OLDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. Now, if the Postmaster General has bids for transporting the mails upon this route which will be more advantageous to the Government than it would be to extend this contract, I think he should take a more advantageous bid, and pay the alternative contract of $30,000.

Mr. OLDS. The gentleman interrupted my reply to his question; but I deem it important that I should finish what I had to say with reference to my knowledge of other bids, and what those bids were.

Sir, one of the charges made the other day by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky against the Postmaster General was, that that officer did not permit him to go into the rooms of the clerks in the Post Office Department, and himself examine the papers. Why, sir, suppose the Postmaster General should give permission of that kind to the public generally, what would be the result? What might be the result?

If you extend this privilege to the Post Office Department, this rule should be adopted in all the Departments—even in the Department of the Secretary of State. Suppose that one of the honorable members of Congress should desire to go into the Department of the Secretary of State and examine the secret correspondence on file in his office—correspondence in regard to which, when you call upon the President for copies of it, you always insert a provision "if he deems it not inexpedient with the public interests." Yet the gentleman says if this rule was relaxed, gentlemen could go to the Post Office Department and get the bids. Precisely a case of this kind has occurred within three or four days. The bids to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] refers were opened on the 10th of April by the Assistant Postmaster General. They were not known to the Postmaster General himself, but they were indorsed and opened in the presence of the assistants, and are entered upon the books; and no person has a right to know anything about them until they are declared publicly on the 25th day of April. A case occurred since the opening of these bids, on the 10th of the present month, like this: A contractor, who had offered a bid for a mail contract at $28,500, ascertained, in some manner—I do not know how—that he was underbid. Upon an examination of the entries upon the books of the Department, it has been found that that bid of $28,500 has been changed to $23,500.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Upon what route?

Mr. OLDS. I do not recollect upon what route it was. The Postmaster General found it to be his duty to order the clerk of the Department, having charge of that particular desk, to give an account of himself. Another clerk in that Department addressed a communication to the Postmaster General, declaring that the clerk who is ordered to give an account of himself is innocent of the charge. The Postmaster General says to him, "If you know this man is innocent, you must know who is guilty. Tell me who is the guilty person." But he would not do it, not because, it is supposed, that he himself has changed the bid, but that he is cognizant of the fact that the contractor himself has had access by some means or other to the books of the Department and has seen the bids, and if the fact should be established upon the contractor, he would be forever precluded from making any further contracts. This clerk submits to the degradation of resigning rather than implicate the guilty person in the transaction. I refer to this case to show the necessity of the rule established by the Postmaster General, that the papers in charge of the clerks in the different bureaus should not be submitted to the inspection of any person whatever.

Mr. GREY. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] puts a singular phase upon this affair. Have we any "State secrets," or records of delicate negotiations with foreign Governments, in the Post Office Department? I claimed the right, as a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to make a personal examination of the "public records," with the aid and assistance of the clerks having charge of them in the public rooms, which the chairman of that committee [Mr. OLDS] knows was never before denied to the members of that committee or of Congress. He has often gone there, as well as myself, and never was denied the exercise of the privilege I claimed; and when I spoke to him of those new rules and regulations, he replied: "I should like to see any of them refuse to allow me to go in and see the bids." And yet he comes in here and makes the speech he has this morning, from which it might be inferred that I wished to examine the bids; yet, sir, he knows I wanted to see no such thing. He knows the unacted on bids are not "public records." All bids are locked up when received for the annual lettings until a certain day, of which notice is given in the printed advertisements of the Post Office Department, when the seal of each bid is broken in the presence of the Postmaster General. Then the clerks are locked up with them in certain specified rooms until they record all of them (which have been received) into large books. The doors of the rooms are locked until all the bids are thus recorded, and until the Postmaster General has reviewed the bids and decided to which bid each contract shall be assigned. Up to that time they are the "secret records" of the Post Office Department. But from the time that those decisions are made, the doors are thrown open, the books are subject to inspection, and all are, or have ever heretofore been, permitted to come in and examine them.

Now, I ask any gentleman who is a member of this, or who was a member of any preceding Congress, if he has ever known a member of Congress, a contractor, or bidder, to be refused the privilege of going to the clerks' rooms to inspect the public records of the Department until since this case for action? But now, forsooth, all who desire to look at the papers and books of the Department, are required to go into the room of the Postmaster or Assistant Postmaster General, and there await their pleasure to bring in the public records of the Department, that they may examine them. This is done by a Democratic Administration! Why done, sir? Is it in order to conceal and smother and hide their doings? What member of this House has leisure to go through all that formula, and yield to all that ridiculous etiquette and nonsense sought to be enforced by an eastern and city gentleman now at the head of that Department. Sir, the Postmaster General sent a message to us requesting that we should sanction an illegal act of his, in order to give it validity. The matter was referred for investigation to the committee of which I was a member. I introduced a resolution calling for information—for the facts in the case, and for the data upon which the Postmaster General had assumed the privilege of making privately a contract on a mail route for the next four years, when the law positively requires that he shall advertise and relet every four years to the lowest bidder. The reply of the Postmaster General was contradictory in itself—incomplete, and did not state the facts as they existed.

Sir, I can establish, by the report itself, all I have charged. The report, I say, does not state all the facts truly, but withholds some, and equivocates insincerely as to others; therefore I desired a personal examination. But lo and behold! His Honor had just then adopted an order, which said, in substance, "If you are not satisfied with my report, you shall not have any additional information, nor the chance of detecting my errors." Sir, if all had been honest and fair on those records, would not he and his second assistant have desired an examination of their records? Secret records in regard to the making of mail contracts by the Postmaster General! Sir, do you call that one of the principles of this, the "age of progress?"

Thus, sir, has the Postmaster General asked us to indorse his illegal acts, and refused to permit us to see and know the data upon which he presumed to violate a positive law of Congress in regard to "letting" of mail contracts. I proposed to introduce into this Democratic House of Congress a resolution asking the Postmaster General for a copy of those new rules of his. But, it not being

"resolution day," any one member objecting would, under the rules of the House, prevent my getting a vote upon them. One member did object, and I now give notice that I will, when it is in order, again ask for copies of those new rules which seem to have been adopted to conceal the facts in regard to this particular case.

Mr. OLDS, (interrupting.) I am sorry to be obliged to interrupt the gentleman, but he is extending his remarks somewhat, and I must resume what I have to say; and the gentleman will have an opportunity to bring up the matter on which he is speaking at some other time; and, if he chooses, after I have finished my remarks.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] one question before he takes his seat. Did I understand the gentleman, when he spoke upon this subject some days ago, to state when he was told at the Post Office Department that he could not go into the rooms of the clerks to examine books or records, that the Assistant Postmaster General told him at the same time that he would send for all the books and papers appertaining to the subject which the gentleman wished to investigate, and that he would exhibit them to him in his room?

Mr. GREY. He replied to me that he would send a clerk for the books and papers, (I presume he meant for such as I desired to see,) and told me of the rules and regulations that had been adopted.

Mr. JONES. I recollect very distinctly that, during the last Administration, an order was made in the Pension Office that neither a member of this House or of the Senate could go into a clerk's room and look for a bounty land warrant, without first going to the Commissioner of Pensions, or to the chief clerk, and getting an order to permit him to do so.

Mr. OLDS. And I am told that that rule is still enforced.

Mr. JONES. Most frequently under that rule they sent for books and papers, and had them brought to the Commissioner's or clerk's room. Now, I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] if there is any room in the Post Office Department where they permit contractors to see any of these bids until they are opened and decided upon by the Department and registered? I ask, further, if, when the bids are decided and registered, they are not, from that time, opened to the inspection of everybody—contractors, bidders, and all other persons who wish to see them?

Mr. GREY. The gentleman is well aware that I did not desire to see any bids. Sir, it was before the lettings now going on at the Department that I went to examine the facts in regard to this special contract of the Postmaster General, which he made last summer and fall, but which, by law, was obliged to be made now. Yes, sir, now, and at these present "lettings." Sir, there are records in the Pension Office relating to private rights and the interests of poor widows and orphans, which ought not, perhaps, to be investigated by speculators, who thereby could ascertain the pensions due to minors, and thus buy them up for a mere song, before the heirs could find out their value. But the gentleman admits that by calling first on the Commissioner of Pensions, or chief clerk, he was allowed to go to the rooms and examine the "records." But, sir, did the gentleman ever hear of a member of Congress being refused to examine the "public records" of that Department until after the Postmaster General sent to Congress for their sanction of his conduct in regard to this mail contract? That is the point, sir.

Mr. OLDS. I wish to do my colleague justice in reference to this matter. At a meeting of the committee before the one in which he resigned his position as a member of that committee, the gentleman stated his griefs. I was not, at that time, aware of the existence of the order of the Post Office Department; for it had been my practice universally to go to the head of a Department, who sent for a clerk to come and give me the information I called for; and I did so now. I told that gentleman that I would go with him to the Department, and that we would have full access to all the papers we desired to see. Perhaps I used the very language the gentleman has quoted this morning. I make this statement in justice to the gentleman, for I have always had a very high regard for the gentleman from Kentucky, having been associated with him for three years upon the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I feel the same regard for him to-day.

But, sir, the explanation which I have given to the House this morning, which the gentleman says I have made to go out to the public, I have not made at the request of the Postmaster General; neither have I communicated the facts which I have communicated as coming from him. He has called upon me to make no explanation in his behalf. I was only speaking of the necessity there is for such an order as the gentleman complains of having been made at the Department, and of which I myself was ignorant until my attention was called to it by the complaint of the gentleman in this case. If the gentleman himself will reflect upon it for a moment, he will see the necessity there is for such a regulation.

Take another case in connection with this Department. Who does not know that removals take place every day in the Post Office Department, upon charges that do not go to the public, and upon charges which, perhaps, the person himself has no knowledge of? Does the gentleman say that it would be right that members of Congress should be allowed to go into the room of the clerk having charge of the petitions for the appointment and removal of postmasters, and should have the privilege of examining all these petitions, and all the private correspondence in relation to them—correspondence of members of Congress and others, for the purpose of making it public to the world? Should they be made acquainted with all these secrets, which are peculiarly the business of the Department?

Why, suppose a charge is made against a postmaster for robbing the mail, or suppose he himself makes the charge against another. Suppose the charges and the evidence are such as to satisfy the Postmaster General, but not such as to warrant him in instituting legal proceedings; but he thinks himself called upon, in the administration of his Department, to remove the delinquent postmaster. Would the gentleman have these charges made public? Would not the making of them public remove the only means in his power of detecting the guilty postmaster, by putting him upon his guard? Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that there is reason, and good reason, nay, sir, that there is a necessity, that such a regulation as is now complained of by the gentleman from Kentucky should exist in the various departments of the Government.

Now, sir, I have said what I have upon this subject, not as wishing to raise any hard feeling against the gentleman from Kentucky in the minds of the members of this House. I do not believe that any such exists. I certainly entertain none, and am sure no other gentleman does; but I have made this reference because I feared that the resolutions which I have recommended for the adoption of the House, under the direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, might be prejudiced by the complaints made by the gentleman from Kentucky in reference to this matter. Sir, I protest against any such prejudice being raised. What has the Postmaster General done in relation to the matter? The gentleman from Kentucky offers a resolution calling upon him for copies of all correspondence concerning this case. And what is the reply of the Postmaster General? He transmits copies of every paper in the possession of the Department which was called for; and not only that, but he has marked them for the inspection of the gentleman from Kentucky, or any other member of the House. I challenge the gentleman from Kentucky, or any other gentleman upon this floor, to point to the first scintilla of evidence that has not been furnished by this correspondence, so that if there is anything wrong in the contract made with Messrs. Powell and Metcalfe, gentlemen can ascertain it for themselves.

This, sir, is the condition of the case. The Postmaster General sent his special agents to investigate the state of the service upon this mail route, and they reported to him that the service was not sufficient for carrying the mail upon it. The Chamber of Commerce of New Orleans made a special request of the Postmaster General for increased mail facilities on that route.

Mr. GREY. What is the date of the contract?

Mr. PHILLIPS. It is not dated.

Mr. OLDS. The date is not here. Perhaps

I am unable to give the date. I have not turned my attention to anything with regard to dates, seeing nothing wrong in the whole matter.

Mr. GREY. Has the gentleman the copy of the memorial?

Mr. OLDS. I have.

Mr. GREY. Does it not give the date?

Mr. OLDS. It does not.

I say that there were complaints from the people all along the route at the feeble manner in which the mail service was performed, and calling for increased mail facilities; and your Postmaster General, as in duty bound, called on the postmasters along that route for information. Copies of that information have been given. He sent a special agent from the Post Office Department to make investigation. His report is also given. The report recommended that the service should be put on the river. The Postmaster General asked for bids from the steamboat owners, and the lowest bid that he received for the performance of the service was $50,000 for six months, which was at the rate of $100,000 per annum. Now, what could the Postmaster General do? The people demanded this increase of mail facilities; the bids of the steamboat owners were too exorbitant. He could not make a contract of that kind. He then called on Messrs. Metcalfe and Powell, who had the existing contract, for a proposition for double daily service for running two coaches. They were willing to perform it for a pro rata compensation. They were receiving $36,000, and they were willing to perform double service for $36,000 more, which would make $72,000 per annum—still $28,000 less than the lowest bid put in by the steamboat owners for the performance of the same service.

The Postmaster General, after the fullest investigation, made an offer to Messrs. Metcalfe and Powell that the double daily service should be performed for $24,000 in addition to what they already received. They were unwilling to make this contract. They were unwilling for that compensation to double their stock on the road, to enlarge their stabling, which they would have to do if they entered into the contract. To do so would require an outlay of $30,000, which, if they did not get a continuance of the contract from the 30th of June next, would be thrown on their hands as lost. They objected then to entering into the contract unless they had some kind of assurance from the Postmaster General that they could be continued in that service for four years longer. The Postmaster General had no power to make the contract beyond the 30th day of June; but, as an inducement to these men to take that contract and expend their $30,000 in increase of stock and stabling, and in repairing the road—for Mr. Powell himself expended $15,000 in building a bridge on the road at his own expense—the Postmaster General gave them the assurance that he would make a recommendation to Congress that the contract should be continued four years longer.

Now there is not a particle of evidence to show that it is more than the service is worth. On the contrary the evidence is that it is not beyond the real value of the service to be performed. There is not a particle of evidence that bids would be put in at a lower rate.

But the point which I wish to urge upon the consideration of the House is this: Messrs. Powell and Metcalfe, have been induced to take this contract and make an outlay of $30,000, upon the supposition that the Congress of the United States would extend their contract four years longer; and if this contract is to be abrogated, or if Congress should refuse its assent to the extension of the contract, and it is let to the lowest bidders, and they shall not be the lowest bidders, they will incur a loss of $25,000 or $30,000 in consequence of having acted on what they supposed would be, and what really is, the recommendation of the Postmaster General that the contract should be continued four years longer.

There is not a particle of evidence to show that, everything about the contract has not been fair. I believe, on my honor, that a fair and just contract has been made by the Postmaster General, in accordance with his usual desire to advance the interests of the country in the administration of his Department. For I believe that if Postmaster General Campbell has a fault at all, it is that of being too close and economical in the administration of his department of the Government, rather than that he is at all disposed to lend himself to anything that looks like over-payment for any service that may be performed.

Now, I ask the House, under these circumstances, with this understanding upon the part of Messrs. Powell and Metcalfe, that they should have the contract for four years longer, Congress assenting to the same—I ask if it is just that we should refuse to pass this resolution, and throw the loss upon these individuals who have come in to the aid of the Post Office Department in the very hour of its need, and throw this loss upon them in consequence of their liberality, and their desire to advance the interests of the Post Office Department?

I think the resolution ought to pass; and, to make it effective, it ought to be passed at once; for, if it is not passed before the 25th of this month, the bids which have been made under the advertisements will then be declared; and it will be too late, because the Postmaster General must then award the contract to the lowest bidder, whether the lowest bid be $150,000, $100,000, or $50,000. I hope, therefore, that the House will at once put the resolution upon its passage. I am willing, however, that any gentleman shall now have the floor who wishes to speak in opposition to the resolution. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] desire to speak in opposition to it?

Mr. GREY. I desire to say a few words only.

Mr. OLDS. Before yielding the floor, in order to prevent the bill from going into the fifth class of business on the Speaker's table, in case a motion should be made and carried to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, I desire to submit a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

[Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported back as correctly enrolled, the following bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act for the relief of John Guzman, of Louisiana; and

An act establishing a land office in the lower peninsula of Michigan.]

Mr. GREY. Mr. Speaker, the subject-matter of this resolution does not immediately interest me or my constituents. When it was first brought up before this House I was not in my seat, but coming in while it was under discussion, I learned that it was a contract in violation of the general laws governing the "lettings" of mail contracts, that it was a contract made under the discretionary power of the Postmaster General. That, sir, drew my attention to it more particularly than anything else, because, by and under the exercise of these "discretionary powers" and privileges, in violation of the laws of the country, the State which you and I in part represent, have, I will not say been swindled by the Post Office Department out of $10,000 per annum, by the operation of that dangerous "discretionary power;" I do not like to use the word "swindled." But I will say, here, that the State of Kentucky has been unjustly and illegally charged about $100,000 within the last year for mail facilities and about half that sum per year previous, under a contract made in violation of law, and now continued, and the service upon which has never been performed in accordance with the terms and stipulations of that illegal contract. Nor has it benefited, but has been of actual injury and prejudice to our mail facilities in Kentucky.

That is a matter, Mr. Speaker, about which you and I had some conversation during last Congress, and went together to the Post Office Department to see about; and I then protested against it, and insisted the contract on that route should be "let" according to law, and to the advertisements then published for bids upon it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] when the contract of which he speaks was made?

Mr. GREY. When the contract in Kentucky was made?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREY. If the House will allow me the digression, I will, if he desires it, explain to the gentleman. In 1850 the contract was let to carry the mail from Louisville to St. Louis, by the way of the Ohio river, for $10,000 a year, by J. C. Buckles, or Buckles and a partner, perhaps. There was some personal disagreement between Buckles and the present Second Assistant Postmaster General, which induced the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the last and this Congress to believe that Buckles had been unjustly dealt with. Buckles was seriously fined, his pay withheld from him, his contract forfeited, and given to Messrs. Sherlock and Shirley, without advertisement for bids, but under this odious "discretionary power," at a much higher price of compensation than had been given to Buckles. Sherlock and Shirley performed the service so badly that complaints were loud and universal, and Congress, in August, 1852, passed an act which made it the "duty of the Postmaster General to issue proposals and contract for the transportation of the mails" on that route.

Accordingly, on the 31st December, 1852, advertisements were published by the then Postmaster General for bids for the service, "on suitable and safe steamboats," for four years from 1st of July, 1853. 1st. From Louisville to Evansville and back, daily. 2d. From Evansville to Cairo and back, daily. 3d. Between Cairo and St. Louis, daily. The bids to be received at the Post Office Department by 10th February, 1853, to be considered and decided on by the 1st March, and service to commence the 1st July, 1853. Well, sir, in January, 1853, Mr. Shirley came on here, and obtained an extra allowance upon his contract, (which I believe was then at about $40,000 per annum,) running his pay up to $70,000 per annum; and from 1st February, 1853, until the service should commence upon the new contracts, that is, those to be let 1st March, 1853. This extra allowance contract to Shirley and Shirley was recommended by the present Second Assistant Postmaster General. I protested against it, for I knew it was in violation of law, and I believed it would tend to fix the price for that service from Louisville to St. Louis at $70,000 per annum, which was greatly above the steamboat daily service between Louisville and Cincinnati, (which is $10,500 for one hundred and forty-two miles,) I knew, too, that Shirley and Sherlock had never performed the service with any regularity; for the district I represent fronts upon the Ohio river for hundreds of miles, and, sir, I believe it was the desire of the present Second Assistant Postmaster General to afford to Sherlock and Shirley the means by this $70,000 to get their line of packets so regularly established from Louisville to St. Louis before the new contract could be ready to commence operation, that the new contractors could not compete with their opposition line, and would be thus compelled to give up to Shirley and Sherlock their contracts.

The bids were filed, and on the 2d March, 1853, Messrs. Glover and Mather were informed by an "official" letter signed by Mr. Dundas, informing them that their bids had been accepted for the routes from Louisville to Evansville, Evansville to Cairo, (and several other routes,) the whole of them at the annual compensation of $450,000.

On the 12th March, 1853, Mr. Dundas wrote again to Messrs. Glover and Mather, that he was instructed by the present Postmaster General to inform them that he had not yet had time "to examine the matter of the acceptance" of their bids for these routes, "but that it is his intention to reconsider the acceptance as soon as he can find time to give it his attention."

The result was a reconsideration and an annulment of their "acceptance" as contractors on 13th March, 1853; and in lieu changes and modifications were made under that "discretionary power," and a contract finally agreed upon at the annual compensation of $297,975, for various steamboat routes, twice daily, on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, &c., to commence on the 1st December, 1853. This contract was dated on the 20th day of May, all written out in due form and fully executed, and endorsed "signed, sealed, and delivered by the Postmaster General, in the presence of James N. Davis," "and by the other parties in the presence of W. P. Young," and several other witnesses, whose names are attached.

Well, sir, all would here naturally expect an end to the exercise of that "discretionary power." But no, not yet. The contractors went West, procured boats, had everything ready and in complete trim, and on the morning of the 1st December, 1853, presented their boats and demanded the mails. But, lo and behold, a letter from the Postmaster General, dated 26th November, 1853, addressed to the "mail agent" at Louisville, informed him not to give the mail to the contractors unless they would agree not to carry any freight—nothing but mails and passengers on any of their boats. This, too, when there was no such provision or prohibition in the contract, which he, as Postmaster General of the United States, had executed. All had turned out as I had anticipated. Those favorites, Messrs. Sherlock and Shirley, had all this while been conveying the mails daily from Louisville in boats to St. Louis, and are yet doing so.

The mails are carried from Louisville by stages, across Illinois, to St. Louis. Therefore, the river mail was established solely to supply the intermediate offices on the river between Louisville and St. Louis. If it fails to supply these offices, it is valueless and worthless; it is a fraud upon the people along those rivers, and a swindle upon the Treasury.

Although these contractors sail their mail boats along up and down the rivers both ways daily, with freights, passengers, and mails, yet the intermediate offices in my district, which ought to have been supplied daily both by up and down boats, would have been much better off without any river mail at all, for then their mails would have been sent by land routes, where the contractors do their duty.

I have remonstrated personally, and by letters, with the Postmaster General, and with his Second Assistant. I have sent them newspaper complaints, and those sent me by private correspondents, but all to no purpose. These favorite contractors, Messrs. Sherlock and Shirley, must be protected, and secured in their monopoly of the "packet line" from Louisville to St. Louis, whether they furnish "mail facilities" or not.

There is now for that service paid to Sherlock and Shirley $70,000 per year; then to the "route agents," mail messengers, local agents, &c., enough to swell it up to about $100,000; all of which is charged to Kentucky for "mail facilities" in that State. Thus the law of August, 1852, making it the "duty of the Postmaster General" to "let out" that river mail service to the lowest bidder, is disregarded and violated by this "discretionary power" to favor and fatten "pet contractors," at an enormous cost to, and shameful disregard of, the rights and interests of Kentucky.

Then I would ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS] if I have not reasons for exerting what little influence I may have in order to put a check upon official corruption resulting from discretionary powers by a Postmaster General and his assistants, who disregard all laws and moral obligations in relation to contracts? During these negotiations, Mr. Dundas, I am informed, often tried to induce Mr. Glover to agree to let Sherlock and Shirley have that contract from Louisville to St. Louis; often said to Glover, "You had better let Shirley and Sherlock have that route," and "You will have to let Shirley and Sherlock have that route. They have the boats on it, and already stocked," &c., &c.—substantially as above.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in relation to this Montgomery and Mobile route—

Mr. HAVEN, (interrupting.) Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. HAVEN. I do not like to interrupt the gentleman from Kentucky; but if he will yield me the floor, I will move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GREY. I will yield for that purpose, if I can have the floor in the morning to finish my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be entitled to the floor when the resolution again comes under consideration.

Mr. HAVEN. I make the motion because I am anxious that the West Point Academy bill should be disposed of; and I think the committee will finish it in a short time, if the House will go into committee.

Mr. BISSELL. I wish to make a single suggestion. I hope the motion of the gentleman from New York will not prevail; and if the House will indulge me, I will state the reason in about three words. There is a bill upon the Speaker's table known as the bill making appropriations of land to the different States for the benefit of the indigent insane. I hope the motion of the gentleman from New York will not prevail, but that the House will proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table, with a view of disposing of this bill.

The question was put on the motion; and there were, on a division—ayes 54.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and Cox, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the motion was disagreed to, the tellers having reported—ayes 42, noes not counted.

So the House refused to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BISSELL. I move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama. I wish to appeal to my friend from Illinois to permit the bill which has been under consideration nearly all the morning to be disposed of. It is a matter of some importance to the contractors.

Mr. BISSELL. We have already got to the business which I have proposed. I must adhere to my motion.

The question was taken on the motion to go to the business on the Speaker's table; and there were, on a division—ayes 61.

Mr. BISSELL. I demand tellers on the motion.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that there be a call of the House. I do not believe we have a quorum present.

The question was taken; and the House refused to order a call of the House.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN, and HARRIS of Alabama, were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 76, nays 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Ball, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bissell, Bugg, Carpenter, Chandler, Churchwell, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Giddings, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hester, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Lilly, Lindley, Lyon, McDougall, Maurice, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pratt, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Skelton, William R. Smith, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vail, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollcoffer—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Bridges, Caskey, Chrisman, Clingman, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dent, Drum, Dunbar, Eddy, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hens, Hibbard, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Latham, Letcher, Lindsley, Macdonald, McNair, Maxwell, Mayall, Smith Miller, Murray, Olds, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Richardson, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, George W. Smyth, John J. Taylor, Walbridge, Warren, Wells, and Witte—70.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly proceeded to the business on the Speaker's table.

A bill of the following title was then taken up, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

An act for the relief of the Burlington University, in Iowa.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BISSELL. I hope not. What is the object?

Mr. PHELPS. The object is to dispose of the Military Academy bill, and then take up the deficiency bill.

The question was then taken on Mr. PHELPS's motion; and, on a division, there were—ayes 49, noes not counted.

So the motion was disagreed to.

LANDS FOR THE INDIGENT INSANE.

Bill of the following title was then taken up from the Speaker's table:

An act making a grant of public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons.

THE SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and a demand has been made for the previous question.

MR. BISSELL. I hope the demand for the previous question will be sustained, and that the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will not prevail, as that would be practically a defeat of the bill. I ask that the bill may be read; it is not long.

The Clerk read the bill.

MR. BOYCE. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

MR. PECK demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then put; and there were—yeas 43, nays 91; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bockock, Boyce, Caskie, Chrisman, Colquitt, Craig, John G. Davis, Dean, Dent, Eddy, Edmundson, Faulkner, Giddings, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hibbard, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kidwell, Letcher, Lindsley, McNair, Maxwell, Mayall, Murray, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Wells, and Witte—48.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Bissell, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Chandler, Churchwell, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dickinson, Drum, Dunbar, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Heister, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Latham, Lilly, Lindsey, Lyon, Mace, Maurice, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pratt, Puryear, Richardson, David Ritchie, Thos. Ritchey, Rogers, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Nestor L. Stevens, Stratton, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—91.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

MR. BISSELL. I hope the House will sustain the demand for the previous question.

The House was divided on the second; and there were—yeas 56, noes not counted.

MR. PHELPS. I move a call of the House. I want a vote of more than one hundred and thirty-nine members upon this bill.

The question was then taken; and the House refused a call.

MR. COBB. I am a friend to this bill, and I wish to see it amended as Miss Dix desires. I would ask the Chair what will be the effect of sustaining the previous question?

THE SPEAKER. If the previous question be sustained, it will cut off all amendments and all discussion, and bring the House to a vote upon the proposition to commit the bill; and, if that fails, then ultimately upon the passage of the bill. The question now is upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were demanded, and ordered; and Messrs. VAIL and WITTE were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 69, noes 42; no quorum voting.

MR. DEAN. I move a call of the House; and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

MR. WHEELER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

MR. HAMILTON. I move that there be a call of the House.

THE SPEAKER. That is the pending motion, and upon that proposition the yeas and nays have been demanded.

MR. DEAN. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays; but I insist upon the motion for a call.

The question was then put, and the House refused a call.

MR. COBB. I rise to a point of order. The previous question has not been seconded, and I claim the right to offer an amendment. Now, what does the Journal say upon that point of order?

MR. HAMILTON. I rise to a question of order. It is, that there is not a quorum here for the transaction of business.

MR. COBB. I claim the floor.

MR. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. If the fact stated by the gentleman from Alabama be true, that the demand for the previous question has not been seconded, still the motion to commit is pending, which would cut off any motion to amend.

THE SPEAKER. That is true; but, in addition to that, a demand for the previous question was made.

MR. COBB. But I deny that any such demand was made.

THE SPEAKER. That is a question of fact, upon which the Chair apprehends the Journal of the House and the gentleman from Alabama will differ.

MR. COBB. I understand the Journal states that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] demanded the previous question. Now, the gentleman from Virginia has informed me that he did not make any such demand.

MR. LETCHER. If the Journal states that I demanded the previous question, there must be some mistake about it. I have no recollection of any such thing.

THE SPEAKER. The Journal itself is not present. There is an indorsement upon the bill, to the effect that the gentleman from Virginia demanded the previous question upon it.

MR. LETCHER. There is some mistake about it.

THE SPEAKER. The regular proceedings of the House show that it was the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] who made the demand.

MR. COBB. I had been informed that it was the gentleman from Virginia.

THE SPEAKER. That was merely an indorsement upon the bill, and a mistake. The Chair will count the House, and ascertain whether there is a quorum present.

A count having been made, the Speaker announced that one hundred and thirty-seven members (a quorum) were present.

[Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles; which were accordingly signed by the Speaker:

An act to authorize the school commissioners of fractional township number one, of range ten, in Alabama, to locate one half section of land for school purposes; and

An act to amend the third section of the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1854, and for other purposes.]

The question now being upon seconding the demand for the previous question, the tellers—Messrs. VAIL and MACE—resumed their places.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—yeas 80, noes 38; there was a second.

THE SPEAKER. The question recurs on ordering the main question to be now put.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand tellers. Tellers were not ordered.

MR. SEWARD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the motion was disagreed to.

The question now recurring, "Shall the main question be now put?"

MR. COBB. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. WARREN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken on ordering the main question; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 85, nays 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Bissell, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Chandler, Churchwell, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Culom, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dickinson, Dunbar, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Farley, Florence, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Heister, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Latham, Lilly, Lindsey, Lyon, McDougall, Mace, Maurice, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pratt, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vail, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Benton, Boyce, Caskie, Chrisman, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dean, Dent, Eddy, Edmundson, Faulkner, Fenton, Giddings, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Henn, Hibbard, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Letcher, Lindsley, Macdonald, Smith Miller, Murray, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, John J. Taylor, Wade, and Witte—53.

So the main question was ordered to be now put, being first upon the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

MR. BISSELL. If that motion prevails it will, of course, kill the bill.

MR. PHELPS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. BISSELL. I understand that a wrong impression exists in the minds of some gentlemen as to the effect of the vote now to be taken.

MR. CRAIGE. I call the gentleman to order.

MR. BISSELL. To refer the bill now to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is, of course, to defeat it. Those who are in favor of the bill should, therefore, vote against the motion to refer.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentleman that debate is not in order.

MR. SMITH, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question was then put on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Benton, Bockock, Boyce, Caskie, Chrisman, Clingman, Colquitt, Craig, John G. Davis, Dean, Dent, Eddy, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Faulkner, Giddings, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hibbard, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Letcher, Lindsley, Smith Miller, Murray, Ods, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, John J. Taylor, Wade, and Witte—53.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Bissell, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Chandler, Churchwell, Clark, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Culom, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dunbar, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Heister, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Latham, Lilly, Lindsey, Lyon, Maurice, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pratt, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Stratton, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vail, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—81.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The question recurred upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

MR. BISSELL. I believe the previous question is not exhausted.

THE SPEAKER. It is not exhausted, nor will it be until the House shall have voted on ordering the bill to a third reading.

MR. DENT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

MR. HAMILTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House again refused to adjourn.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and was subsequently read the third time.

MR. BISSELL. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

MR. CLINGMAN. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading; and I do it for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Illinois.

MR. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Is not the motion too late?

THE SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from North Carolina has a right to submit the motion, and to be heard upon it.

MR. CLINGMAN. I do not know exactly the position in which the bill is placed, and I do not desire to occupy the time of the House in making a speech upon it.

MR. BISSELL. Is the gentleman from North Carolina entitled to the floor while we were in the act of dividing?

The SPEAKER. Before the count was had, the gentleman from North Carolina rose, and moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time.

Mr. BISSELL. The House was in the act of dividing, when the gentleman from North Carolina made his motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had not counted at all. He had only commenced to count when the gentleman from North Carolina rose and made his motion. There was an example of this kind on yesterday, and the Chair would not vary the practice.

Mr. BISSELL. I wish to understand what the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina is?

The SPEAKER. It is to reconsider the motion by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time.

Mr. BISSELL. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I shall give the gentleman from Illinois an opportunity to make that motion in a few minutes.

Mr. BISSELL. I desire to ask the Chair, if my motion, upon which the House was in the act of dividing, is not a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged motion, but the motion made by the gentleman from North Carolina is a privileged motion of a still higher character. If the House had seconded the demand for the previous question, and ordered the main question to be put, the Chair could not have entertained the proposition to reconsider; but before the Chair had announced the result of a count, the gentleman from North Carolina rose in his place, and made the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am surprised to see this uneasiness manifested by gentlemen. I did not intend to occupy the time of the House more than a single moment, when I first arose and addressed the Chair. I desire to know if the bill does not contain certain limitations upon the States with reference to the mode of disposing of the money; in other words, whether it does not as it stands—I will not trouble the House by having it reread—require the States to expend this money in a particular manner as indicated in the bill? I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] to admit that it does. My opposition, then, I would say, rests upon these features of the bill. I will waive the general question. Gentlemen may take it for granted that Congress has a right to give land to the States, and divide it among them according to the Federal population, or any other equitable mode. I am now taking no exception to that principle. I hold that when you do it, when you give land to the States, that you have no right to control their expenditure of what becomes their's absolutely by your gift—at any rate, to require them to do what this Government itself cannot constitutionally do.

For example, in order that gentlemen may understand my point—and I shall be gratified if they can meet it—I hold that this Federal Government has no jurisdiction over the lunatics or paupers in North Carolina, nor any right to take care of them; that this Government has no authority, under the powers given to it as a Federal and limited Government, to legislate in this way for either the lunatics, paupers, negroes, or anybody else, in the States; but that it is a matter which belongs to each State exclusively. If, therefore, this bill proposed to give lands or money, and to appoint a set of Federal officers to go into the States and take care of the lunatics, I presume that most of the members of the House would say that the Government was exceeding its powers. I think that nobody would maintain that we had a right to appoint a set of Federal officers to go into the States, and take care of the poor lunatics, or any other class.

But does not this objection apply with equal force to the pending proposition? As the bill is now framed, I understand it merely makes the States agents to carry out its provisions, instead of having it done by the Federal officers. It is so framed that the States under it will take the money under an obligation to use it in a particular manner pointed out in the bill, and, in fact, to use it to effect what the Government then has not a particle of authority to carry out. It requires, too, I believe, the States to make returns from time to time as to how they are spending the money, just exactly as an overseer would do upon a plantation. It degrades the States, therefore, by making them the mere agents of the General Government to do the will of the Government, and that will, too, being a violation of the Constitution of the United States, which plainly limits its powers. If the Government, by the Constitution, had any authority to do such a thing, possibly it might be contended that it could effect its object through the agency of the States. But if the General Government have no such authority, it is equally clear that this whole proceeding is wrong, whether it appoints the States agents or the Federal officers. I therefore rest my opposition to the bill upon the ground thus briefly stated.

I shall yield the floor in a moment, and then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] can either move to lay my motion upon the table, or he may discuss it, or any other gentleman may take the floor. My opposition to the bill rests upon this ground, but there may be other objections to it.

I should be glad to hear from the gentleman from Illinois. I understand him to be a believer in the doctrine that this is a Government of limited powers, and I have no doubt that he holds that we must act under the Constitution according to the power granted to the Government by it. If the gentleman can show me that there is anything in the Constitution which will authorize us to take care of the lunatics in the States, either by a donation out of the Treasury or in this mode, I might vote for the bill. I do not think he can do so, however. And yet the bill is so framed as to make the States mere agents to enable the Federal Government to violate the Constitution, to which it owes its existence.

When I got up I did not intend to occupy more time than might be necessary to indicate the grounds of my opposition to the bill. As a question of expediency, I need not say that I regard with favor a proposition so benevolent and charitable as this measure, and should be pleased to see it carried into practice, if it could be constitutionally done.

Mr. BISSELL. I will say but a word in reply—

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to suggest that he move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, and then we will pass the bill immediately?

Mr. BISSELL. I will, after saying a word. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BISSELL. Very well, then; I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put; and the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. BISSELL. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Upon the passage of the bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 81, nays 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bissell, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Chandler, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dunbar, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hester, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Latham, Lilly, Lindsey, Lindsey, Lyon, Maurice, Middletown, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pratt, Puryear, David Ritchie, Rogers, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vail, Walbridge, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Bocoek, Boyce, Caskie, Chrisman, Clingman, Colquitt, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dean, Dent, Drum, Eddy, Edmundson, Faulkner, Giddings, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hibbard, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Letcher, Macdonald, McNair, Maxwell, Murray, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, John J. Taylor, Wade, and Witte—53.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BISSELL. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was first taken upon the motion to adjourn; and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurring upon the motion offered by Mr. BISSELL,

Mr. LETCHER demanded the yeas and nays upon the same; but they were not ordered.

The question was then put; and the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

On motion by Mr. SAGE, the House, at three o'clock and thirty minutes, adjourned until tomorrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 20, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

J. W. KELLY.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, early in the session a memorial was presented from J. W. Kelly, of Florida, asking remuneration for an alleged violation of a contract entered into with him by the Post Office Department for carrying the mail from Bainbridge, Georgia, to Appalachicola. That memorial was referred to the Committee on Claims. Subsequently a resolution was adopted by the Senate, inquiring of the Post Office Department if that contract had been annulled; and if so, for what reasons. The response of the Department was received yesterday, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Thus the memorial is in the possession of the Committee on Claims, while the response of the Department, giving information in regard to the claim, is in possession of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I move, therefore, that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of J. W. Kelly, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, which, I presume, is the appropriate committee to take charge of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, I beg leave to present a memorial signed by citizens of Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, praying that the homestead bill may be so amended before its final passage, as to authorize the Treasurer of the United States to refund to each and every former purchaser of any portion of the public domain, not exceeding a quarter section of land, the original cost of that land with interest from the time of purchase. They represent, in the first part of their memorial, that many of our citizens have toiled hard to get sufficient money to purchase one hundred and sixty acres of land, and that we now propose to give the same amount of land to other citizens without demanding any payment. They wish to have the bill so amended as to provide for refunding the amount which has already been paid by those who have purchased public lands. As the subject is already before the Senate, I move that the memorial lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. I present a number of petitions from citizens of different States. I have one petition from one hundred and ten citizens of Indiana; another from one hundred and twenty-five citizens of Indiana; another from one hundred and ten citizens of Ohio; one from twelve citizens of Pennsylvania; one from eighty citizens of Massachusetts; another from forty-eight citizens of New York; one from twenty-seven citizens of Mississippi, and one from one hundred and one citizens of Georgia. All these petitioners pray for the abolition of, as they say, the unconstitutional office of Chaplain to Congress. I do not know whether any such petitions have been heretofore presented at this session, or whether they have been referred to any committee. I doubt whether any similar ones have been presented at this session. I move, therefore, that these petitions lie upon the table for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented a petition of engravers employed in the office of the Coast Survey, praying to be allowed the benefits of the act of 31st August, 1852, granting a percentage to the clerks and messengers in the several Executive Departments at Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RUSK presented a petition of certain residents of the Rio Grande Valley, praying that Brownsville, in the State of Texas, be established the port of entry for the collection district of Brazos de Santiago; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WADE presented resolutions passed by the Presbytery of Trumbull county, Ohio, at its sessions in Warren, April 12, protesting against any enactment by Congress which shall open the way to the extension of slavery into any State or Territory of the United States where it does not now exist; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAWSON presented the petition of Peter Berry, George Poe, jr., Robert P. Dodge, and other citizens of Georgetown, District of Columbia, praying an appropriation to improve the basin of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, between that town and Washington city, and to raise the bridges over the canal; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. SUMNER presented a series of resolutions passed at the annual meeting of the inhabitants of Westport, Massachusetts, protesting against the repeal of that portion of the Missouri compromise by which slavery was prohibited in the territory north of 36° 30'; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of Edward Bartlett and others, who served in the last war with Great Britain, praying to be allowed pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of Thomas Dyer, praying remuneration for clothing lost by the destruction of the United States ship Adams; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TOOMBS presented the memorial of the Hepzibah Baptist Association, of Georgia, praying that measures be taken to secure to American citizens residing or traveling in foreign countries the rights of religious liberty; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GEYER presented a memorial of the Board of Directors of the Mississippi Valley railroad, praying a grant of land to aid in the construction of their railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the memorial of M. Tarver, praying a grant of public lands to the State of Missouri for the establishment and support of a juvenile reform school; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

GEORGIA ON THE SLAVERY QUESTION.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, during my recent absence from this city, resolutions were transmitted to me from the Legislature of the State of Georgia, through the Executive of that State, which I did not intend, nor think it necessary, to submit to the Senate; but, as I am instructed to do so, in consequence of the oft-repeated presentation of petitions on the subject of slavery, I beg leave to present them.

They set forth that the State of Georgia, in solemn convention, has firmly fixed herself upon the principles of the compromise measures of 1850, relating to the subject of slavery in the Territories of the United States, as a final settlement of the agitation of that question, its withdrawal from the Halls of Congress and the political arena, and its reference to the people of the Territories interested therein, and distinctly recognizes in those compromise measures the doctrine, that it is not competent for Congress to impose any restrictions as to the existence of slavery among them, upon the citizens moving into or settling upon the Territories of the Union, acquired or to be hereafter acquired; but that the question, whether slavery shall or shall not form a part of their domestic institutions, is for them alone to determine for themselves. Her present Executive has reiterated and affirmed the same fixed policy in his inaugural address. They therefore resolve:

"That the Legislature of Georgia, as the representatives of the people, speaking their will and expressing their feelings, have had their confidence strengthened in the settled determination of the great body of the northern people to carry out in good faith those principles, in the practical application of them to the bills reported by Mr. Douglas, from the Committee on Territories, in the United States Senate, at the present session, proposing the organization of a territorial government for the Territory of Nebraska. "And be it further resolved, That our Senators in Congress be, and they are hereby, instructed, and our Representatives requested, to vote for and support those principles, and to use all proper means in their power for carrying them out, either as applied to the government of the Territory of Nebraska, or in any other bill for territorial government which may come before them.

"Resolved further, That his Excellency the Governor, be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

I present those resolutions—I do not wish to make any further commentaries on them, but simply to say that they are the decision of the representatives of the people of Georgia, in Legislative Assembly convened. I move that they lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

POST OFFICE AT SAVANNAH.

Mr. DAWSON. I hold in my hand a petition very numerously signed by the merchants and citizens of the city of Savannah, Georgia, asking Congress to make an appropriation for the erection of a post office building in that city. The grounds on which they make this request are these:

The basement of the custom-house is now used as a post office, and is altogether unsuited for it.

1st. It is too contracted even for present business, and is decidedly so, in view of the rapid annual increase of the business and population of the city. I will here take occasion to state that the city of Savannah has nearly doubled her population within the last few years, and is rapidly increasing in numbers.

In the second place, the petitioners state that the present location of the post office is unhealthy.

In the third place, it is too dark, rendering gas-lights over the whole establishment necessary on some days, and in the general delivery room, day and night, indispensable; and thus, also, increasing materially the expense to the department.

Again, when the custom-house was first planned the basement was intended for custom-house stores. The placing the post office there was an after-thought, as is clearly proved by the fact that the architect omitted to make any arrangements for heating and ventilating the same, while ample arrangements were made in all other parts of the building.

And further, the basement of the custom-house is necessary for the convenience of the collector and merchants, as stores for the deposit of goods have to be hired at other points and at heavy expense.

In consideration of all these circumstances, and in view of the fact that the Savannah custom-house cost only $150,000, when some of the cheapest custom-houses built elsewhere, both North and South, have cost $500,000, the petitioners think that it will be vastly advantageous to the Government, and will be a great saving of expense, to appropriate $100,000 for the purpose of building a post office for the convenience of that city. I am also authorized to say, that the city will find a site for the purpose and cede it to the United States. I ask my friend from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to take this petition into consideration. I am satisfied that if he examines all the documents he will come to the conclusion that it would be just and economical on the part of the Government to make the appropriation asked for in the petition. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Adele Sands, widow of Richard M. Sands, of the Army, praying an increase of pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a petition of descendants of officers of the Army of the Revolution, praying that the heirs and descendants of officers of the Revolution who served to the end of that war, may be allowed the half pay for life promised by the resolution of 1780, deducting therefrom the value of the commutation received, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, on the ground that a bill applying to the subject, reported by the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. Evans,] from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, was now pending before the Senate.

It was so ordered.

Mr. TOOMBS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred a bill to authorize the payment of certain claims for depredations and spoiliations during the hostilities with the Creek and Seminole Indians in 1836 and 1837; reported it back without amendment. He also submitted a report upon the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Willard H. Boynton, praying indemnity for merchandise destroyed by the Creek Indians in the year 1836, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of Calvin B. Seymore and Willard H. Boynton, surviving partners of the firm of W. & H. Boynton; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial of Charles Stearns, praying indemnity for expenses, &c., incurred in defending himself against an unjustifiable suit brought against him and others by the United States, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the petition and documents in the case of Seth Ingram, praying to be allowed certain arrears of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SLIDELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill to confirm the claim of William H. Henderson and the heirs of Robert Henderson, to five hundred acres of land in the Bastrop grant; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. BROWN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to grant other lands in lieu of certain sixteenth sections in the State of Mississippi, heretofore disposed of by the United States for other than school purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed the bill from the Senate making a grant of land to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons.

DANIEL NIPPES.

Mr. COOPER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, required to transmit to the Senate all papers, vouchers, &c., relative to the claim of Daniel Nippes, now on file in the Department of War.

JEFFRIES AND SMITH.

Mr. RUSK. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of James Jeffries and Jeremiah M. Smith, have directed me to report a bill for their relief. It is a very small bill; the case is a hard one, and I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to act upon it now.

The bill was accordingly read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Postmaster General to release the parties mentioned, and their guarantors from the penalty incurred by their failure to carry the mail on routes 6268, 6269, 6277, according to the bid offered by them and accepted by the Department; and to refund to them the amount of any fine which has been paid by them in consequence of any failure.

Mr. RUSK. The facts in relation to the case are briefly these: These parties resided in Kentucky, and became bidders for some routes there, and for fourteen in Texas. Their bids were accepted as being the lowest. They went on to Texas, and arranged for all but the three routes specified in the bill; but they ascertained that the distance on those three was about one third more than was stated in the advertisement; so that, they being men of limited means, it was not possible for them to put those routes in operation. The testimony was very clear that the distance advertised for the three routes was two hundred and four miles, and that the actual distance was three hundred and five miles. They therefore failed to put these three routes into operation. The routes which they obtained in Kentucky they did put in operation. The Postmaster General fined them for their failure on the three, and they paid the fines out of the routes which they are now actually carrying on in Kentucky. They are men of limited means, and it is very embarrassing to them. It is a very clear case, in my judgment. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will pass the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MAIL CONTRACT SETTLEMENTS.

Mr. ADAMS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of John R. Jefferson and others, to report a joint resolution authorizing settlements under certain mail contracts. As I shall necessarily be absent from the city for some weeks to come, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it now. If it should lead to any discussion I will consent to let it pass over.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to require the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department, to settle the accounts of the contractors for carrying the mail of the United States, who were ordered by the Postmaster General to suspend a portion of their regular mail service between November 1, 1838, and the 1st of June, 1839, at the pro rata reduction of their contract pay, and credit each one with a sum equal to the amount withheld from his pay under the order of suspension and reduction, and then to certify the amount found to be due to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment. The Auditor, however, is not to allow or certify any case where it is not proved that the services were actually performed during the time the suspension was ordered.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

WILLIAM VAN WART.

Mr. SEWARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to report a bill granting arrears of pension to the representatives of William Van Wart, deceased, which I do, and ask that the report may be printed. I will state to the Senate, that the party, for the relief of whose heirs-at-law the bill is reported, was the one who gave to Paulding, Williams, and Van Wart, the information which put them on the lookout for Major André, on his return from the American lines, after his interview with Arnold. He is dead, and his family are in need of such a provision. Under these circumstances, I ask that the bill may be considered at this time. It only grants the arrears of pension, which the Commissioner of Pensions says ought to have been allowed to them, but which were withheld under existing previous laws for want of evidence. I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WELLER. I shall be compelled to object to its consideration now. I think the Senator from New York, a short time since, reported a bill, and asked for its consideration, without asking that the report accompanying it be printed. Now he makes a report, and moves to have it printed, but, in the meanwhile, wants to have the bill passed. I would rather have the report printed first.

The bill was read a first time by its title, "for the relief of the heirs-at-law of William Van Wart, deceased," and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

ARMY PENSIONS.

Mr. CLAY. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Ann Eliza Childs, widow of General Childs, praying the passage of a general law granting half pay to the widows of all officers of the Army who died while in the service of the country, have had the same under consideration, and have directed me to report a general bill providing half pay for all widows and minor children of officers or privates in the Army of the United States who may die in the line of their duty in the public service.

I will state to the Senate that, as is known perhaps to most members, by a general act, passed in 1837, I think, this provision was made for the widows and minor children of all officers, seamen, and marines in the Navy, but no such provision is made for any widow or orphan of an officer or private in the service of the Army, unless he died of wounds received, or diseases contracted during some wars since 1790. Now, the committee concluded, in order to equalize the pension system, to report the same bounty to the widows and minor children of officers of the Army, which is extended to the widows and minor children of officers of the Navy. This bill should be passed, or we should abolish the former act. They have, therefore, instructed me to report a bill according to the prayer of the petitioner.

The bill, in addition to an act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I move that the Senate now take up for consideration the bill "to provide for the survey of the public lands in New Mexico, and for other purposes," which has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands. It is important that it should be passed now, because a day has been fixed for the consideration of territorial business in the House of Representatives, and the Senate should pass the bill as soon as possible, in order that it may reach the House before the "territorial day." I appeal to the Senate, therefore, to take up and consider the bill now.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The Committee on Public Lands have reported an entire substitute for the bill which was originally introduced by the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS.] The substitute was drawn up by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, after a conference with the Committees on Public Lands of the two Houses of Congress, and received the unanimous approbation of the two committees. The amendment of the committee is to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a surveyor general for New Mexico, whose power, and authority, duties, compensation, and allowances for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, &c., shall be the same as now provided by law for the surveyor general of California; and he shall locate his office, from time to time, at such places as may be directed by the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That to every white male American citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such, over the age of twenty-one years, who was residing in said Territory prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, there shall be, and hereby is, donated one half section, or three hundred and twenty acres of land, if single, but if married, one section, or six hundred and forty acres, and to each white male American citizen, who shall have removed or shall remove to and settle in said Territory between the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, and the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, there shall, in like manner, be donated one quarter section or one hundred and sixty acres, if a single man, or if married, one half section or three hundred and twenty acres, on condition of actual settlement and cultivation for not less than four years: Provided, however, That each of said donations shall include the actual settlement and improvement of the donee, and shall be selected by legal subdivisions within three months after the survey of the land where the settlement was made before the survey, and where the settlement was made after the survey, then within three months after the settlement has been made; and all persons failing to designate the boundaries of their claims within that time shall forfeit all right to the same.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That on proof of settlement and cultivation, as required by this act, to the satisfaction of the surveyor general, or other officer designated by law for that purpose, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, a certificate shall be issued to the party entitled, on presentation of which, if approved by the Secretary of the Interior, a patent shall issue thereon: Provided, however, That on the death of any such settler before the completion of the four years occupancy and cultivation required by this act, the right shall descend to his heirs-at-law, who shall be entitled to a certificate and patent as aforesaid, on proof, as before provided, of continued occupancy and cultivation by such settler to the time of his death.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That none of the provisions of this act shall extend to mineral or school lands, salines, military or other reservations, or lands settled on and occupied for purposes of trade and commerce and not for agriculture, and all legal subdivisions so settled on and occupied, in whole or in part, for purposes of trade and commerce and not for agriculture, shall be subject to the provisions of the act of the twenty-third of May, eighteen hundred and forty-four, in relation to town sites on the public lands, whether so settled and occupied before or after the survey of said lands, except that said lands shall be donated instead of being sold.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That sections sixteen and thirty-six in each township in said Territory shall be reserved for the use of schools therein, and when either of said sections, or any part thereof, shall be taken by a claim originating under this act, before the survey of the lands, other lands, in lieu thereof, shall be selected by the Governor of the Territory, and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That a quantity of land equal to two townships shall be, and the same are hereby, granted to said Territory, for the establishment of a university therein, to be selected under the direction of the Legislature thereof, in legal subdivisions of not less than one half section, and to be disposed of as said Legislature shall direct.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That any of the lands, not taken under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the operations of the preemption act of September fourth, eighteen hundred and forty-one, as extended to California, and any person claiming a donation under this act shall be permitted to enter the land claimed by him at any time prior to the four years' occupancy and cultivation required, by paying therefor at the rate of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and proving occupancy and cultivation up to the time of such payment.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the surveyor general, under such instructions as may be given by the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to lands under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico, and for this purpose may issue notices, summons witnesses, administer oaths, and do and perform all other necessary acts in the premises. He shall make a full report on all such claims as originated before the cession of the territory to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo of eighteen hundred and forty-eight, denoting the various grades of title, with his decision as to the validity or invalidity of each of the same, under the laws, usages, and customs of the country before its cession to the United States, and shall also make a report in regard to all pueblos existing in the Territory, showing the extent and locality of each, stating the number of inhabitants in the said pueblos, respectively, the nature of their titles to the land; such report to be made according to the form which may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, which report shall be laid before Congress for such action thereon as may be deemed just and proper, with a view to confirm bona fide grants, and give full effect to the treaty of eighteen hundred and forty-eight, between the United States and Mexico, and until the final action of Congress on such claims, all lands covered thereby shall be reserved from sale, or other disposal by the Government, and shall not be subject to the donations granted by the previous provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That full power and authority are hereby given to the Secretary of the Interior to issue all needful rules and regulations for fully carrying into effect the several provisions of this act.

Mr. SHIELDS. I introduced the original bill; and on my motion it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I have examined the substitute of the committee, and I find it to be quite an improvement upon the original bill. I think it much better adapted to the condition of this distant Territory than the original bill. I am, therefore, decidedly in favor of the substitute.

Mr. HUNTER. I am not sure that I understand exactly the provisions of this amendment, but it seems to me from hearing it read, that it gives away all the lands in this Territory to actual settlers. It gives some persons as much as six hundred and forty acres.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Its provisions are precisely the same as those which were made in the case of Oregon.

Mr. SHIELDS. I can state to the honorable Senator from Virginia, that the provisions of this amendment are the same as were made in the Oregon and California bills; and the lands in New Mexico are much less valuable than those in either California or Oregon. It does not give any additional land.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed; and its title was amended so as to read, "A bill to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STUART. As there seems to be no other business now before the Senate, and as the hour has arrived at which, by the agreement or understanding made yesterday, we should go into Executive session, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in Executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 20, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the question upon the motion to recommit the resolution for extending the existing contract for carrying the mail in Alabama. The question pending is the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; and upon that question the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] is entitled to the floor.

CLERK FOR A COMMITTEE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] to yield me the floor for a moment. I will not consume much of his time.

Mr. GREY. I will yield, if it be not taken out of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on Territories have found it impossible to properly discharge their duties as connected with the various matters referred to them by the House, unless they can have the assistance, for a short time, of the services of a clerk. They have asked me to ask the unanimous consent of the House to empower them to employ a clerk for the period of thirty days. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be authorized to employ a clerk, at a price not exceeding four dollars per day for the time said clerk is actually engaged: And provided, Said clerk is not to be employed beyond the period of thirty days.

Mr. MURRAY. I object to the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is impossible for the committee to get along without a clerk for the time specified; and I am sure the gentleman will withdraw the objection, if he considers that the resolution authorizes the committee to employ a clerk for only thirty days.

Mr. BISSELL. It is a very modest request, and I hope it will be granted.

Mr. MURRAY. I withdraw the objection.

The resolution was then introduced and adopted.

Mr. GREY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. GREY. I hope the gentleman will allow the resolution to be read for information, and I am sure he will then have no objection to it.

Mr. HARRIS. I will withdraw my call, provided the resolution which the gentleman wishes to introduce is not intended to delay action upon the bill which was under consideration yesterday.

Mr. GREY. It is not designed to do so; and if there is any objection to it, I will not say a word upon it.

The resolution was then read for information, as follows:

1. Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to report to the House of Representatives why the mail service was not "let" and contracted for on the river routes, 1st. From Louisville, Kentucky, to Evansville, Indiana, and back, daily; 2d. From Evansville to Cairo, Illinois, and back, daily; 3d. From Cairo to St. Louis, Missouri, and back, daily; according to the advertisement of 31st December, 1852, and the 11th section of the act of Congress, approved 31st August, 1852, which made it the "duty of the Postmaster General to issue proposals and contract for the transportation of a daily mail" on those routes, "on suitable and safe steamboats." The bids, by terms of the advertisement, to be received in the Post Office Department "until three o'clock p. m., of the 10th day of February, 1853, to be decided by 1st of March, and service to commence on 1st July following, and continue for four years."

2. Resolved, That he furnish copies of all the contracts and bids, and "proposals" for contracts and bids, which have been made with, proposed to, or received from Thomas Shirlock and Z. M. Shirley, or either of them, or with, to, or from any other person or persons, together with copies of all the amendments, alterations, privileges, extensions, or restrictions authorized and permitted, or assumed and exercised, and of all orders for additional compensation, except what appears on the face of the contract or contracts, on this said route from Louisville to St. Louis, or any part of it, since March, 1851. Also, the greatest number of "mail messengers," "route agents," local agents, and employees, that now are, or have at any one time during the above period, been engaged in, or connected with, the service on that route, (exclusive of postmasters)—at what points engaged, and the salary per quarter or per annum of each one of them; also, who are now the contractors from Louisville to St. Louis, and in what manner each and all of said contracts were made, whether privately or by being let to the lowest bidder; also, what intermediate offices between Louisville and St. Louis have been authorized to be supplied by each contract on that route since March, 1851, and how often per week each and every one of those offices were to be supplied under those contracts or arrangements since March, 1851.

3. Resolved, That he furnish copies of all orders, rules, or regulations adopted by him, which tends to prevent or deny to members of Congress the privilege of going into the public rooms of the Post Office Department, and then and there examining, with assistance of the clerks, the "public records" under the charge of said clerks.

4. Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to abolish all rules, orders, or regulations, which prevents or denies the privilege to the members of Congress of going into the public rooms in the Post Office Department, and then and there examining such public records in the presence, and with the assistance of the clerk having charge of them, as such member may desire. That he also abolish all rules, orders, or regulations by which the clerks, or either of them, are prevented or restrained from affording to any member such information during those examinations as the public records of the Post Office Department will enable him to give.

Mr. DEAN. I think that resolution ought not to be adopted. I must object.

Mr. GREY. Which one does the gentleman object to?

Mr. DEAN. The last one. The one which proposes to interfere in the Postmaster General's disposition of the rooms in his Department.

Mr. GREY. If the gentleman objects to only one, I hope the others may be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions cannot be received, unless by unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. DEAN. I must object.

Mr. PHELPS. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. DEAN. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, that next Monday will be resolution day. If he will offer it then, I will not object.

Mr. GREY. I cannot offer it now, of course, if the gentleman objects. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes.

Mr. GREY then resumed and concluded his remarks in explanation of the nature of the contract which was proposed to be extended by this bill. He showed that the amount proposed to be given was higher than was allowed for a greater amount of service by other contractors. He said that there were eastern men who had actually proposed to take this contract at $44,740, for which it was proposed by this resolution to give $60,000. [See Appendix for his remarks.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama, obtained the floor.

Mr. GREY. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to allow me to correct one remark. I said this bid was for $40,000. I understand it was $44,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I would ask the gentleman if that included steamboat service between Mobile and Stockton?

Mr. GREY. It did include steamboat service and all.

Mr. HARRIS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I seldom intrude myself upon the House, and never unless it is from a sense of duty. And from a conviction of that kind, I now propose to make a few remarks, chiefly in reply to what has fallen from my honorable friend from Kentucky, who has just taken his seat.

Sir, the person who is perhaps most deeply interested in the disposition which is to be made of this resolution, is my neighbor and constituent. He has been placed by one of the Departments of this Government in such a position that if this resolution be defeated, he will be, if not entirely ruined, at least seriously injured, and I propose to make this apparent before I take my seat.

My honorable friend from Kentucky, I say in all kindness to him, has brought a degree of opposition to this resolution which seems to me to be totally disproportionate to the object which it contemplates. The gentleman seems to be very bitter in his opposition; and, if I may be allowed in kindness to say, his opposition seems rather to be directed to the Post Office Department than to the resolution under consideration itself.

Mr. Speaker, I seek not to make myself a party to any controversy between the Postmaster General and my honorable friend from Kentucky. I wish not to mix myself up in any such matter. All I ask is, that if the gentleman from Kentucky comes here with prejudice in his heart against the Post Office Department, that that prejudice may not be allowed to operate to the injury of these innocent contractors who are likely to be ruined by the failure of the House to pass the resolution.

Mr. GREY. I ask the gentleman from Alabama, to allow me to say, that I assure him that I have not the least prejudice against these contractors.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly not. I did not understand the gentleman as having any.

Mr. GREY. Nor have I any personal prejudice against the Postmaster General. But I have a prejudice against, and I am opposed to allowing, an officer of this Government the exercise of discretionary power, such as the Postmaster General has exercised in this case.

Mr. HARRIS. I will say to the gentleman that I do not stand here as an apologist of the Postmaster General. I am clothed with no such authority; I invite no such responsibility; I aspire to no such dangerous preeminence; nor shall I go one step further in his defense than I deem absolutely necessary in justice to these contractors.

Now, sir, I do not propose to follow my honorable friend through all the sinuosities of his argument. He has made two vehement speeches in opposition to this resolution, one when it was before the House on a former occasion, and the other commenced yesterday and finished to-day. I do not propose to follow him. In the brief period of forty minutes, in which I wish to close my remarks, I could not follow him. I wish to confine myself to what I consider the gist of this matter—the contract. I will not go back beyond the period of the contract to investigate whether or not the head of the Post Office Department has done right or wrong. I call the attention of the House to this matter; and how stands it?

But, I will first say, that my friend from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] spoke yesterday of the character of this House; that it was Democratic; and he appealed to the majority here not to dispose of the matter on principles of party. By way of giving force to his appeal, he said that he had never been considered too good a Whig, for he had run against the organization of his own party. Now, I mention this simply by way of reply, that I am a good Democrat. I respect the organization of all parties; and yet do I stand here, in the midst of a Democratic majority, without appealing to Democrats on the score of party. I do not ask them to vote for this, because it is recommended by a Democratic Postmaster General, and I appeal with confidence to Whigs, to say that they will not reject it, because it has the recommendation of a Democratic Postmaster General.

My friend, in the first speech he made, seemed to me to endeavor to interweave something like prejudice against this measure, by intimating that there was favoritism on the part of the Post Office Department; that a previous special mail agent had become the beneficiary of this contract. When we come to look into this matter, we find that the very individual of whom my honorable friend speaks is, as I can testify, as good a Whig as ever trod the soil of Alabama. The other is a Democrat; but they are both honorable men—men of enterprise, and who are and have been connected with the staging interest of the country. Mr. Metcalfe, the Whig, fell under the guillotine of this Administration; and after he was decapitated, he and Mr. Powell came together and made this contract. There is no favoritism in it. The Postmaster General was animated by higher considerations—considerations which looked to the public interests of the country, as I think that I shall be able to show. How stands this matter; then, sir? I propose to state the facts, divested of all the extraneous matter to which my honorable friend has alluded.

This contract which is proposed to be extended, is for carrying the mail between Montgomery and Mobile, a distance of some one hundred and sixty or one hundred and ninety miles. It is in the line of the great thoroughfare between the great cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, and Augusta, to the north, and to the south of the great cities of Mobile and New Orleans, and all the south. I say, sir, that it is a link of this great chain of inter-communication. One of the most important mails of the country passes over it, perhaps the most important. Well, in consequence of the extension of railroad improvements, the reduction of the postage on printed mail matter, the increase of population within the last few years, the mails have become so cumbrous that it is impossible that a four-horse stage coach, which was the specific contract for that route, could convey this mail. This mail supplies New Orleans; supplies Pensacola, one of your naval stations; supplies Alabama, portion of Mississippi, South Arkansas; and supplies the country for a considerable distance up the Mississippi river. It is an important mail—important to the people, and most especially important to the commercial and mercantile interests of the country.

My honorable friend says, that sometime back the mail passed over this route for $36,000 per annum. So it did. During the last year, in consequence of the accumulation of mail matter at Montgomery, where it is piled up in masses to such an extent that a house would not contain it, where it is put on the side-walk, obstructing the passages in the city, as I have seen it, it has become necessary that additional service should be performed.

My honorable friend reads the law, and he tells you that these contractors agreed to carry the whole mail, and that when a man makes a contract of that kind he must carry the whole mail; if he has a two-horse stage coach, and a steamboat comes along, the two-horse stage coach must take the steamboat load, for that is the interpretation.

Mr. GREY. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said that if the mail was more than the contractor could carry, the Postmaster General must release him. The law provides that his contract shall be forfeited.

Mr. HARRIS. I will read the law myself. My honorable friend is mistaken upon that point. That is not the law. Whenever a contractor abandons his contract, or whenever the Postmaster General feels it to be his duty to dismiss him, he can do it. If the contractor abandons his contract, then the Postmaster General must re-advertise the service. But in a case like this, there is no necessity for a re-advertisement. The law does not require it. The Department has never practiced upon it. But here is the law, and the reason of it will address itself at once to the good sense of every intelligent man. What is it? It is, that whenever it becomes necessary for the service of the Post Office Department, or for the postal service of the country, that additional service shall be put upon a line, the Postmaster General is clothed with authority to put additional service upon it, and it is limited only by the question of pay; he cannot go beyond the pro rata pay for the original contract. That is the substance of the law.

Mr. GREY. Will the gentleman now allow me to read a portion of the contract made by these very contractors?

Mr. HARRIS. I know what the contract is. The gentleman has read it once.

Mr. GREY. I have not read this part of it in relation to the service. It says, that the Postmaster General may discontinue or curtail the service, in order to place on the route a greater degree of service, or whenever the public interests require such curtailment or discontinuance, and that the contractor shall be paid one month's pay.

Mr. HARRIS. I know that. Certainly the Postmaster General has reserved the right to himself, under the law, of annulling this contract altogether, by paying the contractors one month's extra pay. He does that in every contract. There is not a contract made in the Union that is not precisely in the terms which have been read by the gentleman. But let me turn to the law. Here is the law—the law made by you, and it clothes the Postmaster General with authority, in the first place to annul a contract if he thinks proper, and in the next place, to put additional service on the route, and in the event he does order additional service, he can pay nothing more than pro rata for that additional service. That is the law.

Now, what are the facts in this case? I say, that that very provision of the law contemplated that such an exigency might arise in the postal arrangements of the country, and it therefore provided that the Postmaster General should add to the service. Well, sir, precisely such an exigency did arise in this case; and in rebuttal to the declaration of my friend that this service has heretofore been performed by Wade, Allen & Co., and that there is now no necessity for extra pay, I need only refer to the communication of the Postmaster General, which comes here in answer to the resolution of my friend, for ample evidence to show that this exigency contemplated by law had arisen. What is it?

I presume that a great majority of the members have read it, as it is found in document eighty-nine. I will not consume the time of the House by reading it. In the communication signed by four special mail agents of the Department, addressed to the Department, I find the following:

"We are satisfied that the mails have nearly doubled in the last twelve months, and that something should be done, with as little delay as possible, to relieve said line by putting on an additional daily line of coaches."

This communication is signed by four special mail agents, who are upon the ground, acquainted with the necessities of the service and the geography of the country; and this is the information which they communicate to the Post Office Department. But this is not all. My friend from Kentucky, [Mr. GREY,] in the first speech he made the other day, states that this was a secret and private contract, and that the thing was done in a corner. It was done from the house-top. I have read from the report of the special mail agents; and in the very same pamphlet containing it, to which I call the attention of the Speaker and the House, I find a memorial, signed by the leading citizens of Mobile, asking for additional service upon this line. Not only so, but I call the attention of the House to a memorial, contained in the same pamphlet, from the Chamber of Commerce in the city of New Orleans, asking for this additional service. The newspaper press in that region of the country teemed with articles upon the subject of mail irregularities and mail obstructions occasioned by the accumulation of mail matter.

Mr. COBB. My colleague says that the contract was not a secret and private one, and that the thing was not done in a corner. I ask him if he will read the proposition from a number of steamboat men?

Mr. HARRIS. I was just coming to that. I think I have shown, and produced evidence, that the exigency contemplated by the law had arisen, and that the mail could not be conveyed under the contract requiring the mail to be carried in single four-horse coaches. The exigency arose, and the service had to be increased. What does the Postmaster General do? Did he contract privately and secretly, and make a clandestine arrangement, as the honorable gentleman intimated? Not at all. Mr. Zevely, an agent of the Post Office Department, was sent to southern Alabama, and his communication is contained in the same document called for by my honorable friend from Kentucky, [Mr. GREY,] It seems that the Postmaster General sent agents for the purpose of finding out the best terms upon which an arrangement could be made. What was the result? I find in this same pamphlet a communication from the steamboat captains of the river, and also communications from the contractors of the land service. Mark you, here is a communication from stage-men of Montgomery and Mobile, upon a route running parallel with the river. There is also a letter from Messrs. Waring & Co., addressed to the Postmaster General, in which they say:

"That they have had a convention of steamboat captains to deliberate upon this matter, and let the Postmaster General know the best terms upon which this thing could be done. Their proposition is to carry the mail for $100,000, with the privilege of an extended schedule."

That is what the steamboat captains say, in solemn convention assembled. Let me read what the contractors for the land service say. Here is the correspondence contained in this same document, called for by my friend from Kentucky, of Beman, Ellsworth & Co., the largest and most responsible mail contract firm in the South. They say to the Postmaster General that they will undertake it, and that the best terms upon which they will undertake it is $72,000; and mark that this is upon the condition of the privilege of having the contract extended for four years. Now, sir, there was the proposition made, and what do Messrs. Powell and Metcalfe do? They propose that they will do it for the same rate of compensation that they were to get for the original line. But the special agents of the Post Office Department said that the service ought to be doubled. These parties said they would do double service for double pay. The Postmaster General said he would not give that, but that he would give two thirds pro rata compensation. What said the contractors to that? They answered that they could not afford to do it upon such terms. They agreed to do it even upon such terms, provided that the Postmaster General would recommend to Congress to extend their contract for four years. Mark, this occurred only last July. This additional service commenced on the first day of November. They were obliged to new stock a route one hundred and sixty miles in length with horses, coaches, and everything else necessary for the service. They said they could not do that for a term of only seven months, the period which elapsed before the contract would expire; but that if the Postmaster General would recommend to Congress to extend the contract for four years, they would do it.

Mr. GREY. I understand the gentleman to say that when they proposed to give to those contractors the route at the same price at which Wade Allen had had it, they said they could not undertake to do it for the seven months, the unexpired time of their contract. But if the gentleman will look at the contract, he will see that they did undertake to do it. They did contract to do it at the same price, and the contract is now among the documents of the Post Office Department.

Mr. HARRIS. I know that; but subsequent to the time to which the gentleman refers, it became necessary to add a double daily service. The Department said we require a double service, and the contractors replied that they would do it for double pay—double the price, and we will double the labor. But the Postmaster General was not willing to do that, but he proposed to pay them two thirds pro rata compensation, and they accepted upon the terms which had been offered by the next lowest bidder, $72,000. The contract was closed.

Now, why is it that Ellsworth & Co. would not agree to do it for $72,000, for the unexpired term of seven months? Why was it that Powell and Metcalfe would not except of it upon any other ground than the extension of their contract? The answer will be found in the statement which I shall make of the expenses which they were obliged to incur. What were they? They had to restock their road, which is one hundred and sixty miles in length. Their horses were jaded and broken down, and they purchased two hundred horses. They built several bridges, one of which cost them, out of their private purse, $1,500. They erected workshops for the repairs of their coaches, and blacksmith shops for repairs of damages. You will see that these latter expenses were necessary from the fact that this road runs through an uninhabited region for seventy miles. They have had to erect permanent stables and workshops. They have purchased for their original stock fifty sets of harness, at fifty dollars a piece, amounting to $2,500. They purchased their stock and planted them upon the road, and made these expensive investments, and they did it all in view of an extension of their contract by Congress. They did it—for permit me to say that these are not men of extensive means—upon borrowed capital, upon the good faith, upon the good conscience, of Congress. They did it in a spirit of generous confidence upon Congress.

Now, sir, how stands this case? My only purpose is to present what I consider to be the kernel of the case—the gist of the matter, rejecting all extraneous consideration. I say, how stands the case? Sir, in good faith, in good conscience, in equity, this Congress is pledged to the extension of this contract.

Mr. Speaker, I have had placed in my hand a note from a gentleman upon this floor, which I beg leave to introduce, as evidence in the matter, in defense of the Postmaster General, to show that he has only performed his duty in reference to the letting of this contract. It is from the Hon. J. VANSANT, and is as follows:

"I know that the Postmaster General was active to the end that a contractor might be secured to perform the service, and sent for a large and distinguished mail contractor at Baltimore, and importuned him to stock the road, to convey the mail. The latter refused, upon the ground that no reasonable amount of pay would be sufficient compensation for such heavy service as is required from Montgomery to Mobile."

And yet, in the face of all this, when these men have come forward, as I said, relying upon the good faith of Congress to protect them in the immense investments which they have been obliged to make, amounting to $30,000, gentlemen oppose the extension of this contract. Sir, the law is not now as it once was, when the successor of a contractor was bound to take the stock of that contractor at a reasonable price; but if this contract goes into the hands of other contractors, their stock will all be left upon their hands. Many of their investments are of a permanent character, consisting not only of coaches, but in workshops, which must be nearly a total loss to them. They will be nearly or wholly ruined; and why? Because, in a spirit of generous confidence, relying upon a contract made by an officer of the Government, who is a representative of Congress, they made these investments. I said, a moment since, that Congress are in equity bound to carry out this contract. It may be that contractors can be obtained now for a less amount than this resolution proposes to pay; and why? These men did not have the usual notice for making preparations for this service; they did not wait for the regular day of letting, but they came forward when mail bags were lying piled up in heaps at Montgomery, and the transportation stopped.

Now, sir, how is it? The law of Congress has clothed the Postmaster General with power at his discretion, whenever the service requires it, to extend contracts, and to increase them. He has the discretionary power to authorize additional service, and wherever the necessity arises he would neglect his duty if he did not do it. Then, sir, he had the right to do it. The exigency arose, and he was bound to act. How did he act? Did he act rightly? He ought to have so acted. It was his duty to act rightly. What was right? To get responsible contractors on the best possible terms? Did he do it? Does not the testimony show it? What more could the Postmaster General do? What less will you give those contractors than an extension of this contract when they came forward, as I a moment since remarked, at a crisis in the public service, only seven months anterior to the expiration of the contract term, and made the lowest bid that could be possibly procured.

Now what is the predicament in which these men are placed? This resolution was introduced into the Senate. It passed that body, in pursuance of a special recommendation of the Postmaster General, contained in his general report to Congress, which I hold in my hand, and, as I learn, without a dissenting voice. It came here, was referred to one of the standing committees, reported back, and recommended to the favorable action of the House. That is the way the thing stands here. When the resolution came here from the Senate we wanted it acted on. Why? Because the period of letting contracts was at hand. These gentlemen are men engaged in the mail contract service. They wanted to know what their fate would be. They wanted to know whether Congress would ratify this matter. My honorable friend from Kentucky would not let us have action. He moved its reference to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. We wanted action then? It was but just and fair to these contractors that they should be put loose before the period of bidding was over; but, as I have said, by the action of my honorable friend, they were prevented attaining their object. It was sent to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. The day for bidding has passed. There stand these contractors—men who have had the contract, men who have already contracted with the Post Office Department for it. They were placed in this predicament: If they bid for this contract, they were compelled to abandon their contract with the Department. They could not put in a bid there, and with any conscience ask Congress to extend this contract. What have they done? They, in a spirit of reliance on the good faith of Congress, determined not to bid. They did not bid; and they now leave this whole matter to the equity, good conscience, and sense of justice which may control the deliberations and the action of this body.

Mr. COBB. I would ask my colleague to yield me the floor, that I may say three words.

Mr. HARRIS. Only three?

Mr. COBB. May be four or five. [Laughter.] I have done injustice to this case, perhaps, and I want to set myself right.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. COBB. In a conversation with several gentlemen on this floor, when the resolution now under consideration was on the Speaker's table, it seeming to be for the relief of Alabamians, and as I was myself a Representative from Alabama, without investigating the matter, but with the lights I had before me then, I stated that I thought it was wrong. I now intend to do justice, so far as that declaration is concerned; I am bound to do to-day as I did yesterday when I ascertained that I was not in the right; I back out from that declaration of the resolution being wrong. When the question came up for full discussion and fair consideration, as I do in every case where I am called to vote, I investigated it with the utmost of the limited ability which I possess. I investigated this matter; and after full conference with persons who are well informed in relation to it, and with all the facts I could collect bearing upon the question, I have come to the conclusion that my first opinion was wrong, and that this resolution ought to pass. I think it is due to the persons interested in this matter, due to myself, and in order to present the question fairly before those with whom I conversed when this subject first came up, that they may not say that an Alabamian is opposed to the resolution, and consequently it must be wrong, that I should make this explanation. I now take back what I said before, and I shall support the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Will the gentleman permit me to say a word or two?

Mr. HARRIS. I will yield to the gentleman for a minute or two.

Mr. JONES. The House is aware that when this bill came from the Senate, and when it was attempted to be put upon its passage by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] I objected to its passage, and advocated its reference to the committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It is possible that, from the fact of my location, and the fact that my constituents are almost entirely supplied by this route, the suggestions which I made the other day may have had some influence upon the decision of the House at that time. I am glad that the course was then pursued of referring the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I confess that I was somewhat influenced in my course on that occasion by the fact that I do not approve generally of the course of the Postmaster General, at least so far as my constituents are concerned, and I felt disposed to hold him to a strict accountability.

I have investigated this matter, and, in the language of the gentleman from Alabama, who has just taken his seat, I confess myself wrong, and I am willing to take back what I then said.

I will state, further, that I believe it is the duty of this House not to ruin these contractors by refusing to pass this resolution, but that, on the contrary, it is a duty which we owe to them and to the public service to extend their contract.

It is apparent, it seems to me, from the testimony which has been adduced here, that this contract could not be secured for a less sum to have it efficiently performed. We all know that the mail line from Montgomery to Mobile carries perhaps more mail matter than any other route of the same length in the United States. It is also a fact that it requires not only stage coaches, but also a steamboat, to carry this mail; and the whole of this service is now performed for $60,000.

Well, there is another point in this case which had a material influence on my judgment the other day, and which I am now disposed to correct, because I believe I gave a wrong interpretation to the law. As I stated the other day, there are two species of contracts—one is called "specific service," and the other "star bids." Now, a "star bid" is where a party agrees to carry the whole mail on a certain route for a certain sum of money; and it matters not how large that mail may be, he is still required to carry it, but he is not required to carry it in any particular way. It would appear from the contract, as read by the gentleman from Kentucky, that the person is required to carry the whole mail in stage coaches, if he agrees to carry it in that specific mode.

Mr. HARRIS. I have but a moment left, and my time will allow me to make only a single remark. I have endeavored to present what I conceive to be the merits of this case. My friend from Kentucky speaks of the underbidding which has been offered under this contract with Powell.

Mr. GREY. I said that it was not a legal bid according to the advertisement.

Mr. HARRIS. It is a legal bid, and a contract made with the Department under the law. The resolution is no contract at all. It simply calls upon Congress to vest the Postmaster General with authority to extend the contract, provided he believes it will comport with the public interests. Inasmuch as these contractors have been cut off from the privilege of bidding, it is equivalent to a mere proposition to place them in the category of bidders, that they may have a fair chance. I could reply more fully, and, as I think, conclusively, to the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, but I have not the time to do it now. This subject, I presume, has been fully discussed, and I presume that every member of the House has made up his mind in regard to it. Inasmuch as there is a great anxiety to dispose of this matter, I shall move the previous question, provided it is not deemed unfair.

Mr. GREY. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS] allow me to call his attention to the law to be found on the forty-third page of the Post Office Laws and Regulations; which reads as follows:

"And whenever it shall become necessary to change the terms of any existing contract in any other manner than that designated in this act, or to enter into a contract for the transportation of the mail at any other time than at the annual letting, the Postmaster General shall give notice in one newspaper published at Washington city, and in one newspaper published as near as may be to the route on which the services are to be performed, for at least four weeks before changing or making such contract, inviting proposals therefor; which proposals shall be received and opened, and such proceedings thereon had in all things as at the annual lettings: Provided, however, That the Postmaster General may make temporary contracts until a regular letting can take place."

Mr. HARRIS. I dare say that the law has no application at all to the case under consideration. I have read the law which does apply to it, and it clothes the Postmaster General with power to add additional service when the exigencies of the service require it. The resolution only proposes to carry out a contract already existing. I understand that the motion which will be first put to the House is upon the motion of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to recommit this bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

I will only say to those who feel disposed to advance this bill, and even to its enemies, who are in favor of disposing of the matter, that when the motion is put to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, we can vote it down, and then proceed to vote upon the bill. The chairman of the committee, [Mr. OLDS,] who made the motion for the purpose only of saving the position of this bill, and to prevent it from going to the lower orders of business upon the Speaker's table, is not now in his seat. Were he here, he would withdraw the motion; but as he is not, we must vote upon it, and can vote it down, and then proceed to action upon the bill itself.

Mr. GROW. I have asked the indulgence of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS] merely to explain a point which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] seems to insist on, and that is, that a mail contractor is bound by his contract to carry all the mail on his route. There is but one bid recognized by the Post Office Department which requires a contractor to carry all the mail matter, and that is what is called a "star bid." In that he is bound to carry the mails with safety, certainty, and dispatch; and he must carry the whole mail. But if he specifies in his bid the mode of carrying the mail, he is only bound to carry a reasonable quantity consistent with the mode of conveyance designated. If he contracts to transport the mail with a one-horse conveyance, he is bound to carry only such a quantity as is reasonable for such a mode of service. If the Post Office Department is satisfied that the quantity which is required to be carried is too large for the mode of service specified, then it is the duty of the Postmaster General to supply the ways and means of carrying the balance.

Mr. TRACY. As my name has been mentioned in connection with this matter of bids, I will simply explain what I know about the subject. A constituent of mine, one Daniel P. Kingsley, who has been long successfully engaged in the business of staging, and who is a gentleman and a man of responsibility, made a bid for this route, agreeably to the existing contract, for $44,740, by which bid he offered to carry the mail precisely as is done under the contract which is now proposed to be extended, but in one hour shorter time.

Mr. HARRIS. If this proposition is rejected, and these gentlemen are defeated, they will stand to-morrow just where they stand to-day. But look at the condition of these contractors, who have gone into this matter, relying upon a recommendation to Congress to extend the contract. I have already shown the great expenditures which they have been obliged to make to carry out their arrangement with the Post Office Department, and it is unnecessary to say more about it. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. GREY. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw the call for the previous question to allow me one word?

Mr. HARRIS. I think the gentleman has already said enough upon this subject.

Mr. GREY. I ask it as a matter of courtesy. I will renew the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I would inquire of the Chair how much time I have yet?

The SPEAKER. Eleven minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. I am anxious to have this resolution disposed of and passed. Unless it receives immediate action, and is disposed of before the 25th of this month, it will be entirely useless to the parties whom it is proposed to relieve.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman that discussion is not in order, as there is a motion pending to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. GREY. I again ask the gentleman to withdraw his call, to allow me to read a statement from an official record of the Post Office Department?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama having made a demand for the previous question, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SEWARD] having moved to lay the bill upon the table, both the call and the motion must be withdrawn before discussion will be in order.

Mr. SEWARD. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not like to be discourteous; but I do not feel at liberty to withdraw the demand. I must insist upon it.

The question now being upon the motion to lay the resolution upon the table,

Mr. SEWARD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. LILLY and COX were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 41; a further count not being demanded.

So the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit that the previous question has been demanded, and that the motion of the gentleman from Georgia is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been demanded but not seconded; and the morning hour having expired, a motion to proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table is, under the rule, in order.

Mr. SEWARD. I will withdraw the motion. I do it to show the gentleman from Alabama that I do not wish to embarrass his resolution. I appealed to the gentleman to allow me ten minutes to speak upon the resolution, and he would not do it. I will, however, not make any factious opposition, and I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WHEELER. I renew the motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The question was taken; and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. GREY. Has the previous question been seconded upon this resolution?

The SPEAKER. It has not. It has been demanded, however.

Mr. GREY. Have I the right to say anything upon it?

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not debatable, the previous question having been demanded.

Mr. GREY. Then I appeal to the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HARRIS. I would if I thought it was the wish of the House; but I do not think it is.

Mr. DEAN. I demand tellers on the second to the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. JONES, of Louisiana, and DENT were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 41.

So there was a second; and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The question was then taken on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; and it was disagreed to.

The resolution was then ordered to a third reading, and was subsequently read the third time.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama, called for the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

The question was put on seconding the demand for the previous question; and, on a division, there were—ayes 76, noes 35; no quorum voting.

Mr. ROBBINS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL, and JONES of Louisiana, were appointed.

The question was again put; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes not counted.

So the previous question received a second.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion; and it was agreed to.

The main question was then ordered to be put, being "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. GREY demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Banks, Barksdale, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Bissell, Boyce, Bridges, Caskie, Cobb, Colquitt, Craige, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dent, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, John M. Elliott, Etheridge, Fenton, Florence, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Henn, Hibbard, Hunt, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Latham, Lindsley, Lyon, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Smith Miller, Murray, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rufin, Seymour, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Vansant, Warren, John Wentworth, Witte, and Daniel B. Wright—82.

So the resolution was passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I have a memorial which I desire to present to the House, signed by one hundred and twenty-four citizens of Washington and Alexandria, against the military superintendence of the public works.

Mr. BISSELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] can present it at the Clerk's desk, under the rules.

Mr. SMITH. I desired to present it in open House, so that some notice should be taken of it.

THE MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. JONES, of New York, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy at West Point, for the year ending the 30th June, 1855.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last rose, they had under consideration a bill making appropriations for the West Point Military Academy, and particularly the Senate amendments thereto. The first question is upon agreeing to the second Senate amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"For cavalry-exercise hall, $20,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the pending question tellers have been ordered.

Messrs. SMITH, of Tennessee, and RIDDLE, were appointed tellers.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 55.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The third amendment of the Senate was then reported, as follows:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the compensation of the professors of French and drawing be made equal to that of the professors in the other departments; and that the compensation of the master of the sword be $1,200 per annum."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This, Mr. Chairman, is an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of the teachers of French and drawing from $1,500 to $2,000. By the act of September 16, 1850, changing the pay of these professors, it was

"Provided, That hereafter, in lieu of the pay proper, ordinary rations, forage, and servants, heretofore received under the act of April 12, 1812, the professors of engineers, philosophy, mathematics, ethics, and chemistry, shall be entitled to receive $2,000 each per annum, and the professors of drawing and French each $1,500 per annum; and that the adjunct of the Military Academy shall hereafter be entitled to receive the same pay and allowances as an adjunct of a regiment of dragoons."

By the act of March 3, 1851, that was so altered as to allow the officers and professors longevity rations in addition to the salaries of $2,000 provided in the law from which I have just read. And at the time the salaries of these professors of French and drawing were fixed at $1,500 per annum, it was admitted, I believe, by those who advocated the proposition upon this floor, that the best of French teachers and the best teachers of drawing were employed in the colleges and universities of the country for $600 or $800 per annum. We gave them $1,500 and quarters or houses to live in; and now the proposition is brought forward to increase their salaries to $2,000 per annum.

Mr. BISSELL. I am not aware that it is the intention of any gentleman to insist on raising the salaries of the professors of drawing and French. It is desired, and it is thought to be altogether proper, that the pay of the fencing-master should be increased to $1,200 per annum. That is almost as little as any man can live on at that place.

A MEMBER. What is his salary now?

Mr. DEAN. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, I would answer that it is $750 per annum.

Mr. PECKHAM. That is a small affair. His salary should be raised to be equal to that of the lowest clerk here.

Mr. BISSELL. I hope that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] will not object to the increase of the salary of the fencing-master to $1,200 per annum. The other professors receive $1,500 per annum.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope that the committee will non-concur with the Senate's amendment. The fencing-master, or the master of the sword, now gets his rations, quarters, and, I believe, forty-six dollars per month. And, if I mistake not, it is a soldier who performs this service. The office requires but few qualifications, and little capacity. I suppose that they look only to his qualification as a master of the sword. They can get plenty of them; more than they want. They could get regiments of them at the price now paid. The question is before the committee, and I hope they will disagree to the whole amendment.

Mr. BISSELL. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that the fencing-master is a soldier, if he means by that a private of the Army. Not at all; and I am authorized, by gentlemen who know, to say further, that he was only induced to accept that position at the small salary he now receives of $750 per annum, by the promise that every effort should be made to get him an increased salary. Now that is an important position to occupy; and it is not every man who has a strong and active arm who can get employment in such business. It is a very skillful exercise, and requires a man to qualify himself to be a good teacher. He must have a high degree of excellence in the art, such as is not attained without years of practice. I think, under all the circumstances, that $1,200 is not too great a salary for the fencing-master.

Mr. JONES. I think his pay now is as good as that of a captain, certainly as good as that of a lieutenant in the Army.

Mr. BISSELL. It is not as good as that of a captain; but I will not consume the time of the committee by going into an argument on the subject. Nor is it as good as that of a lieutenant. He is there, and is compelled to keep up those associations which we would desire of a man in that position, as one of the teachers at our only military school. He has necessarily to incur some expenses beyond the bare necessities of living; and I do think that if we allow him $1,200 per annum, it would not be extravagant. It is less than any of the clerks of the Departments here receive under the law lately passed.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, APRIL 24, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 61.

Mr. DEAN. I have no desire to detain the committee. I would inquire whether the question can be divided—whether a separate vote can be had on the proposition to increase the fencing teacher's salary only?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can move to amend by striking out all of the Senate's amendment, except that providing for an increase of the salary of the fencing-master.

Mr. DEAN. Then for the purpose of testing the question, I move to strike out that portion of the Senate's amendment relating to the increase of the salaries of the professors of drawing and French. I wish they might all be raised; but I desire to test the question.

Mr. SAGE. What is the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is to strike out the following words:

"That the compensation of the professors of French and drawing be made equal to that of the professors in the other departments."

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. How will the amendment of the Senate then read?

The CHAIRMAN. It will read:

"For compensation of the master of the sword, $1,200 per annum."

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I should like some gentleman to tell me what the other professors get.

Mr. DEAN. Two thousand a year, and the professors of French and drawing, $1,500 a year. That there may be no misunderstanding, I will state that I have offered this amendment for the purpose of getting a separate vote on the two propositions embraced in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. I should really be glad if some gentleman would tell me why the professors of drawing and French at West Point should be paid $2,000 a year, when similar professors, equally efficient, no doubt, can be had in the private academies of the country for less than half the money?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, I say for less than half the money; and half the professors in the colleges of the country do not get over $1,000.

Mr. DEAN. Well, I propose to strike out that part of the Senate's amendment which provides increased compensation for the professors of French and drawing.

Mr. PECKHAM. The gentleman from Virginia does not understand the proposition. The amendment of my colleague, [Mr. DEAN,] if adopted, will let the salaries of those professors stand as they now are.

Mr. PRATT. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from New York, if, in addition to $2,000 a year, the professors do not have their private quarters furnished them?

Mr. DEAN. I do not know what the gentleman means by "private quarters."

Mr. PRATT. Houses for their families to live in.

Mr. DEAN. They have houses to live in, but no rations, or any thing of that kind.

Mr. PRATT. That is what I understand, and that is quite enough.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to know whether, if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York should prevail, we should be denied the privilege of voting upon the salary of the gentleman who teaches the sword exercise?

Mr. DEAN. Oh, no.

Mr. BISSELL. That will be the next question.

Mr. DEAN. The object of my amendment is to separate the two questions.

The question was then taken on Mr. DEAN's amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would be glad, if it be in order, to move to add after the words "per annum" the following words:

And the pay of the cadets shall be increased to $28 20 per month.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. It is, that the proposed amendment is not in order; in the first place because it is not germane to the pending amendment; and in the second place because the pay of the cadets is provided for in the bill which has been passed upon by the Senate, and it is not now within the control of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the amendment is in order, but the Chair can decide the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the proposed amendment is not in order, not being germane to the subject.

Mr. PECKHAM. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio, that what he desires is provided for in another bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I suppose, if the section is stricken out, that the salary which the teacher in fencing now receives would still be the same. I move to strike out the section. In submitting the motion, I desire some one, who is familiar with the subject, to inform me how much time the teacher of the sword exercise is engaged during each day.

Mr. BISSELL. I will answer the gentleman as far as I can, with a great deal of pleasure. I do not suppose, by any means, that this man is engaged in teaching the sword exercise from sunrise to sundown; but I presume that he is engaged ten hours in a day. He has some five classes to teach; and being required to attend so often to his duties there, it is quite out of the question that he can carry on any other business there or elsewhere. Our chaplain here does not employ in his duties more than three or four minutes in the course of the day, but we do not pay him according to the time he spends here. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] as well as myself, are not engaged in official duties ordinarily more than three or four hours in a day, but our constituents never think of paying us in proportion to the time we spend here. They send us from our business and homes to this city, to attend to the duties which they think proper to devolve upon us; and when we get here they pay us what they suppose is a liberal compensation. Suppose they should insist upon paying us according to the time we were actually in session. What would the gentleman from Virginia think of it? It is enough for me to say, that the master of the sword exercise is required to be upon the spot at certain hours, and perform his duties as teacher, and of course he cannot be engaged in other business there or elsewhere. Is not that a sufficient answer to what the gentleman has said, or does the gentleman desire to know the precise number of hours and minutes he is engaged each day?

Mr. SMITH. I merely desire information upon this subject. I look upon the practice of sword exercise as more distinguished for strength of muscle and quickness of eye, than for anything else. The acquisition of the art is within the reach of every one of ordinary ability, and of course the qualification is possessed by many persons whose services may be readily commanded. We know, also, that none of the responsibilities of the ordinary professors devolve upon him.

Mr. BISSELL. Nor is he paid as much as the other professors.

Mr. SMITH. It is well known to all that there is no obligation imposed upon him to remain in the institution all the time. He can as well live across the river, as in the institution. He has only to come forward in the course of the day, attend at his room, instruct his classes, and then go where he chooses, and devote himself to what business he may desire, as our professors of languages do in this city, who after instruction given here, go to Georgetown and other places. Now, I think, that for services three or four hours a day, $750 is enough. At any rate, I should be glad if any gentleman will tell me of another man, thus proficient, and thus employed, who gets as much money. I doubt whether there is.

A VOICE. The clerks under the Government.

Mr. SMITH. Do not point me to evidence to be found in the clerkships under this Government. I confess I have had no hand in that matter, and I state it here with satisfaction. Their salaries are too great, but their condition is altogether different from that of the individual of whom I am speaking. The clerks are required to be qualified in a variety of ways, as well as to be men of integrity. The salaries are not rightly regulated, and if some gentleman would devise a plan by which they should be paid in proportion to their labors, he would render a great service to the country.

A MEMBER. We are engaged here only three or four hours.

Mr. SMITH. Let me say to gentlemen, that although we, as members of Congress, are in this Hall but three or four hours a day, yet if we are true and diligent in the performance of our duties, very few of us get off with less than fourteen hours a day of persevering labor. I know the fact to be so. Every member who gives himself to the performance of his duties, labors as much as that. There may be some members who desire to be here for pleasure, but —

Mr. DEAN. I only rise to answer the question which the gentleman has put. This institution is not situated in my district, but it is so near to it that I have been there frequently, and know something about the duties of this man. There are constantly four classes in that institution, who occupy the time of this professor to the exclusion of everything else. He can engage in nothing else. The training of these classes commences in winter at six o'clock, and in summer one hour earlier. The professor who is engaged there can go into no other business whatever; and the only question now is, whether $750 is sufficient pay for a person who is qualified to be sent there, and whom you are willing to send there, to train the young men of the country who are to be put at the head of your armies in time of war?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would inquire of the gentleman how long the instruction continues each day to each class?

Mr. DEAN. For one hour to each class.

Mr. SMITH. Does he teach each of these classes every day?

Mr. DEAN. I presume he does not on Sunday.

Mr. SMITH. Then he instructs each class only one hour a day?

Mr. DEAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the sort of exercise which is required. To be sure, it is, to some extent, physical exercise, but it is the most exhausting physical exercise you can conceive. Labor by the day is nothing in comparison to it.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to ask the gentleman one question, and I hope he will answer it, for I assure him it involves a consideration that will have much weight in determining my vote upon this amendment. If we refuse to give this man $1,200 will he resign? [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNT. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to say a word?

Mr. DEAN. Yes, sir, I will, if the gentleman is going to speak for the Senate amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, the fencing-master employed at the Military Academy ought to be a gentleman who is fit to associate with young men of high character. He is, usually, a man taken from the ranks of some foreign service, who is out of employment at home; and such a gentleman ought not to receive a compensation less than that which this amendment of the Senate proposes to give him. He should be able to give advice in reference to questions of honor. Something more is required than the more physical force of a clown. He should be something more than merely strong in muscle. He should be one who, by years of experience, has acquired great skill in the use of the weapon, which is a proper weapon for a gentleman of high character in his national profession.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is there any amendment pending to the Senate amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment is pending.

Mr. JONES. I move to strike out $1,200.

Mr. Chairman, I have moved this amendment for the purpose of saying a word in reference to the compensation of this fencing-master. The gentleman from New York has stated that his compensation was $750 per annum. Now, by reference to the Blue Book, it will be seen that the master of the sword at the Military Academy receives $46 66 per month, making about $560 a year. In addition to this, he receives four rations per day. These rations are computed at twenty cents each, making eighty cents a day, and increasing his compensation to about $852. Then, in addition to this, he has quarters, making in all about $1,000 or $1,100 a year.

Mr. DEAN. I said the salary of this master of the sword was $750 a year. I have before me a letter from him, in which he says his pay is only $720. I will read an extract from the letter, and allow him to speak for himself. He says:

"The salary of all the professors here is $2,000 per annum, with the exception of Professors Anguel and Weir, who receive $1,500. My pay is $720. This enormous difference between my salary and that of those gentlemen, will show you how poorly my services are compensated."

Mr. PHELPS. I ask the gentleman if he does not get as much pay as a lieutenant in the Army?

Mr. DEAN. I do not know.

Mr. PHELPS. He does get more; and there are some fifteen or twenty lieutenants employed at the academy at West Point.

Mr. BISSELL. What are they doing there?

Mr. PHELPS. They are instructing the cadets.

The question now being upon the amendment to the amendment,

Mr. JONES, by unanimous consent, withdrew it.

The question then recurred upon concurring in the amendment to the Senate.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in, there being, on a division, ayes 72, noes not counted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the committee do now rise and report the amendments of the Senate to the House.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. JONES, of New York) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the Senate amendments to the Military Academy appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back, with the recommendation that the first amendment should be non-concurred in, the second concurred in, and the third concurred in, with an amendment.

Mr. BISSELL. I call for the previous question on the amendments.

The call for the previous question was seconded; and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the following amendment of the Senate, in which the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a non-concurrence:

"For repairs and additions to professors' quarters, $5,000."

The question was taken; and the amendment was non-concurred in.

The Clerk then reported the second amendment of the Senate, as follows:

"For cavalry exercise hall, $20,000."

Mr. LYON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SKELTON. I desire to ask if the question is on concurring in the Senate amendment, or in the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. They are the same thing. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union report in favor of the amendment; and the question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senate.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 69, nays 66; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, Banks, Bell, Bennett, Bissell, Carpenter, Caskie, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Colquitt, Crocker, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dent, Dickinson, Drum, Dunbar, Eddy, Thomas D. Eliot, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Franklin, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Hibbard, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Latham, Lindsley, Macdonald, McDougall, Mace, Maurice, Murray, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rogers, Sage, Seward, Shower, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vansant, Walley, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Witte—69.

NAVS.—Messrs. David J. Bailey, Ball, Barksdale, Benson, Bocock, Boyce, Bridges, Bugg, Chrisman, Churchwell, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Giddings, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Hiester, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kurtz, Leitcher, Lilly, Lindley, Lyon, McNair, May, Mayall, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Robbins, Rufin, Sapp, Shannon, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Vail, Wade, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, and Zollcoffer—66.

So the second amendment of the Senate was agreed to.

Mr. PECKHAM. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. LYON. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PECKHAM. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. After a motion is made, and the House has acted on it, is it in the power of the party making the motion to withdraw it? Is it not then in the possession of the House?

The SPEAKER. By an express rule of the House, it is in the power of the mover to withdraw it before action has been had upon it.

Mr. SMITH. But here was action; we were called upon to vote. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. Preparatory to taking action.

The Clerk then read the third amendment of the Senate, as follows:

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That the compensation of the professors of French and drawing be made equal to that of the professors in the other departments, and the compensation of the master of the sword be $1,200 per annum."

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union propose to strike out the following words: "Professors of French and drawing be made equal to that of the professors in the other departments, and the compensation of the;" so that it will read:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the compensation of the master of the sword be $1,200 per annum."

The question was then taken on the amendment proposed by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the amendment of the Senate, as amended.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BENSON. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SMITH, of Virginia, and CHURCHWELL, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 42.

So the amendment was agreed to.

KANSAS AND NEBRASKA.

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask the indulgence of the House one moment. I am under the necessity of leaving the city for a few days. Before doing so, I was very desirous of giving my views briefly upon the territorial bills now under consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I ask that the House will now allow me the privilege of printing my remarks with the proceedings of the House.

The SPEAKER. If no objection is made, that privilege will be granted to the gentleman from New York.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!" from all parts of the House.]

Mr. DEAN. I move to reconsider the votes by which the amendments read were agreed to; and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot move to reconsider all the votes upon the different amendments together.

Mr. DEAN. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the last Senate amendment was concurred in; and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was taken; and the latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" from all parts of the Hall.]

Mr. HENN. I withdraw it, as it seems to be the wish of the House.

Mr. PECKHAM. I believe the question has not been taken upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary, as the bill passed the House upon a former occasion; and the only question for the House was upon agreeing or disagreeing to the Senate amendments. That has been disposed of.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Was the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] to reconsider confined to only one amendment?

The SPEAKER. It was; and that motion was laid upon the table. The Chair stated to the gentleman from New York that he could not group all the amendments together in a motion to reconsider. He made but one motion, and that was in reference to the last vote.

Mr. SMITH. And that does not dispose of the other amendments?

The SPEAKER. He submitted no motion in regard to the other amendments.

Mr. PECKHAM. Is that motion in order now?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the House adopted the amendment last but one.

Mr. DEAN. Is that in reference to the riding hall?

Mr. PECKHAM. It is.

Mr. LYON. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. EASTMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were, upon a division—ayes 53, noes 63; no quorum voting. [Cries of "Call the roll!" "Call the roll!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ascertain whether there is a quorum present by counting the House.

Mr. PECKHAM. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. LYON. I renew it.

Mr. HAMILTON. The gentleman cannot withdraw the motion now. A question has been taken since he made the motion.

The SPEAKER. But no quorum voted upon the question.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. It is, that the gentleman cannot withdraw his motion when business has been transacted since he made the motion.

The SPEAKER. It is perfectly competent, under the rules, for the gentleman to control his own motion until action is had upon it. A question put, upon which no quorum votes, is no action upon it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LYON] renews the motion. The Chair would inquire whether the gentleman voted in the majority?

Mr. LYON. I did not vote at all.

The SPEAKER. By the rules of the House, when the yeas and nays have been demanded and taken, some gentleman only who voted in the majority is entitled to move to reconsider the vote. When a vote has been taken, upon which the yeas and nays were not called, any gentleman can move to reconsider, because there is no convenient test by which to determine how members voted. The Clerk will read the 56th rule, which governs in such cases.

The rule was read, as follows:

"When a motion has been once made, and carried in the affirmative or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for the reconsideration thereof on the same or succeeding day," &c.

Mr. SMITH. The object of my inquiry was this: The motion was made, and the yeas and nays were ordered upon it—

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman will observe that there was only a preparation to take a vote. It was not action upon the part of the House—it was only preparation for action.

Mr. SMITH. But the yeas and nays were not only ordered, but the Clerk had proceeded to call the name of at least one member.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule governing the case.

The Clerk then read the 45th rule, which is as follows:

"After a motion is stated by the Speaker, or read by the Clerk, it shall be deemed to be in the possession of the House, but may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment."

The SPEAKER. Under that rule the Chair decides the gentleman has the right to withdraw his motion.

Mr. SAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the motion agreed to, and Thereupon, at ten minutes past three o'clock, the House adjourned until to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 21, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting estimates of $25,000 for construction of cistern for marine hospital at San Francisco; and of $44,000 for the removal of earth around said hospital.

Also, transmitting copies of letters from the collector of the port of San Francisco, and from the contractor for building said marine hospital, in reference to a claim of said contractor for damages incurred by him in consequence of the failure of the Government to procure a site.

Mr. HOUSTON. This is a long communication. It relates to a subject which is before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and is not before any standing committee of the House. I move, therefore, that without reading, it be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire whether it be not expedient that one copy of each work belonging to the Library be constantly retained therein. Also, whether books taken from the Library should not be required to be returned within a definite time, to be fixed by the rules regulating the Library.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That is the rule now.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; but is not put in force.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection to the introduction of the resolution, the question will be on its adoption.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to the introduction of the resolution.

On motion by Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the petitions of citizens of Cooke and Sevier counties, Tennessee, for a mail route from Newport to Sevierville, in said State, for the purpose of a reference to the Post Office Department.

On motion by Mr. ROGERS, it was Ordered, That the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution to refer the petition of Isaac S. Bowman, son and executor of Isaac Bowman, deceased, to the Secretary of the Interior for liquidation under the act of July 5, 1832; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

ANÆSTHESIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bill No. 210, entitled "An act to recompense the discovery of practical anæsthesia."

Mr. HAMILTON. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Claims. If the House were full, I would move that it be laid on the table.

Mr. BISSELL. If I were permitted, I would make a statement in regard to the bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN. How does the bill get in? Is it before us regularly?

The SPEAKER. This being private bill day, and the Chair, conceiving it to be a private bill, laid it before the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have no desire to throw obstacles in the way of its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is on the floor, and entitled to it.

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois for the purpose of explanation.

Mr. BISSELL. I rose for the purpose of moving that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That was the committee in whose charge the bill was in the Senate.

Mr. HAMILTON. I did not yield, Mr. Speaker, for the gentleman to move a reference of the bill different from that I proposed. I yielded merely for explanation.

Mr. LETCHER. With the permission of the gentleman from Maryland, I would say a word. I hope that the bill will not be sent to the Committee of Claims. I do not consider it a claim at all. Let it go to some other committee of this House—the Committee of Ways and Means, or some other committee.

Mr. EDGERTON. I hope that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I will say that the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate had this subject under consideration, and that the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, during the last Congress, also had it under consideration. If it be sent to the Committee of Claims, there is no possible chance of its ever being considered by that committee. They know nothing about the case, and they do not want to know anything. The Committee on Military Affairs have had the subject once in their charge, and I think it should be now referred to them for investigation.

Mr. LETCHER. I will make a proposition. We have about a dozen doctors in the House, and I propose to organize them into a committee and give them the charge of this matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. BISSELL. With the permission of the gentleman from Maryland, I will say a word. I only want to give a single reason which occurs to me why the bill should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Those who have looked into this matter at all, and who have noticed the memorial which was presented to the Senate, are aware that the petitioner claims something for the reason that this article is used extensively in the Army in the mode discovered or invented by him. I believe the whole claim is based on the fact that the invention, or rather the discovery of the memorialist, whoever he may be, is used extensively in the Army of the United States. I can, therefore, think of no committee to which it could be so appropriately referred as to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAMILTON. I desire to say a few words in reference to this matter. I have so much confidence in the Committee of Claims, that I should prefer that this bill should be referred to it. I do not mean anything disparaging to the Committee on Military Affairs, for I have the highest confidence in it also; but I think the subject appropriately belongs to the other committee.

This is a private claim. It is ostensibly brought before the House on the ground that it benefits the Army and Navy; but that is not the true design of the bill. The bill proposes, after awarding $100,000 to the gentlemen claiming to have made this discovery, to throw it open for the use of the whole people of the United States. It is, therefore, for the benefit of the people; and the Committee of Claims as well represents the people as the Committee on Military Affairs does. If the views of the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] are correct, there is quite as much reason for referring it to the Naval Committee as to the Military Committee. It is intended for the benefit of the whole people of the United States, and I have great confidence in the Committee of Claims that it will fairly and honestly represent the people of the United States.

What is this proposition? We have an idea of what it is. We had it here in this House once before, and we summarily excluded it from consideration, and much less from approval. It is a proposition to pay $100,000 to six gentlemen, or to the one of them to whom the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of New York shall determine to be the discoverer of this anæsthetic agent. These claimants, Messrs. Morton, Jackson, Nicholson, Wells, and others, are scattered over the whole country. There is to be a bill of interpleader filed in the circuit court of the northern district of New York. The Secretary of the Treasury is to be the complainant as the trustee of this fund, and these gentlemen are to be the defendants. They are to get together their witnesses and counsel there from all sections of the Union, and to litigate this matter to their satisfaction, and then this money is to be awarded to them, or to one of them, and the Government is to pay the costs of that adjudication. I would infinitely prefer that either of the committees of this House should at once decide the question, and give the money, whether right or wrong; for it would be a saving to the country. And when all this is done, then the people of the United States are to have the free use of this anæsthetic agent. If either of these gentlemen has a right to this agent as the original discoverer, let him maintain that right under the patent laws of the United States. I therefore hope that the bill will be referred to the Committee of Claims. I know that committee will give the case that consideration it deserves; and upon the motion so to refer it I demand the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had signed bills of the following titles:

H. R. No. 53. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Isaac P. Simonton.

H. R. No. 180. An act for the relief of William B. Edwards.

H. R. No. 204. An act establishing a land office in the lower peninsula of Michigan.

H. R. No. 237. An act for the relief of Mary Deany, widow of the late Lieutenant James A. Deany.]

Mr. CLINGMAN. What is the state of the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] moves to refer the bill to the Committee of Claims, and demands the previous question upon it. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] moves to lay the bill upon the table, and demands the yeas and nays upon that proposition.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his motion, and allow the bill to go to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. JONES. I cannot withdraw it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Belcher, Benton, Bridges, Brooks, Bugg, Carpenter, Chrisman, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Corwin, Cox, Craig, Curtis, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dent, Drum, Eddy, Edgerton, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Giddings, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Hibbard, Hiester, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Knox, Kurtz, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsley, McNair, Mace, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Middleswarth, Milson, Murray, Parker, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Shannon, Simmons, Gerit Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Witte, and Daniel B. Wright—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Banks, Benson, Biswell, Cas- kie, Chandler, Cook, Crocker, Dawson, Dean, Dunbar, Eastman, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Etheridge, Farley, Faulkner, Franklin, Aaron Harlan, Heen, Howe, Hunt, Kerr, Kittredge, Smith Miller, Peckham, Phillips, Ready, Riddle, Rogers, Sapp, Shower, William R. Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Straub, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Zoilcoffer—46.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. BISSELL. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw that motion for a single moment.

Mr. JONES. It would not be debatable in any event.

Mr. BISSELL. It seems hardly respectful to lay a Senate bill upon the table without giving it the slightest consideration.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Jones's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative.

SENATE BILL.

The following bill upon the Speaker's table was then taken up, read a first and second time by its title, and referred as indicated below:

An act for the relief of James Jeffries and Jeremiah M. Smith. Referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER then announced that reports were in order from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana, from said committee, reported adversely upon the petition and papers of Wade Allen; which report was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. McDUGALL, from the same committee, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

A bill to provide for a weekly mail service between the Atlantic States and San Francisco.

Mr. McDUGALL. On a previous day a bill was reported providing for that service. The provisions of that bill did not altogether meet with my approbation, and I have endeavored to bring before the House now a bill which will obviate all the objections made to the former bill.

The bill was then read in extenso.

It provides that the Postmaster General shall contract with the lowest bidder, after the usual advertisement, for the transportation of the mails of the United States from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and New Orleans, to San Francisco, and from San Francisco to those places, by the most expeditious and practicable route; the service to be performed semi-monthly, at such times, under the direction of the Postmaster General, as, in connection with the existing mail service, shall secure weekly mail service each way, provided the cost shall not exceed $280,000 per annum; that no contract shall be made for more than four years, &c.

Mr. McDUGALL. It was understood by the discussion had upon a former day that there was no objection to this service, and that the business interests of the country demanded a weekly mail service. This bill has been prepared with as much care as we could give to the measure, and I believe meets the views expressed by the House in reference to it. For the purpose of having the measure fairly before the House, I desire to have the consideration of the bill postponed until the first Monday in June, and I submit that motion.

The question was put; and the motion agreed to.

Mr. UPHAM, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported back, without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill No. 209, entitled "An act for the relief of Ira Day, of Vermont;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES JEFFRIES AND JEREMIAH SMITH.

Mr. EWING. I wish to move to reconsider a vote which was taken a few minutes ago, by which a bill was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It is a private bill which passed the Senate during the last Congress, and was only lost in this House for want of time. It is a bill which has been under nursing very carefully for the last two Congresses, and I fear it will meet no better fate now than heretofore if it be left to the destiny fixed for it by the reference. It is a bill for the relief of James Jeffries and Jeremiah Smith. I move to reconsider the vote by which it was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, with a view of moving to put it upon its passage.

Mr. COBB. I would suggest to the gentleman that the motion go over until after the morning hour has been consumed in the call of committees for reports.

Mr. EWING. I should have no objection, if it was the unanimous consent of the House that it should come up then. I will state to the House that I have been unable to attend its sessions for some time past, in consequence of indisposition, and that pressing business will call me home as soon as the state of my health will permit it.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman can call up the motion to reconsider at any time.

Mr. EWING. I prefer to have it considered now. I am not able to be in the House longer than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask that the bill may be read.

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

It authorizes the Postmaster General to release James Jeffries and Jeremiah Smith from the penalty incurred in consequence of a failure on their part to carry the mail on certain routes, according to the bids made by them, and accepted by the Post Office Department, and also referring to them the fines consequent upon the failure.

Mr. EWING. I will say a single word in explanation of this bill, if I can make my voice sufficiently audible. These petitioners are poor men. They entered into a contract to carry the mail upon a route in Texas; and by positive and conclusive proof, as is shown by the papers accompanying the bill, the route was twice as long as advertised by the Department. The report made by Mr. Rusk, the chairman of the Post Office Committee in the Senate, shows clearly that the claim ought to be allowed. It has passed the Senate twice, but has been lost in the House in each instance, in consequence of want of time. I shall not be in the House again for some time, as I am only waiting until I am well enough to enable me to travel home. I would regard it as a special favor if the bill be taken up and passed.

Mr. GREY. I would ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether I understand him to say, that the routes were much longer than the length advertised by the Postmaster General?

Mr. EWING. They were nearly twice as long as the length advertised, as the gentleman will find by referring to the proof in the case.

Mr. GREY. They were advertised to be relet, and there was a mistake in the statement of the length of the routes. They were double the length, as stated in the advertisement of the Postmaster General. Hence the mistake, and the injury under these contracts.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The rule on that subject at the Department is to state the length of the route, according to the best information they have; and if they advertise a route to be fifty miles in length when it is one hundred miles, it is the business of the bidder to understand the country and the expense of carrying the mail. He must inform himself as to the real distance; and if the person is acquainted with the country for the transportation of the mail over which he has bid, he will know whether the statement in the advertisement be correct or not. If it is not, he ought not to bid for carrying the mail on a route the length of which he knows himself to be much greater than that stated by the Department. I suppose in this case that the gentlemen were not residents of that country, and knew nothing about the length of the route, or about the points from the one to the other of which this mail was to be transported, and consequently they were deceived themselves, and not through any fault of the Department.

Mr. EWING. I know nothing of what has induced the gentleman from Tennessee, who has paid no attention to this particular case, to raise a discussion on it, when I am utterly unable to engage in it. I had no idea that he would do so. I can only refer the gentleman to the report. Neither the Department nor the bidders were exactly informed of the length of the route. It was through a new country. The proof is clear and conclusive, and if the gentleman had examined it he could find no objection whatever to the claim. The claim would have passed long since but for the delay which attends all just private claims in this House. I cannot explain further. I hope that the House will take the bill up and put it on its passage. I call for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was seconded; and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then taken on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now open to amendment, or to be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. EWING. I now move that the bill be put on its passage.

Mr. LETCHER. If there be a report accompanying the bill, I would be glad if the Clerk would read it.

The SPEAKER. According to the memorandum on the bill the report is in the hands of the printer.

Mr. LETCHER. Then the House is not able to act on it.

Mr. EWING. I state the facts as fully as I am able, on my own responsibility. I merely appeal to the House, because I have watched this bill day after day during the last session of Congress as well as this. It is impossible for me now to give that attention which I would like to, and I hope that no unnecessary objection will be made to it. I state the facts on my own responsibility, I would say in answer to the gentleman from Virginia. The case is clear, and the report conclusive. The proof is as satisfactory as it could be in any claim. The route was through a new country, and no bidders could be apprised of the exact length of it. The bill has passed this House before; I have watched it many a long day here. I now throw myself on the known courtesy of the House in this case. I ask nothing but what is just, and I so state on my own responsibility.

Mr. LETCHER. There is no one here whom I would more willingly accommodate than the gentleman from Kentucky; but it seems to me that there is something in this bill which involves more than a mere spirit of accommodation. Now, sir, take the converse of the proposition. The gentleman states that this line proved to be twice as long as was advertised; and that, in consequence of that fact, the parties come here now and ask relief. Suppose the line had been only half as long as advertised, what then would have been the action of the contractors in regard to it? Would they have come then and asked relief, or would they have come here and proposed to refund a part of the moneys they were to receive by virtue of that contract?

Now, it seems to me, that there is something in this matter, that there is at least a principle at the bottom of it, and that principle may be one of very serious consequence. I would as willingly defer to the wishes of the gentleman from Kentucky as of any other member of the House; but when a matter of principle is involved, I think it my duty to adhere to that principle.

Mr. EWING. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the previous question is sustained, the first question will be upon the motion to commit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. If that motion shall be voted down, the bill will then be open to amendment, or will be put upon its third reading.

Mr. GREY. I desire to say a word upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order; a demand for the previous question is pending.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish to inquire if the bill has been read?

The SPEAKER. It has been read.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have every disposition to accommodate the gentleman from Kentucky; but I did not hear a word he said; and I do not yet know what the bill is. I ask that it may be read?

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, the bill will again be read.

Mr. WARREN. I object.

Mr. HAMILTON. Then let a vote of the House determine whether the bill shall be read.

Mr. LETCHER. It is very short, and I hope no gentleman will object to its being read.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The question was put; and the motion was disagreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. HIESTER. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered—only fourteen members rising.

Mr. JONES. I hope the demand for the yeas and nays will be entered on the Journal.

The SPEAKER. It is not customary.

Mr. JONES. When it is not entered on the Journal, it looks as if we did this thing unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have it in his power to move to amend the Journal.

Mr. JONES. Yes, but it would save time to have it entered now.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps that would be the case if the Chair would place upon the Journal that which has never gone there since the foundation of the Government. But if the practice is changed at all, it must be by the order of the House.

Mr. HAMILTON. What is the point?

The SPEAKER. It is with regard to the entry upon the Journal of the demand made by the gentleman from Tennessee for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. It will go in the Globe.

The SPEAKER. When the yeas and nays are not ordered, the demand for them is never entered on the Journal. The gentleman from Tennessee desires that it shall be.

The Chair would state, that if the practice in this respect be changed, it must be done by a vote of the House. The object of the gentleman from Tennessee may be reached, when the Journal shall be read on Monday morning, if the House adjourns until Monday.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I desire simply to ask my colleague, if it would not satisfy him to have his motion published in the Globe without mutilating the Journal?

The question was then taken on Mr. HESTER's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the House agreed that when it adjourns, it be until Monday next.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws his objection to having the bill read, and as there is a general desire to have it read, I hope that the Clerk will now be allowed to read the bill.

The bill was then read through by the Clerk.

The demand for the previous question was not seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon referring the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The question was then taken; and a division being had, there were—ayes 55; noes not counted.

Mr. JONES demanded tellers.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. That motion would take precedence of the motion to commit the bill, but it cannot be entertained during the pendency of the demand for the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. But the House have refused to second the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That is very true; there was no second. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] would now be in order.

Mr. LETCHER. I would inquire of the Chair, if it is in order to submit a motion to postpone the consideration of this matter until next Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order, if the House should vote down the several pending propositions to refer.

Mr. EWING. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] will allow me, I will say to him that if he will promise to take charge of the bill, I will not object so strongly to the motion which he has indicated; but I must state to the House, that I have only been waiting in this city, in bad health, in order to get this matter disposed of. I shall soon be compelled to leave for the West, and when I shall return I cannot tell.

Mr. LETCHER. I am willing, for the purpose of accommodating the gentleman, to fix upon any day of postponement which will meet the wishes of the gentleman.

Mr. HUNT. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will allow this matter to proceed now. The gentleman from Kentucky informs us that he is only waiting in this city for the purpose of disposing of this bill. He tells us he has thoroughly examined it, and that the parties have suffered on account of a wrong advertisement on the part of the Government officers. It is said that the parties have acted in good faith; and are we to hold those men, like Shylock, to the pound of flesh, when they are not in fault?

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The Chair would remind the gentleman that debate is not in order upon the proposition to postpone.

Mr. HUNT. Then I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to proceed.

Mr. EDGERTON. I object.

Mr. HAMILTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LETCHER. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. Debate is then in order.

Mr. SAGE. I hope the motion to recommend this bill, or the motion to postpone, will prevail.

There is no disposition upon the part of any member, I presume, to delay action upon it from any captious motive. The objection seems to be that if we act upon it now, it would be establishing the precedent of acting upon a bill without a report, and without investigation, but upon the recommendation of an individual member. We all have equal rights here, and I have bills in my possession which I am interested in getting through, but I take it for granted that this House is not ready to allow these bills to be put upon their passage without a report and examination. If it will meet the wishes of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. EWING,] I will move that the further consideration of this matter be postponed until next Wednesday.

Mr. HUNT. I would consent to the motion of the gentleman from New York, if I could see any good reason for postponing action. But I can see none whatever. The gentleman from Kentucky says the Senate have twice acted upon this matter, and that he desires to have it disposed of now.

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] if he submitted a motion to postpone, or only suggested such a motion?

Mr. SAGE. I submitted the motion. We shall then have the report before us.

The SPEAKER. Then that motion cuts off debate, and the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] are not in order.

Mr. HUNT. I ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw his motion.

Mr. SAGE. I will, if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. HUNT. I will.

Mr. SAGE. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HUNT. I am acting altogether in courtesy in this matter, and upon principles of justice. We have heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] advert to precedent. The first of all precedents is justice. Here is a measure of relief called for by individuals who have suffered by contracting for a route twice as long as was advertised by the Postmaster General. Now they come before the House in perfect good faith and with clean hands. We have proof that they acted in good faith, and that the Postmaster General deluded them.

Now one gentleman asks, suppose the mistake was upon the other side? When that question recurs it will be time enough to act upon it. Here is a gentleman of honor who has investigated the case, and he refers also to the Senate reports. The gentleman says he cannot be here on next Wednesday. If there were any motive for postponement; if there were any doubt of the correctness of the statements in the reports of the Senate; if it were alleged that they were made in error, it would be reasonable and just that there should be a postponement. It appears to me, under the circumstances, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] ought to be gratified in his reasonable desire, and that this matter, which he has thoroughly examined, ought to be disposed of now.

In accordance with my promise, I now renew the motion to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Wednesday next.

Mr. EDGERTON. I wish to state to the gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. HUNT. The gentleman is not in order. I return the gentleman's courtesy to me.

The question was then taken upon the motion to postpone; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would state to the gentleman from Kentucky that I have no hostility to his bill. I wish to give it a fair and candid consideration; and it was only for that purpose that I made the motion which I made.

I will say, however, to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. HUNT,] that when he has read as many Senate reports as perhaps I have, he will become satisfied that it is not the best evidence in the world that a bill ought to pass because a favorable report has been made upon it in the Senate, or because it has once or twice passed that body. I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky, that if this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House, next Friday is objection day; and if it is one of those cases which are as clear as the gentleman states it is, its justice will be manifest upon reading the report, and it will be passed without difficulty. If, however, it should be objected to, it will lie over until it can come up and be discussed there. It is not defeating a bill by referring it to the Committee of the Whole House; but, on the contrary, in my opinion, it is the best method of passing it.

Mr. EWING. I have not been disposed, and am not disposed, to press this matter upon the House against their wishes. I appealed to the courtesy of the House, not with a view of establishing a precedent for ordinary cases, but hoping that by an explanation of the peculiar circumstances connected with this case the House would allow the bill to be disposed of at once. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. SAGE,] however, seems to place it simply upon the ground of ordinary transactions. Sir, I wish very much I could establish in this House a precedent for courtesy. I know of no precedent that would be more useful, save more time, or contribute more to secure justice to those having honest claims against the Government of the United States. But I despair of being able to establish a precedent which would be of sufficient force to reach the sense of propriety of the gentleman from New York. I say I despair of such a result; for I have discovered that when the great body of the House seem disposed to recognize the peculiarity of the circumstances attending this case, a few members like the gentleman from New York seem disposed to throw insurmountable obstacles in the way of accomplishing what is the obvious wish of the great majority of the House.

As to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, I have served the little time I have been in this House to but little purpose, if it has not taught me what is the effect of such motions. I presume even the new members of the House would need no explanation to be able to ascertain what is the effect, not to say anything of the object, of such motions. I can say nothing of the motive of the gentleman—nothing of his object; I leave that for the conjecture of others. The effect, however, I cannot misunderstand.

I will say to the House, however, that, not wishing to press this matter at present, if there be objection, I will consent to the motion to postpone its further consideration until some day next week, although it will result in keeping me in the city until that time, and subject me to very much inconvenience in consequence. I ask that as early a day may be fixed as possible. I would suggest Tuesday; and I hope in the mean time the objectors of the bill will examine the subject fairly, and ascertain whether there are objections that are insurmountable against its passage.

The SPEAKER. There is also postponed to next Tuesday the consideration of another report from one of the standing committees, and it would take precedence of the bill before the House in the morning hour, being of the same character of business.

Mr. EWING. At the request of friends around me, I would move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Monday next.

Mr. SAGE. I would ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. EWING. I will, if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. SAGE. I will. The gentleman seemed to throw some reflection on my want of courtesy here, when I distinctly stated, in making the motion I did, that I did not intend to be discourteous. There has not been a single instance since the commencement of this session, where this House has passed a bill without having the report of the committee before it. It was for that reason I objected to having the bill under consideration passed at this time. On examination, I stated that I had no doubt I would vote for the claim. I do not think I can be charged, in good grace, with want of courtesy, when I stated the reasons which actuated me. That is all I have to say. I now renew the motion that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Monday next.

The question was then taken on the motion to postpone; and it was agreed to.

So the further consideration of the bill is postponed until Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Reports are now in order from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. EDGERTON. I now move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, in the chair.)

RICHARD W. MEADE.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last rose it had under consideration "A bill for settling the claims of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased," on which, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was called before the committee a week ago to-day, I yielded to the pious suggestion of my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] that, it being Good Friday, we should postpone the consideration of private claims, and give ourselves up to that business which was more public; and though we did not enter into spiritual matters, as they did in the other end of the building, yet I trust that the consciences of all members are at rest as regards our own observance of this sacred season. It is not my intention at this time to inflict on the committee a speech on the bill now before it; nor, indeed, to enter into any argument. I shall, as I suggested a week ago, confine myself to a simple narrative of the origin of these claims, and all those events which made these claims; which, in the first place, were against the King of Spain, valid against the Government of the United States, and which have brought the memorialists hither to ask of us the justice which has been denied them in other quarters.

Richard W. Meade was a citizen of the United States, pursuing his commerce in the kingdom of Spain, and very much with the dependencies of Spain in America. In the course of a protracted business in that part of the world, the Government of Spain became largely indebted to him, and to his principals, in the sum, I believe, of some millions of dollars. The revolutions that were going forward in Spain from year to year, never producing any good to the subjects, and only disturbing the seats of the various monarchs, rendered it much easier for the Government of Spain to increase its debts to the merchants than to pay them. After various attempts to procure from the Spanish Government an acknowledgment of the debt—a liquidation of his claim arising from demurrage of his ships, from flour furnished to the army, and from various articles supplied to, or taken by the King's officers—Mr. Meade, growing weary of those efforts, laid his claim before the Government of the United States, and asked his own Government to interfere in his behalf.

In the year 1819, the Government of the United States concluded a treaty with the Government of Spain. That treaty contained, among other things, a condition that the Government of Spain should cede to the United States the whole of the province of East and West Florida—the whole of the Spanish possessions lying east of the Mississippi, for which territory the sovereignty of all, and the fee simple of what was left, the Government of the United States was to pay $5,000,000, and that sum of $5,000,000 was to be divided among the claimants of the United States upon the Government of Spain, pro rata, to be apportioned by a commission to be appointed to hold their offices for three years, to which commission there should be furnished proofs of the claims, and those claims, those unliquidated claims, which were sustained by ample proof, were to be allowed by the commission. Another condition of that treaty was, that if it were not confirmed by each party, within six months of the date of its being made here, it should become null and void. The treaty also acknowledged the validity of grants of land made by the King of Spain to his subjects in Florida—a very important consideration to this committee.

The treaty was made on the 22d day of February, 1819. In that treaty, of course, Mr. Meade's claim upon Spain was recognized, if it could be proved. There is no doubt of that; it was so understood.

On the 22d day of July, 1819, our Minister at Madrid gave notice to the Government of Spain, that in thirty days from that time, the treaty, unless confirmed by the King, would be null and void. On the 23d of August, 1819, the treaty was unconfirmed, and was consequently null and void, and of no effect. Neither Power was bound by that treaty, and those parties in this country that set up a claim upon the $5,000,000 were forever cut off from that claim. The whole matter was then in the same position as it was before the 22d of February, 1819. Mr. Meade was then thrown again upon his own resources, and left to come back upon the Government of Spain for an acknowledgment and payment of his debt which they owed him. After much exertion, Mr. Meade procured from the Minister of the United States in Spain, and with the consent of the Government of this country, assistance to procure a liquidation of his claim upon the Government of Spain, and a commission, on account of this interference, and on account of the urgency of Mr. Meade, was appointed by the Government of Spain, who, after taking the case to the various courts of that Government, finally declared them liquidated, and the King of Spain issued his obligation to Mr. Meade for the amount due him. Between $400,000 and $500,000 were recognized at that time as being due him. Here was the claim recognized, and Mr. Meade held in his hands the treasury notes of the King of Spain for the sum that the King acknowledged he owed him. So far, then, the Government of the United States was released from all consideration of this matter, and Mr. Meade was reinstated in his position towards the Spanish Government, and the King of Spain became his debtor in that amount. The Cortes of Spain were not then in session, but as soon as they assembled, Mr. Meade made application to this Congress of that country to provide ways and means for the payment of his debt. In the meantime, the Minister of the United States and the Government of Spain entered into negotiations again for a treaty, and the basis of the treaty to be formed was the old treaty of the 22d of February, 1819. That was to be the basis of the negotiation, and the treaty was formed after the recognition of the debt upon the part of the King of Spain, after the liquidation of that claim, and the issuing of an acknowledgement in the customary form, but bearing the same relation to the debt that a treasury note, or any of the bonds of the Treasury Department bear to their holders here. The new treaty varied from the old one.

I maintained, in the first part of my remarks, that in the acquisition of Florida, the whole sovereignty of course was acquired for the Government. There were occupants of the land there who held of course their lands in fee simple from the Government abroad. The King, in 1818, issued his royal warrant to three of his distinguished counsellors for a vast quantity of land, covering a great amount of the beautiful everglades that prove so rich a source of supply for our naval deposits in this country. He gave a large part, I should think, nearly one third of the whole territory, to these three persons. The new treaty gave up all the sovereignty as before, and gave to the United States the fee simple of all these vast grants of land, which before were not included in the acquisition of the United States. This treaty was then, inasmuch, better than the other, for the former conditions were held. Five millions of dollars were to be given by the United States to the American claimants upon the King of Spain, to be settled as under the former treaty, by commission to hold for three years.

When this treaty came before the Cortes for their consideration they regarded it with some favor, but they also recollected that at the same time there was the claim of Mr. Meade, an American citizen, for nearly $500,000, which had been awarded to him. There was a gentleman there by the name of Joseph Guerera; and he was the "gentleman from Tennessee" of the Spanish Cortes—just such a man as is my friend from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] in this House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (in his seat.) May that not be a doubtful compliment.

Mr. CHANDLER. The compliment is to Mr. Guerera that he was so much like my friend from Tennessee. There is the compliment. That gentleman, a member of the Cortes, inquired what was to become of this claim? Was the Government of Spain to give up all its sovereignty over East and West Florida; relinquish all its vast possessions there, and afterwards pay this $500,000? Because the new treaty already gave up those vast possessions there which the King held in fee simple, and besides that, would have to pay the $500,000, or nearly that sum, which was included in the former treaty on the part of the United States, and which they, Spain, agreed to pay to Mr. Meade. Here, then, was a just inquiry. Here was a proper inquiry on the part of Mr. Guerera—and he did ask if this was to be included in the treaty. The question was pertinent and just, and as proper as nine tenths of those which my friend from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] puts to this House. The result was the appointment of a committee, on the part of the Cortes of Spain, to wait upon the American Minister, to ask him whether this new treaty included the claim of Richard W. Meade. The committee returned to the Cortes of Spain, and informed them that the Minister said that it did include it.

In that condition of things, then, the Cortes advised the King of Spain to ratify and confirm the new treaty, upon the condition that it included the claim of Mr. Meade; for you are aware that, under the general nature of treaties, it would not be included, because it was a "liquidated debt." The Cortes, understanding that it did include it, advised the ratification of that treaty, although it gave up an immense amount of valuable land to the United States.

It was a singular circumstance—but one of those circumstances which will happen in the progress of treaties—that there was going on, a few weeks ago, in the Supreme Court room below, a trial nominally between John Doe and Richard Roe, but in which the real party was Joseph M. Branden, which involved a claim to some of the Florida lands. In looking over the written argument of this case, I was struck with a singular fact. It had nothing to do with the Meade case at all; it was entirely foreign to it; and yet there I found a reference was made to this very circumstance to which I allude—an extract from the proceedings of the Cortes, including this treaty, in which the King is advised to ratify the treaty then made, including the claim of R. W. Meade and others; but that, as his Majesty might feel that his kingdom was shorn of a part of its honors, and they were going to pay too much by relinquishing those vast possessions; therefore, if he should conclude not to accept of the advice of the Cortes, and should refuse to ratify the treaty, the Cortes then most respectfully recommended to the King, in the first place, a care for the wants and conditions of his faithful subjects in Florida; and they recommended to him in like manner, if the treaty should not be ratified, the just and valid claim of Richard W. Meade. That was their view of it. Subsequently, also, they declared that, notwithstanding the fact that this treaty should not be ratified, these claims upon this valuable body of land should not be longer considered as withholding them from the King. Such was the value of the land that they deemed it of sufficient importance to warrant the King in taking it from the Spanish claimants; but, at the same time, such was the regard for the claim of Mr. Meade, that they recommended it to the favorable consideration of the King. These were the opinions of the Cortes. But the King did sanction the treaty. The treaty was ratified in 1820, upon the basis of that of 1819, containing the conditions to which I have referred by which this Government received an immense tract of land, including the claim of Mr. Meade, worth twice as much as this Government paid for the whole of Florida.

No sooner did Mr. Meade hear that his claim was included in the treaty, than he entered his solemn protest against the proceeding. It may be said that it was a very foolish proceeding upon the part of Mr. Meade to protest against the transfer of his claim from the Spanish Government to ours; but the great difficulty in reference to Spain had been to get an acknowledgment of the debt. Spain could not pay, and therefore she would not settle; but when she became in a better condition she would settle, because she could pay.

But, I was proceeding to say, that Mr. Meade protested against his claim being included in this treaty; because, although he knew that these commissioners would pay over in good faith every dollar of the $5,000,000 set apart for the purpose of paying the claims of our citizens against the Spanish Government, yet there were other claimants in the United States as well as himself; and after paying the expenses of the commission, he knew very well that he could not secure the allowance of an amount equal to his claim.

All claims by citizens of the United States upon

Spain which had been unadjudicated, or unliquidated, as they call it, came within the provisions of the treaty, and this Government was bound to pay the claims. The liquidated or settled claims were made subject to an appeal to the Spanish Government. To that Government the claimant must look for satisfaction; but this was a liquidated claim, and, as such, the Government of Spain was bound to pay it.

There is one point which I regard as of some consequence in reference to this view of the case. It is this: When Mr. Meade procured the liquidation of his claim from the Spanish Government, that Government itself took occasion, through their official agent with this Government, to give information of the fact. Mr. Meade informed the Secretary of State of the United States, also, that it had been settled. The Secretary, in acknowledging Mr. Meade's letter, congratulates him upon the success of his efforts to secure a settlement; and in extending his congratulations, he takes occasion to remark: "The Government feels not a little gratification in having contributed to this satisfactory result." The Secretary takes to himself and to the Government of the United States praise that he had had a hand in procuring that settlement. I ask the committee to mark that fact, because upon it may depend a portion of the argument in favor of this claim. I ask the committee to remember that the Government of the United States interfered itself in the case; that it desired the settlement of the claim, and that it was instrumental in procuring that settlement.

The committee will perceive that I am making a simple statement of facts, not so full even as the report which I have had the honor to present to the House.

I use the few moments in making this simple narrative, divesting it of all attempts at appeal to sympathies, denying myself the pleasure of improving it towards their feelings, but asking only that members shall listen to a simple, naked statement of these facts which involve the comforts of Americans, and which include, in no small degree, the honor of our own country.

Mr. Meade, I say, seeing that he was, without his consent, involved in this treaty, protested against it; but he knew, while he protested, that the Government of the United States, in the exercise of its "eminent domain," had the right to include him. He knew that the Government of the United States had a right to say that "we involve the claim of every citizen of the United States in this settlement, and we assume, while we exercise the power of doing that, the right of settling honorably with those whose property we have taken." When this was done Mr. Meade returned to this country. He brought his claims here, and when the commission was appointed, as it was, he laid this great claim before it. After some time, the dates of which are unnecessary, he was informed that it was not a proper claim on this Government, because it was a liquidated claim, and that treaties, in general, involved only unliquidated claims. After some months spent in discussions of this kind, it became evident to the commission that his claim was specially included in that treaty, and then instead of allowing it, as they might and ought to have done, they threw themselves back on that clause of the treaty which gave the commission the right of judging of the character of the claim. In general, no power can be more just, none can be more prudent than that. We have since that time seen how, even with the exercise of that power, errors may creep in. And Mr. Meade brought to them the full proof. He brought to them the treasury note of the King of Spain, acknowledging the liquidation of the account, and confessing the indebtedness to the man at that time. They demanded of him the proof of that note. That was very singular. Other persons came with naked claims upon our territory, with a mere bill and statement of accounts of how much was due, and the commission demanded of them some proof of those statements. Here was a very different case. However, finding that he was not likely to succeed without the evidences which had satisfied Spain, Mr. Meade resorted to the Minister of Spain to know whether he could procure the proofs necessary. Now, Mr. Chairman, any person who has any knowledge of the Spanish character, will pretty well judge how a Minister of Spain would jump up when he was asked to prove the words of the King of Spain—how he would feel if he was asked to offer some proof of the justice of his Majesty's court.

When Mr. Meade addressed his letter to the Marquis de Anduaga, the Marquis expressed great indignation at the decision of the Commissioners here in doubting the truth of the proceedings of the Spanish King and courts, and added:

"The Spanish Government will regard as a serious insult that what in Spain is acknowledged as most sacred and respectable, should here be pronounced of no value; that it will never consent to have questioned the legality and purity with which your liquidation was made; and which is accompanied by all the marks of authenticity which it can give it; and, in fine, though it should be practicable to reunite all the documents upon which that liquidation was made, his Catholic Majesty knows too well what is due to his own dignity, to the reputation of his ministers, and to the integrity of his tribunals, to consent that a foreign commission shall deem itself authorized to revise their decrees."

That was the answer of the haughty old Don. If they had not any money in Spain, they had some honor left, and they stood upon it when the money was gone. Sir, whatever may be the effect of that feeling which the Spaniard has, upon the gentleman's family whose claims are now before us, you and I, I hope, will ever respect that national feeling which rises indignant at an imputation cast upon the character of its judicial institutions; and when once the head of a nation has confessed its indebtedness to an individual, it becomes dishonorable almost in that head to lend itself to inquiries as regards the motives of that procedure. Nevertheless, Spain was a waning country. Island after island had been filibustered away. Mexico was retreating from its grasp. Venezuela was passing away. Ecuador, Chili, Bolivia, and all those with new fangled names and new forms of government, were passing from the grasp of the mother country. She began to feel that a new power was springing up, and though she had all the feelings of honor that recognize an insult, and all the remains of the old Castilian pride that would resent it, yet she said: this new republic is not so sensitive to these matters as we are, and perhaps we had better yield.

The Government of the United States consented at last to interfere again in behalf of Mr. Meade, and they determined that they would ask the Spanish Government to supply these records under the treaty; and they sent thither, after eight months waiting. Governments do not move fast in these matters, and they did not do it, I am sorry to say, until the distinguished Secretary of State had, with a characteristic zeal, broken a lance or two with the Spanish Minister on the merits of the case—preferring to keep up his own credit as a severe letter-writer to the establishment of the just claim of a fellow-citizen. But de mortuis nil nisi bonum. After some time, Spain consented to the demand. After some six months she ordered that the archives of the Spanish courts should be examined; and, accordingly, from pigeon-hole to pigeon-hole the clerks went. But, in the mean time, these of Government had been changed, and the documents of the various courts were in transitu from Seville to Cadiz, and from Cadiz to Madrid; and they were about in the same situation as some other State Departments have been; and the Spanish Government said, we cannot supply you with all these papers now, but you shall be furnished with them as soon as possible. And while they were considering that matter, while they were hesitating upon this last failure, the time of the commission expired, the door was closed, and Mr. Meade was excluded from the benefits of that treaty.

It is the duty of a Government to perform the duties it owes to any of its citizens, as much so as any of the duties which it owes to any other Government. If Mr. Meade had procured, as he might and can now procure, I presume, all the proofs of his claim upon the Spanish Government, the commission which sat in that city in 1822 and 1823 would have allowed the claim; but he could not produce them. Is that his fault? You may say it was his misfortune. Undoubtedly it was.

But there is one clause of this treaty of 1820, which says that the Government of Spain pledges itself to supply the proofs which it has in its possession. Then the Government of the United States was solemnly pledged to demand those proofs. Suppose the Spanish Government had said, we refuse to give you up the sovereignty of Florida; suppose they had said, we retain, notwithstanding the solemn compact of this treaty, all those vast everglades, and all the lands lying between the mouths and heads of the rivers, and, instead of allowing you to take them in fee-simple, we will give them to our favorites, the Governor General of Cuba and others, the Government of the United States could have justly declared war, and could have justly taken possession of what would give to them full satisfaction. What the Government of the United States owed to itself in the enforcement and fulfillment of that treaty, it owed to every gentleman concerned in the claims involved in that treaty. There can be no doubt to any man acquainted with national law, that the Government of the United States was in fault in not making a treaty in behalf of Mr. Meade. He was foreclosed by the very terms of the treaty, and he had no longer any claim against Spain. If he had, there are gentlemen in the sound of my voice who would rejoice at it. Five hundred thousand dollars against the Government of Old Spain, and she not pay it, with Cuba within two days' sail of our shores! We might annex Cuba to Florida, and tie her to the Everglades. It would be one of the best claims that we could institute against her, and I would ask nothing, if I desired to set up as a filibuster, but to demand immediate compliance with this claim of $400,000 or $500,000. But I am arguing before the Congress of the United States, and in the presence of those who, while they see no wrong done to the Government, know that there is laid upon their consciences a sense to do right to the people of that Government, and to maintain the dignity and honor of this nation with regard to individuals as well as communities. They will not see injustice permitted towards one who has a claim upon us of this kind.

This is a claim of a citizen of the United States, a native of the State of Pennsylvania, a merchant; and in that character is involved almost all we recognize of honor between man and man. It is to the merchant that our country owes much of its fame abroad. It is from the merchant and his business that the country derives its means and methods of greatness. Here, sir, is one who, by our neglect, has endured losses, "enough to break a royal merchant down," and we stand here for thirty years debating whether we will consider his wrongs or not; spending more time in the discussion of the claim than the claim amounts to; not that I think that wrong, for in the way of honor, and truth, and justice I would cavil on the ninth part of a hair. I would spend ten thousand dollars in legislating upon one dime, if the spending of it involved the principle of honor or public faith.

Mr. CLINGMAN, (interrupting.) I have been listening to the argument of the gentleman, and I want to obtain information upon this subject. If I understand the gentleman's position, it is that this claim was properly included, and ought to have been allowed, by the commission. That the reason that the commission did not do so, was, that proofs were not furnished in time before the commission was dissolved; and that this Government was under obligation to obtain the proof and submit it. They failed to do so, and therefore the commission declined to pass upon the claim; and that the claim was lost in that way.

Mr. CHANDLER. That was the a fortiori part of the claim.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Did the commission leave the claim in a condition of suspense when they adjourned; or did they reject it?

Mr. CHANDLER. They did not directly reject it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I understand that the Government should have obtained the proof; and if they had done so, the claim would have been allowed?

Mr. CHANDLER. The money was all expended upon the other claims.

Mr. CLINGMAN. But if this proof had been furnished to the commission in time, there is a probability, and, in the opinion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a certainty, that they would have allowed the claim.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no doubt of it. There is in the report a statement of what the claim was.

Mr. CLINGMAN. These inquiries are made merely to get at the facts of the case, as it is an important one.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should regret to have the intelligence of the committee rely entirely upon the statements which I make, for I see that while I have confined my objections within the limits of the report, I have omitted many parts of it, which, if examined, would give strength, and will give strength, to the future arguments which will be made upon this case. I forbear any argument here; I forbear any appeal to this committee beyond this statement; and I reserve to myself the right to reply to objections which I presume will be made. I have no doubt that they will be made, for they have been heretofore, and I am prepared to answer them. But I do not think it is the part of an advocate to anticipate them, and make them known. I have already referred to only a few strong points which will attract the attention of the committee whenever the objections are made. One of these I wish to recall the attention of the committee to: and that is, that the Government of the United States, while it felicitated Mr. Meade upon the success he had in procuring a liquidation of his account, did not fail to take to itself the credit of having assisted in that matter; that between the death of the treaty of 1819 and the treaty of 1820, that treaty was null and void, and the treaty had no bearing upon the condition of the two countries, and the citizens of the two countries, between the death of the old treaty and the birth of the new treaty; that the liquidation of the claim by the Spanish Government, in the full belief, to all appearances, that no new treaty was to be made. Or, if they believed, as they might believe, that two great nations, like the United States and Spain, would not exist without a treaty, they might have taken it for granted that a treaty would have been made, including all claims.

Mr. Chairman, I have already occupied more of the time of the committee than I intended. I repeat, that I have endeavored to confine myself to a simple narrative of the facts, avoiding all argument upon them. I have also avoided appealing to the feelings of the House. I appeal to the justice of the House, and to their justice alone. This is a claim brought against this Government by the family of a deceased American; and that family and I believe in its justice. That family has hope and confidence in your justice.

Mr. Chairman, nothing strikes me more with a feeling of dread than to hear that somebody has died and left his heirs a claim upon the Government of the United States. Sir, in the kingdom of Siam, when a Minister wants to break down a rival Minister at court, he proceeds to ask the King to give his rival a white elephant. The King does it; and the favored man spends his wealth, his time, and his life, in trying to take care of this royal gift of the King. Mr. Chairman, this white elephant is an emblem of the claims which are brought against our Government. Heavy hearts and light purses are the consequence of them. Few, very few, succeed—scarcely enough to induce those who follow to hold on. Sir, of the thousands who ascend the steps of this Capitol, having claims upon the justice of Congress, scarcely any succeed, unless the claim is represented by a lady. Then, sometimes, they do succeed. They succeed in justice; they succeed in truth; but, Mr. Chairman, there are too many young and gallant members of this House to allow a female to plead for justice at the hands of the House, and plead in vain; and even those like you and I, Mr. Chairman, with mottled locks upon our heads—we vote for these female-enforced claims also, and for the same reason—we cannot but remember that such things were, and were most dear.

But, sir, I do not propose to continue these remarks any further at present, reserving to myself the right to answer any objections which may be raised during the progress of the debate, when I use the privilege of the author of a report to close the argument.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This claim, Mr. Chairman, has been pending for a long time before Congress. It is one of considerable magnitude and importance, both as to the amount and the principle involved, and on which payment is asked of the United States. My attention having been specifically called to it by the gentleman who is engaged in its prosecution before Congress, I did look into it with a view of satisfying myself as to its justice and merits. If the principle on which it rests be right; if it can be shown by the provisions of the treaty with Spain, ratified in October, 1820, that the Government of the United States did renounce the claim of Meade, now presented here, and relinquish all liability of the Spanish Government therefor, and assumed its settlement, then it is a valid claim against the United States, and the Representatives of the people upon this floor, and the Representatives of the States in the other end of this building, should provide for its adjudication and payment upon the principles and in the manner specified in the treaty. There are, however, two sides to this case; and when I am called on to vote this money to the heirs of the original claimant, I must look to the rights of the other side, to the rights of those whose money must be taken to pay it, if paid at all. If there be any valid claim at all, it is provided for in the treaty of February, 1819. By the ninth article of that treaty it is provided:

"The renunciation of the United States will extend to all the injuries mentioned in the convention of the 11th August, 1802.

"2d. To all claims on account of prizes made by French privateers, and condemned by French consuls within the territory and jurisdiction of Spain.

"3d. To all claims of indemnities on account of the suspension of the right of deposit at New Orleans in 1802.

"4th. To all claims of citizens of the United States on the Government of Spain, arising from the unlawful seizures at sea, and in the ports and territories of Spain, or the Spanish colonies."

It will be conceded that in none of these provisions is Mr. Meade's claim provided for. If provided for at all, it is provided for in the fifth clause of the ninth article. It is as follows:

"5th. To all claims of citizens of the United States on the Spanish Government, statements of which soliciting the interposition of the Government of the United States, have been presented to the Department of State, or to the Minister of the United States in Spain, since the date of the convention of 1802, and until the signature of this treaty."

If the claim is embraced at all by the treaty, it is under the clause which I have just read. It is embraced, however, not because of any inherent merit, but, as I conceive, merely for the reason that it was presented by our Minister to the Spanish authorities for adjudication.

On what basis does this claim rest? I ask the legal gentlemen of this committee to determine whether it was such a claim, in view of its origin, that it devolved upon the Government of the United States to any degree whatever the duty of interposing in behalf of the claimant.

Was there any obligation, in consequence of Mr. Meade's being a citizen of the United States, for his Government to interfere and ask a settlement of his claim? Sir, he had left his own country. He had located in and been for years a resident in the kingdom of Spain. That country was embroiled in wars. His Government was a neutral Power. During his residence there, he made contracts with the Spanish Government to furnish them with tobacco and flour. He purchased a draft, I believe, upon Mexico, then a province of Spain. That draft was not honored and paid promptly, and he alleges, as a part of his claim, that he had to keep a vessel in the port of Vera Cruz for some months, waiting for his $300,000, the proceeds of the draft, to take back to Spain.

Again, he took upon himself the execution of a commission in bankruptcy, and when he had got the funds in his hands he failed to pay them over. Perhaps it was not strictly legal for him to pay them out; I do not know how that is; but some of the claimants who believed they were entitled to a part of the funds of the bankrupt concern, took legal steps against Mr. Meade, and for failing to pay over that money, he was incarcerated in jail, according to the laws and customs of Spain. He alleges, I believe, that he had paid the money into the royal treasury of Spain, under a decree of the proper authorities of the Government. These are the items of which his claim is made up, for losses and damages in his commercial and business transactions with the Government of Spain, and his imprisonment growing out of and under that commission of bankruptcy.

Now, sir, this is the character of his claim, contracted, under these circumstances, against a Government with which we were at peace, for furnishing that Government, which was engaged in wars with other nations, with the sinews of war. But afterwards this Government did come in, as a mere matter of grace and favor—as I think I shall show before I get through—and present the claim of Mr. Meade, and ask for its settlement.

Well, sir, thus stood Mr. Meade's claim in 1819

when the treaty was negotiated in this city between Mr. Adams, then Secretary of State, and the Spanish Minister. The condition was that that treaty was to be ratified within a limited time, or else it was to be null and void. The President and Senate of the United States ratified it, but the Spanish Government failed to ratify it. When they failed to ratify it, Mr. Meade, through the friendly interposition of our then Minister at Madrid, Mr. Forsyth, again presented his claim to the Spanish Government for liquidation, and that Government did settle and liquidate the claim. They acknowledged the debt, or, rather, they compromised with him, and agreed to give him a certificate upon the Royal exchequer for the amount of his claim, which took it out of the provisions of the treaty with Spain.

Mr. CHANDLER. The last treaty.

Mr. JONES. The last treaty was the same as the first, with, perhaps, a few slight alterations in regard to some grants of land in Florida. When gentlemen assert that we got the Floridas for these debts, they should recollect that we transferred to Spain, by that treaty, a country larger in extent, and more fertile than the Floridas ever can be. We transferred in that treaty—as one of the reports which I have upon this subject shows—the entire country between the Sabine and the Rio Grande—what is now Texas. It was thus that this claim stood at the time of the rejection, or rather failure, on the part of Spain to ratify the treaty, when Mr. Forsyth, our Minister, again interposed to procure its acknowledgment and settlement by the Spanish Government. The Spanish Government did, under the interposition of the United States, acknowledge and settle the unsettled claim of Meade; and on the 17th of May, 1820, gave to Meade a certificate of the amount of his ascertained debt, for $491,153 62, and an order on the Royal Treasury of Spain, with interest from that date; which was not paid, because of the embarrassed state of the Spanish finances. This acknowledgment and finding of the claim of Meade by the Spanish Government, at a time when there was no treaty ratified or pending between the two Governments, entirely changed the character and nature of Meade's claim, and took it out of the provisions of the treaty of 1819, if it had ever been embraced. After the settlement of Meade's claim, the treaty of 1819 was revived, and finally ratified by the two Governments in October, 1820. That the settled, funded claim of Meade, as it was at the time of the ratification of the treaty in October, after its liquidation, was not included and provided for, it is only necessary to refer to the report of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The committee, in their report to this House, say:

"As the treaty stands, this Government is exonerated from the payment of Mr. Meade's claim. The negotiations being thus definitively closed, Mr. Meade was thrown upon his own exertions.

"The negotiation being thus definitively closed, Mr. Meade was thrown upon his own exertions. He continued to urge his claim on the Government of Spain, and, with the aid of the friendly offices of our Minister, was at length successful. On the 19th May, 1820, his claims were liquidated and their validity acknowledged; and a certificate in due form was given to him, as evidence of his acknowledged debt, amounting, in his own right, to $373,879 88.

"This adjustment was made by both parties in the faith that Spain, and Spain alone, was to be responsible for the debt.

"It was made at the instance of our Government, which even took some credit to itself for its agency in effecting it.

"The grounds of the claim, as it stood at the signing the treaty, were entirely changed, both in regard to the evidence and responsibility. From an unliquidated claim, resting on the evidence of original contracts and of personal injuries, for which the United States were then quasi responsible, it had now become a liquidated debt, resting on the express contract of the Government, and for which Spain alone was responsible.

"This change of the character of the claim, thus communicated to our Government, was per se a revocation of all prior authority to interpose on behalf of the claimant, and a renunciation of any benefit, under any construction or understanding of the treaty, or that could accrue from its rescission at any future period.

"The provisions of the treaty, as signed, under any construction, were no longer applicable or appropriate to the case. The claim on which the interposition of the Government had been solicited no longer existed. There was no longer anything, either as to amount or validity, for adjudication. There was nothing left to be done but the payment of an acknowledged debt.

"It does not appear that Mr. Meade gave any new authority to the Government to interpose on his behalf, or in any way assented to waive the benefit of the responsibility thus assumed by Spain; but, on the contrary, that the subsequent interference of the Government was without his consent, and against his remonstrances.

"About the same time negotiations were renewed at Madrid, and the signed treaty of 1819, with an additional article annulling three Spanish grants of land in Florida, was offered on our part as the basis of the negotiation—not as deriving any validity from its having been signed by the parties, or from its having been ratified by this Government, but as a proposition which was presented for the then future assent of the Cortes and of the United States.

"In October, 1820, that proposition and the memorial of Mr. Meade were both pending before the Cortes; and the question was then raised, if the treaty should be agreed to, who was to pay Mr. Meade's debts—Spain or the United States? A committee was appointed to ascertain the fact. The committee was informed by the Spanish Ministry that the debt was to be assumed by the United States; and on applying to our Minister, they understood him to say that it should be paid by the United States if the treaty was agreed to by the Cortes, and that the debt spoken of was the debt as acknowledged by the Government of Spain.

"Our Minister, however, did not understand the conversation as having any official character. He took no note of it, nor did he make any communication respecting it to his Government; nor does he admit having given any assurance that the debt should be paid, though he thinks it probable he may have said that it was provided for by the treaty."

Now, sir, there stands the report of the committee; and by it they show conclusively, beyond doubt or cavil, that Meade's debt against Spain was not included by any one of the provisions of the treaty. In order to make it a good claim against the United States, such an one as we would be justifiable in voting to pay out of the Treasury of our own Government, it is necessary to relieve it from the predicament in which the committee were constrained to place it, or rather, in which they found it. How is this to be done? Certainly not by appealing to the provisions of the treaty; for the committee state that, by that instrument, Meade is precluded from all claim against the United States. But, sir, to fix this claim upon the United States, oral testimony is resorted to to prove what was the opinion, respecting this claim, of the American Minister at Madrid, at the time the ratification of the treaty was under consideration by the Spanish Cortes, in October, 1820. For this purpose the deposition of Guera, a member of the Cortes at the time, is produced, not to prove what is in the treaty, but what was the opinion of a particular individual at that time as to whether Meade's debt against the Spanish Government was renounced, and its payment assumed by the United States.

Well, sir, they took the deposition of Guera, some years afterwards, in Philadelphia, I believe, before Francis Hopkinson, and it is here in the report which lies upon your table. He deposes that, in order to avoid any possible misunderstanding or mistake upon the subject, he, with another member of the Cortes, were deputed as a commission, while the treaty was under the consideration of the Cortes, to wait upon the American Minister at Madrid, [Mr. Forsyth,] to inquire of him whether he construed the Meade claim as it then stood, or as it was claimed to stand, to be within the terms of the treaty. He testifies, further, that Mr. Forsyth, our Minister, gave it as his clear and distinct opinion, that the Government of the United States would be responsible for the debt of Meade, if the treaty should be ratified. I will read his language. He says:

"In order to avoid any possible misunderstanding or mistake upon this subject, it was proposed in the Cortes that a committee of two of its members should be appointed to wait on the Minister of the United States, Mr. Forsyth; and accordingly this deponent, with Mr. Thomas Isturio, member of the city Cadiz, were appointed, did wait on Mr. Forsyth, and obtained from that gentleman the clear and distinct assurance that the debt due to Richard W. Meade would certainly be paid to him by the United States, if the treaty were ratified by the Spanish Government, and the conditions above mentioned totally annulled.

"And this deponent solemnly declares that these assurances, thus conveyed to the Cortes, and these assurances only, induced that body to annul the grants of land in the Floridas, two of which had been acknowledged valid in the treaty itself; that had not the Cortes been perfectly satisfied by these solemn assurances that the national debt (as it was regarded) due to Richard W. Meade would be fully paid by the United States, it would not have consented to vacate those grants of land, as far as respected the United States, but would have vacated them as respects individuals to whom they had been made, reserving them to the Spanish nation by the law of reversion, for the express purpose of paying, by them, the debt due to the said Richard W. Meade, either by their transfer to said Meade, or by sale, and with the product thereof would have paid the debt and interest."

Now, sir, it is not for me to say what credit I will attach to this gentleman's testimony; but when his testimony is brought in conflict with that of Mr. Forsyth's; when the question is to be decided by a conflict with the testimony of a number of the Spanish Cortes and that of Mr. Forsyth, who was our Minister at that Court, it is not perhaps necessary for me to say how I should decide it. Mr. Forsyth's testimony is contained in another part of the report; and he says:

"No persons ever presented themselves to me, as a committee of the Spanish Cortes, during my residence in Madrid as the Minister of the United States. If I ever had any conversation with those deputies on the subject of the Florida treaty, I am entirely unconscious that they spoke with me by the authority of that body, or that any importance was attached to the opinion I might express. It is proper to add, that I should have stated, on such application, that I believe Mr. Meade's claim was provided for in the treaty of cession. This opinion was freely expressed to all who conversed with me, and may have been, and no doubt was, to Joseph Moreno de Guera, in the presence of Mr. Isturio. The only conversation I distinctly recollect was held with Martinez de la Rosa, also a deputy of the Cortes, and of the commission to whom was referred the treaty of 1819."

This, sir, is the testimony of Mr. Forsyth. In the conclusion of his deposition he says:

"I wish it to be clearly understood that I do not question the accuracy of Joseph Moreno de Guera's statement further than relates to my conversing with him and Mr. Isturio as a committee from the Cortes. The Cortes may have given them such a commission, and the conversation may have been held in consequence thereof; if it was, I have no recollection of it, and do not know that they were conversing with me officially, and certainly did not say more than that Mr. Meade's claim was included in the treaty of 1819."

Such, sir, is the whole sum and substance of Mr. Forsyth's deposition. The most that can be deduced from it is, that if he expressed any opinion at all in reference to the claim, it was a private opinion, and not officially communicated to the Cortes or those representing the Spanish Government. He says that whatever he said was merely an opinion of his own; but that if he ever expressed any opinion, it was, that this claim was included within the treaty.

Sir, after Mr. Forsyth returned home, he became a member of this House. In the Nineteenth Congress, first session, he, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, made a report upon this very claim, in which he says:

"The committee consider that the decision of the commissioners, forming a tribunal of limited and specified jurisdiction under a treaty, ought to be considered conclusive, and would recommend that the whole subject of claims of citizens of the United States on Spain, prior to 1819, should be deemed settled."

Thus it will be seen that he, as a member of this House, reported a recommendation that the whole subject of claims of citizens of the United States on Spain, prior to 1819, should be considered settled. He goes on further to say:

"But the petitioner alleges that his claim has not been, and could not be, fairly examined by the commissioners, for the want of sundry papers in the hands of the Spanish Government, which they were bound to furnish; which were, at his instance, duly demanded, were not furnished prior to the day fixed by the treaty for the termination of the commission, and the final decision on all claims presented to it; indeed, not yet furnished by the Government of Spain."

Notwithstanding this expression of opinion in the report, the committee reported a bill providing that this and other claims which had been before that commission, should again be referred to the commission for adjudication. The bill, however, did not pass. This case was, in the Nineteenth Congress, First Session, referred to a select committee of the Senate, of which Mr. Thomas M. Clayton was then a member. That gentleman made an unfavorable report upon it, which concluded as follows:

"Resolved, That the prayer of the memorialist ought not to be granted."

Now, sir, from the position in which I find this case, so far as I have thus presented it to this committee, my mind has been brought to the conclusion, that Mr. Meade has no claim upon the Government of the United States, but that he had a good and valid claim upon the Spanish Government, which that Government ought to have paid. If I could have doubted as to the justice of the claim, there is one more document to which I call the attention of the committee, and more especially that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is one of those which have not been brought up in company with reports on this claim for years past. It is one which I doubt whether my friend from Pennsylvania has ever seen or heard of. The report of the committee says:

"Second Session Eighteenth Congress, 1824-25. Petition referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Committee discharged, and referred to the Secretary of State, and reported on.—(Reports No. 40.)"

Now, it happens that the Secretary of State, to which the Senate referred this claim, was the identical gentleman who negotiated this treaty in 1819, to wit: John Quincy Adams. In his report he referred the Senate to two letters which he had written on the subject, one to our Minister in Spain, and the other to the representative at Spain to this Government. It is, to my mind, the clearest, plainest, and most conclusive document I have ever perused. He meets several of the points of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The letter to Mr. Solman, the Spanish Minister, is among the papers appended to the report of the committee; but the one written by Mr. Adams to our Minister at Madrid, is not in it; and it seems to be out of place in the document where it is printed. It was a considerable time before I could find it. It is headed: "Extract of the general instructions, No. 1, from Mr. Adams, Secretary of State, to Mr. Nelson, Minister Plenipotentiary to Spain, dated Department of State, Washington, 28th April, 1823." It goes on to say that:

"A letter from the Spanish Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Solman, dated the 15th of April, has been received at this Department, inclosing a copy of one from Mr. Anduaga to Mr. R. W. Meade, of 16th October, 1822, relating to his claim pending before the commissioners under the Florida treaty, translations of these papers, and a copy of my answer to Mr. Solman's letter, are herewith inclosed. The claim of Mr. Meade, as presented to the commissioners, was palpably not, and could not be embraced by the treaty, as an order for payment of it by the Spanish Department of Finance. Spain was undoubtedly bound to the payment of it in full; and so she was for the payment of all the certificates of her public debt which were purchasable in the market at thirty or forty per cent. of their nominal value."

My friend from Pennsylvania spoke of these people having been kept out of their money so long; that it should be paid in full because it was a settled, liquidated debt; but here your own Secretary of State tells you at the time that it was not, and could not be included within the treaty. He shows you the reason why it could not be included. He maintains that the debt, such as it was, on Spain, was worth but thirty or forty cents on the dollar in market. Spain was not able to pay her debts at the time, and that was the reason, as Mr. Adams shows, why she did not pay this liquidated debt of Mr. Meade.

But again, Mr. Adams says:

"All the claims provided for by the treaty were unsettled claims, the proper subjects of compromise, and the avowed and unequivocal principle of the treaty was to make such compromise. This was well known to Mr. Meade, as well as to the Spanish Government. The first report of the Spanish Junta of four counselors in favor of Mr. Meade's claim, was made on the 30th September, 1819, after the termination of the period when the treaty should have been ratified by Spain. The certificate delivered to Mr. Meade in May, 1820, directed that the sum which had been found due to him should be paid out of the funds of the Royal Finance Department, with interest. The treaty, though not ratified by Spain, was then public in Europe and America. It had twice been communicated by the President of the United States to Congress—first in February, 1819, immediately after it was signed, and again in December of the same year, when it was published with the documents at the commencement of that session."

Then, sir, it was not possible that Mr. Meade could have been mistaken. He understood the provisions of this treaty; he understood the nature and character of his claim; and he knew, I doubt not, that his claim was not one of those provided for by this treaty.

But, says Mr. Adams:

"It was well known to Mr. Meade that it did not provide for his claim thus liquidated and acknowledged. If he, then, expected that it should ever be chargeable upon the United States, that was the time for him to have so declared to the Spanish Government. The nature of his claim was entirely changed by the liquidation, but it made, and could make, no corresponding change in the stipulation of the treaty. It was not for an order on the funds of the Royal Finance Department of Spain, for near half a million of dollars, with interest from May, 1820, that the United States had undertaken to provide; and the real effect of the liquidation and certificate was to take the case entirely out of the treaty."

Now, sir, my friend from Pennsylvania dwelt somewhat upon the fact that our Government had taken some credit to itself for having aided Mr. Meade in procuring an acknowledgment of his debt; but, sir, it is not so surprising that the officers of the Government should have taken to themselves some credit for that, as that Mr. Meade should claim that because they had done so, they were bound to pay the debt. Upon this point, Mr. Adams says:

"It was a strange use to make of the warm interest and ardent solicitation of the American Minister in Spain in Mr. Meade's favor, to obtain a settlement by Spain of his claims, and of the friendly congratulation of the American Secretary of State, after it had been obtained, when the treaty had no existence, to contend that these manifestations of kindness to him, bound the United States to payment in full of his demand upon Spain, if the treaty should ever be ratified."

There is the answer of the Secretary of State who negotiated that treaty.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will my friend from Tennessee allow me to say in reply, that whatever Mr. Meade may have done, or Mr. Adams may have responded to him, it was not included in my argument. My remarks upon that point were intended to meet a charge which has sometimes been made, and which I dare say will be uttered here, to the effect that Mr. Meade made his settlement by some collusion on the part of the Government. That was all I intended. I did not suppose that our Government was thereby bound to prosecute the matter further, nor do I admit that Mr. Meade's case ought to have been excluded from the treaty.

Mr. JONES. I did not know that any such charge of collusion had been made. I do not make any such; nor do I know why any such charge should be made; for I suppose that the Spanish Government, at the time they made this settlement, expected at least to be able to pay the money themselves.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not mean to impute that the gentleman from Tennessee had made such a charge. I merely meant to lodge that as a caveat against anything of the kind.

Mr. JONES. Here is the principle upon which they settled; and it seems that they did not settle it exactly upon evidence, but upon a compromise:

"And, lastly, we do hereby certify, that, in compliance with the above mentioned order of his Majesty, and having employed on our part all the means that prudence could suggest, and after holding several conferences with the concerned, we have compromised the matter, and agreed that the 8,500,000 reals, for damages and personal injuries claimed by him according to his reclamations, shall be reduced to 5,461,500 reals vellon; making the sum total due to Mr. Meade, for his own claims and for those of the persons he represents, 9,823,072 reals and 11 maravedis, which amount he must receive from the Royal Finance for all his claims to principal and interest, (the latter calculated down to the date of the liquidation,) and for the damages and personal injuries above mentioned, in this order, viz: 7,477,595 reals and 7 maravedis belonging to Mr. Meade himself; 1,563,590 reals belonging to Mr. John Dickson; and 841,887 reals and 4 maravedis vellon, belonging to the American citizens, consigned to Mr. James Wardrop, as appears more extensively and minutely from the documents of proceedings, to which we refer ourselves; and for the complete fulfillment of the royal order above mentioned, we give the present certificate."

JOSE CANGA ARGUELLES.

Mr. Adams goes on, in his letter to Mr. Nelson, and says, further:

"The principle of the treaty is a compromise of undisturbed claims. The principle of the liquidation was payment in full, with profuse allowances for interest and damages; these, very suitably for Spain to make in acknowledgment of great services of the claimant to her, were in no wise proper for the United States, being under no such obligations to assume, nor could they assume them without wrong to other claimants, more entitled to favor from them, though less from Spain, than Mr. Meade. In that liquidation it is abundantly shown, by Mr. Meade himself, that the Spanish tribunals intended to discharge a debt of Spanish gratitude, as well as of justice; to remunerate services, as well as to fulfill engagements. It is doubtful whether any others of the claimants, under the treaty, will obtain any allowance for interest, even simple interest, upon the clearest and most inveterate of their demands. Mr. Meade's liquidated claim calls for interest upon interest on a debt of half a million of dollars; compound interest accruing after the treaty was signed, and accumulating by the act of Spain herself, in withholding the stipulated ratification of the treaty. Other claimants besides Mr. Meade, had been wrongfully and far more rigorously imprisoned by authority of the Spanish Government. Should they be paid at the rate of nearly $30,000 a year for such detention, the $5,000,000 allotted to the settlement of the claims, five times doubled, would scarcely suffice for their satisfaction. To complete the demonstration that Mr. Meade's liquidated claim was not included in the treaty, let it be supposed that the order, which, in May, 1820, he received upon the funds of the Royal Finance Department, had been immediately paid, and that the Spanish Government had afterwards ratified the treaty as it did, Mr. Meade would assuredly then have had no claim under the treaty; and as little could the Spanish Government have claimed repayment by the United States of the money paid to Mr. Meade.

It does seem to me that this argument of Mr. Adams is clear and conclusive; that is, that if the Spanish Government, after the claim had been liquidated, had paid Mr. Meade, he of course would have had no claim upon this Government. I read still further from this same letter, "and why was not the order upon the Royal Finance Department immediately paid?" Mr. Meade himself has answered, that it was owing to the embarrassments of the new revolution. He petitioned the Cortes for immediate payment, and to designate the mode of payment. But he could obtain no definite resolution from the Cortes, till the 5th of October, 1820, the day they decided in favor of ratifying the Florida treaty; upon which occasion Mr. Meade says:

"They ordered that my memorial should be united with the papers relative to the treaty, and submitted to the King, in order to have it ascertained whether the American Government had consented to the introduction of my individual claim into the negotiation of the treaty, and if so, that the American Government had distinctly assumed upon itself the payment of my claim, and had wholly exonerated Spain from it; but if it should be found that my case had not been taken into view by the negotiators, and was not distinctly understood as embraced in the treaty stipulations, then, in that case, decreed the immediate payment of the debt by the Spanish Government. Upon this reference from the Cortes, the Spanish Minister of State pronounced an unequivocal opinion that the debt had been distinctly and specifically assumed by the United States in exoneration of Spain; or would be so upon the exchange of the ratification."

"Here we see that the Cortes, when advising the ratification of the treaty before them, considered the assumption by the United States of Mr. Meade's claim as entirely depending on the question whether it had individually, distinctly, and specifically been treated for in the negotiation between Mr. Onís and the American Secretary of State. This the Cortes did not know, with the treaty and all the documents of the negotiation before them."

Then, sir, it was not until they had determined to ratify this treaty that they pretended to give Meade any satisfaction as to whether they would pay his debt or not; and it was because, as Mr. Adams says, and as Mr. Meade himself has shown, of the embarrassed condition of the Spanish Government. It was because they had not the money at their disposal with which to pay the claim. When it was ratified, they found it convenient to try to put Mr. Meade off for a time, and to put him upon this Government for the payment of a debt which they were bound to pay.

Again, Mr. Adams further says:

"Mr. Meade proceeds in his memorial to say, 'the opinion of the Minister was founded (as I was informed from high authority) upon facts said to have been notorious to the negotiators of the treaty, and verified, as it was said, by the official communications of Mr. Onís to the Spanish Government, to wit: that my claim had been introduced by name into the discussion between Mr. Adams and Mr. Onís, who finally agreed, in their verbal conferences, that it should be assumed and paid by the United States; that Mr. Onís proposed the insertion of my name, and a specific stipulation to that effect in the treaty; but that Mr. Adams thought it unnecessary to do so, though he agreed to the insertion of a clause intended to comprehend my case, without naming it, and to exonerate Spain from the debt, with the understanding, nevertheless, that it was to be specifically assumed and paid by the United States.' I shall not inquire how it happened that the Cortes, with this fact said to have been verified by the official communications of Mr. Onís to the Spanish Government, before them, could have referred it to the King, to ascertain whether Mr. Meade's claim had been assumed by the United States or not; nor how the Minister of State, to whom it was again referred, should have been so uncertain with regard to the fact, as merely to give an opinion that the claim had been specifically assumed by the United States, or would be so, upon the exchange of the ratifications. Neither shall I ask how it happened that Mr. Meade, at Madrid, in October, 1820, with his claim liquidated and acknowledged, and demanding immediate payment, when put off with these uncertainties of the Cortes and the Minister, should have contented himself with this information from high authority, of facts said to have been notorious, and said to have been verified by official communications of Mr. Onís to his Government, without demanding, as, under those circumstances he had the unquestionable right, and the deepest interest to do, authenticated copies of these official communications of Mr. Onís, to produce them before the American Government: How it happened that for this only document which could have given Mr. Meade the shadow of a claim upon the American Government for specific satisfaction of his liquidated claim, he took at Madrid this information from high authority of things said to have been said, and then came to the United States, and called upon their President and Senate to palm upon the people of this Union the payment of half a million of dollars, with interest, to him, or to annul, by a conditional ratification, the Florida treaty, with this hearsay of hearsay, for the only color of his demand."

"But the facility with which Mr. Meade received upon trust this information from high authority of an official document which would have been the only admissible voucher for his new claim upon the United States, is not the only surprising part of this allegation in his memorial to the President. He says that the Spanish Minister of State pronounced an unequivocal opinion that the debt had been distinctly and specifically assumed by the United States, in exoneration of Spain, or would be so upon the exchange of the ratifications. That it had not been, is now shown beyond all power of reply, nor was it at the exchange of the ratifications. Mr. Meade, after failing in the attempt to stay the ratification of the United States, did apply to the Spanish Minister then here, General Vives, to make some such specific reference to his individual claim, which General Vives explicitly declined. There was, indeed, no pretence upon which it could have been made, and the tale which Mr. Meade had received from high authority, appears to be no other than a device to elude his importunities for payment, and only proves the consciousness of necessity for resorting to fiction to give a show of coloring to Mr. Meade's liquidated claim, as chargeable to the United States."

Mr. Adams says, further:

"The subsequent liquidation and acknowledgment of the Spanish tribunals gave Mr. Meade a new and entirely distinct claim upon Spain. It was an order upon the Spanish treasury for a specific sum of money, with interest from May, 1820. The effect of this transaction was to take the claims of Mr. Meade entirely out of the treaty, and Spain, by the subsequent ratification of the treaty, without noticing in any manner this claim or its liquidation, gave the United States some reason for insisting, were they so disposed, that no provision for any part of it had been made by the treaty at all."

"But the rule of equity applicable to this case, and by which substantial justice may be done to all parties is this:

"Mr. Meade's claims, as existing and exhibited before the signature of the treaty, are included in its provisions. Their amount and validity must be proved to the Commissioners conformably to the provisions of the treaty. The allowance or rejection of every item in them must be determined on principles applied by the Commissioners to all other claims of a similar description before them. The sum finally awarded to him must be subject to all the other provisions of the treaty. To charge the United States in the exact proportion stipulated by the treaty, and to suffer deduction from their admitted account, in common with all the other claims, as they may be finally admitted. So far have they been assumed by the United States, and so far has Spain been exonerated from them. For the balance of the sum which Mr. Meade may thus receive from the United States to equalize in amount the specific sum with interest, from May, 1820, awarded him by the Spanish liquidation, his claim remains unimpaired upon the Spanish treasury. It was never assumed or renounced by the United States—it was never cancelled by Spain. For the decisions of her own tribunals, subsequent to the signature of the treaty, Spain alone must be responsible. The treaty alone must be the standard to which the decisions of the American Commissioners, and the obligations of the United States must conform."

Mr. Chairman, I think any gentleman who will take up and peruse this letter of Mr. Adams to Mr. Nelson, upon this subject, will have sufficient information to give him an insight into the whole history of this claim, and determine him as to its validity.

This is a claim which has been frequently considered upon this floor since I have been a member of this House. The last time within my recollection any action was taken upon it, was in 1848, when it was discussed at length. No report of that debate is preserved, because the debates upon private claims were not then reported at all. I recollect, however, that it was discussed for three or four days; and the Journal will show that when it was reported to the House, a motion was made to lay it upon the table, which was carried by a very large majority—I think by 118 to 38. From that time to this, I believe, there has been no action in this House upon this claim.

Mr. Chairman, as I said in the outset, if I believed this Government was legally and equitably bound to pay this debt, I, for one, should be in favor of paying it to the last farthing. Such, however, is not my impression.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I have risen, Mr. Chairman, to reply briefly to what the gentleman, who has just taken his seat [Mr. JONES, of Tennessee] said on one of the points, which he raised. This I can do most effectually by turning against himself his most material witness—the witness, among all he has summoned to his aid, on whom he most relies. This witness is John Quincy Adams.

By our treaty with Spain, we exonerated her from the payment of the claims of our citizens upon her, and assumed to pay them ourselves, so far as they were valid, and so far as $5,000,000 would be sufficient to pay them. The honorable gentleman denies that the claim of Richard W. Meade has a place among these claims. I maintain that it has. This is the issue between us. To sustain himself he has quoted largely from Mr. Adams. But the gentleman has, surely, in this instance, allowed clouds to come into his very clear brain, and hence he has seen one thing for another. What has he proved by Mr. Adams? Why, that we are not held by the Spanish liquidation of this claim—a liquidation subsequent to the signing of the treaty. I admit that we are not held by it. But I insist that we are bound to recognize the claim in spite of that liquidation. So insisted Mr. Adams, as I shall prove by his words, quoted from the same letter from which the honorable gentleman quoted:

"It was intended by the Government of the United States, that Mr. Meade's claims, as then exhibited to them, unsettled, disputed claims, a mixed character, for contracts for losses upon exchange, for depreciation of Spanish Government paper, for interest, and for damages, all, except the first, of most uncertain amount and validity, should, in common with the other claims provided for, have the benefit of the treaty. But no stipulation of special favor to the claims of Mr. Meade, at the expense of other claimants, was, or would be intended by the Government of the United States. The claim presented by Mr. Meade to the Commissioners is for an acknowledged debt from the Spanish Government to him, dated May, 1820, and directed to be paid out of the funds of the Royal Finance Department, with interest. To say that this is not the claim which, in February, 1819, the United States had renounced and agreed to compound, would be to say that daylight is not darkness."

Now, whether the claim in question comes within the scope of the treaty, I am willing to leave to the decision of Mr. Adams—to the decision of the gentleman's own witness. I am glad that it was the honorable gentleman himself who called Mr. Adams to the stand; for he has thereby rendered himself incompetent to impeach him.

I might pause here. But I will add a few special reasons why the soundness of Mr. Adams's conclusion in this case is to be relied on. It is to be relied on, not only because Mr. Adams, in addition to being an honest man, was a preeminently able one; nor because, also, that he gave to this subject, as the paper from which we have quoted shows, the most patient and laborious investigation; but because, also, that Mr. Adams disliked Mr. Meade; nay, well nigh abhorred him. Mr. A. was a man of very strong feelings. He did not like and dislike so much as he loved and hated. He scouted the pretensions of Meade to a peculiar sacredness for his claim; and seemed well nigh to hate Meade for those pretensions. He was willing to admit that the treaty provided for this claim; nay, he insisted, as we have seen, in the strongest terms, that the treaty did provide for it. But, so far from admitting that it was a stronger claim than all others, he argued to show that it was weaker than some others. Now, I hold, that because of Mr. Adams's strong disapprobation of the course of Mr. Meade, all the greater value is to be ascribed to what he felt constrained to say in favor of Mr. Meade's claim—in favor of our Government's recognizing it among the claims from which it released Spain, and which it took upon itself.

We are not then at liberty to reject this claim, because Mr. Meade was so foolish as to arrogate peculiar favor for it. He did not forfeit his claim by reason of this folly. If I claim that my neighbor shall give to my debt a preference over a dozen other equally just debts, I am not to lose my debt because of my arrogance. The debt is none the less obligatory for my folly and impudence.

Nor are we at liberty to reject this claim because Spain liquidated it after the signing of the treaty. My neighbors may, very impertinently, undertake to liquidate or determine the true amount of the debts I owe, but such impertinence does not cancel my obligation to pay them.

I have not time to see all, or even much, of what the commissioners said upon this claim. My eye falls upon the closing words of one of them, Judge White; and I will read them:

"Believing, as I do, from the other testimony, that Mr. Meade has a well-founded claim, or at least a claim which the Spanish Government considered well-founded, I am perfectly willing to require any document from that Government which there is reason to think they possess, which will elucidate those transactions; and for that purpose am willing to continue the cause. If we can procure more evidence, it is well; we shall have greater certainty in our ultimate decision. If we cannot procure more, we must come to the best conclusion in our power, from the proofs, as they now exist, as to the validity of the claims and the extent of allowance."

Now, surely, these words do not favor the idea that the Meade claim did not fall among the claims which the commissioners were to investigate. These words show, on the contrary, that what the commissioners required was the establishing of the claim—the proving of the debt.

But, it is said that Mr. Meade failed to prove his claim. I admit that he did. I admit that the commissioners were right in exacting the kind of proof which they did exact. But was it the fault of Mr. Meade that he did not produce it? Far from it. The proof exacted was in the hands, and among the archives, of the Spanish Government; and that Government, because of its foolish pride, refused to give up the proof. The Royal certificate of the amount of the debt due to Mr. Meade was, as that Government haughtily held, all we needed and all we were entitled to.

In these circumstances, what could Mr. Meade do more? I answer, that he had nothing more to do. The matter then lay between the two Governments. Our Government had discharged the Spanish Government from all obligation to pay the claims of our citizens, and that Government had, in turn, bound itself to put our Government in possession, so far as it could, of all vouchers and papers which could serve to establish the character of those claims. Our Government was bound to enforce this provision of the treaty against Spain.

Shall our Government pay the whole amount of this claim? Perhaps it should not do so. I have no doubt, however, that in the liquidation of the claim by the Spanish Government, the amount was made small enough. Unprecedented pains were taken to bring the amount within the limits of strict justice. Moreover, it was then expected that the Spanish Government, not ours, would have to pay it. Hence, that Government is not to be supposed to have been as easy in making up the amount, as it might have been, were it making it up for another Government to pay. And, again, Spain at that time felt herself to be poor. This was another reason why she was concerned to reduce the amount as low as justice could possibly allow. The scholarly gentleman of Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] spoke of the "res angustae domi," the straitened home circumstances of the Meade family. His classical words are no less applicable to illustrate the condition of poor Spain, at the time we refer to.

I fully believe that the claim of Mr. Meade was, in no degree, exaggerated; and that the amount fixed upon by the Spanish Government was due, justly and religiously due, to that unfortunate and cruelly wronged gentleman. Nevertheless, as I said, perhaps our Government should not pay the whole amount. Our Government had but $5,000,000 with which to pay all these claims. So far as that sum would pay them, and no further were they to be paid. All I ask for the present claim is, that as great a percentage be paid on it, as was paid on the established claims—be that percentage three fourths of the amount of the claim or only one half of the amount of the claim—be it in other words, $300,000 or $200,000.

The honorable gentleman from Tennessee admits that the amount fixed upon by the Spanish Government was justly due, and is now justly due, from Spain. Would he send the wronged and impoverished children of Mr. Meade to that Government? What, however, if there were technicalities in the case of which we could avail ourselves to escape the payment of this debt, and to burden Spain with it? Would we consent to avail ourselves of them? Forbid it justice! forbid it honor! Even if we pay this debt, still shall we not have made a sufficiently good bargain out of Spain? It was well understood that the treaty exonerated her from all claims of our citizens. Spain so understood it, as she has repeatedly declared. Oh! we should hang our heads in shame, at the thought of being unkind enough and small enough to require poor and unhappy Spain to pay this debt.

Sir, I am a believer in a strong Government; and I would have civil Government strong, the earth over. It is worthless wherever it is weak. But, sir, a Government is not necessarily strong that clings, with miserly grasp, to its dollars; that rejoices in an overflowing Treasury; that multiplies its battle-ships, and swells its armies. A Government may do all this, and still be essentially weak, because essentially unjust. But that Government is strong, emphatically strong, which aims to be the impersonation of justice. Such a Government is strong, because it is respected and honored abroad, and beloved at home. Be ours, sir, a strong, because a just Government. But let us remember that the first claim on justice is, that she pay her debts. Let us then, sir, pay this sacred debt, that we should have paid thirty years ago; and our cruel neglect to pay which has been followed with so much suffering and sorrow. I am sad for the creditors, and deeply mortified for my country, in this instance. In the case of the no less sacred French claims, which should have been paid more than half a century ago, my pity for the suffering creditors is greater, because they are so very numerous; and my mortification at the disgrace of my Government and country amounts to anguish of spirit. Let us pay these debts, sir, now —now, when we so easily can—and, in such ways let us make ourselves a strong Government and a strong nation.

Mr. GIDDINGS. It was not my intention to participate in the discussion of the bill now under consideration until I heard the remarks of the gentleman who has just taken his seat. Nor do I now intend to examine more than one point involved in this claim. It was my fortune many years ago to engage in its discussion, and I then spent much time and labor in its examination; but that was in other days, comparatively, the days of my youth. I have repeatedly listened to the discussion of it by others, by some of the ablest minds that ever entered upon the debates of this body; I heard it argued on one occasion by Mr. Marvin, one of the predecessors of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH,] in a manner that I never heard excelled; but his view was entirely different from that which my friend has taken of it.

And here I may say, that I regret most deeply to come in conflict with my learned and excellent friend, [Mr. SMITH;] but we are all liable to differ in cases which involve so many considerations as the bill before us. Now, sir, let that gentleman, or let any other gentleman, tell us by what rule we are authorized to put our hands into the pockets of the people of the United States and pay their money to this claimant? Remember, sir, that you take this money from the people to pay it over to Mr. Meade. No member will consent to do this unless he can see good cause for it. The people have never seen nor heard of this claimant. He left this country, went to Spain, dealt with His Most Christian Majesty, and lost his property by not getting his pay. Now, certainly these facts give him no claim on his fellow-citizens who remained at home. The question therefore arises, by what means have the people become liable for this claim? How was their liability incurred? It is certain that this Government never undertook to pay this debt, nor any part of it. There was never any stipulation, agreement, or contract between Meade and the United States. It is, however, true that this Government, representing the people of the United States, stipulated with Spain, in the eleventh article of the treaty of 1819, to pay over to such claimants upon the Spanish Government, as should make proof of their claims, $5,000,000 as a part of the consideration for the cession of Florida. By the treaty this $5,000,000 remained in the hands of this Government to be paid out to our citizens who had sustained losses by the wrongs of the Spanish Government. Mark the stipulation. It was to pay a certain definite sum to such persons as should prove their losses before commissioners to be appointed by the President for that purpose. We held the money as trustee, to be paid over to those who should, within a given time, prove their demands. The $5,000,000 only paid a part of the losses. This Government, nor the people, had no choice as to who should receive this money. It was the money of Spain that was to be paid over to the claimants who should prove existing valid claims against the Spanish Crown. Meade was unable to obtain proof of his claim. This Government lent him assistance to get his proof. In that they did right, although there was no obligation resting upon it to do anything of the kind. Yet that kindness surely did not render us liable to pay the debt. But I beg leave to differ entirely from my friend when he says that we reposed trust in the Spanish Crown to furnish the proofs; and when they failed to do it, we ought to hold them responsible. The Spanish Government required us to pay the money to such individuals as should make proof of their claims; and in order to aid the claimants to whom we were to pay money for the benefit of Spain, they agreed to furnish such proofs as were in possession of the Spanish Crown. Our undertaking was to pay out the money to those who should make the necessary proof. Meade had reposed confidence in the Spanish Crown; had furnished provisions for their army, and trusted to their honor and ability. In that he was disappointed. He was unable to prove his claim. In that he was unfortunate. The time limited for the decision of the commissioners was about to expire, and they were compelled to divide the $5,000,000 among those who had established their claims. Meade shared no part of the money. His misfortune arose from his inability to make the proper proof. But, sir, we have paid to the claimants of the Spanish Crown the full and entire sum of $5,000,000, as we agreed to do. We have fairly and in good faith fulfilled our stipulations. And I ask, by what act of this Government have we become liable to pay this claim to Meade? Had he made his proof, he would have shared pro rata with the other claimants. But does his misfortune, his inability to make the proof, give him any claim on the people of the United States? Surely not. This $5,000,000 was a trust fund in our hands, which we were as willing to pay to Meade as to any other person, could he have shown himself entitled to it. He could not do that; and had any portion of it been paid to him without such proof, the other claimants would have had a legal and equitable demand on us for the money thus improperly paid to him.

I most fully concur with Mr. Adams, then Secretary of State, that this is the same claim which had been presented to the Spanish Government; and I also agree with Mr. Adams that Meade has not the shadow of a claim against the United States. Any man who will look into Mr. Adams's letter, will see that he regarded this claim in the light which I have endeavored to express. Nor is it possible for me to see how gentlemen can differ in regard to it. I repeat, that Meade's failure to obtain the necessary proof, even with the aid of our Government, was his misfortune, and not that of the people of the United States. They have been guilty of no laches. They have omitted no duty. They have conformed to their stipulations. It is true that Meade was unfortunate; and I would as soon thrust my hands into the Treasury of the United States to relieve his misfortune as that of any other man. But he stands upon the same principles as any other unfortunate individual, and by no logic, by no course of reasoning, by no sophistry of argument, can you place him upon any other ground than that of an unfortunate man. We do not sit here to relieve the misfortunes of mankind; and I have never been able to see in this matter any other claim than that of an unfortunate man, claiming relief from a Government able to pay, but on whom no other obligation rests.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will not go further into the merits of this case. The point I have suggested appears to me conclusive. Whenever this case has been before the House, on former occasions, this point has appeared to present an insurmountable obstacle, one which I have never been able to get over; and I will add, that it still appears in that light.

Mr. COX. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DEAN. I would suggest that the gentleman amend the motion by adding, "and report the bill to the House."

Mr. COX. No, sir; I do not accept that amendment.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio) reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had the Private Calendar generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House (No. 58) for settling the claims of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the motion agreed to; and

Thereupon, at a quarter past three o'clock, the House adjourned until Monday, at twelve o'clock m.

IN SENATE.

Monday, April 24, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Thursday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. FOOT presented documents in relation to the claim of Sherman Pierce to a pension for military services in the last war with Great Britain; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a petition of citizens of Hartford, Vermont, remonstrating against the passage of the Nebraska bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of citizens of the United States professing the Jewish religion, praying that measures may be taken to secure to them the rights of civil and religious liberty while traveling or residing in foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLEN presented the memorial of John S. Eddy and others, praying remuneration for services rendered in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FISH presented a memorial of the Marine Society of New York, praying Congress to pass a law to make it obligatory for all ships and vessels, from one hundred and fifty tons and upwards, to be furnished with two or more boys, leaving it optional to adopt the apprentice system, or go as volunteers, as the parties may choose; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a petition of citizens of the United States professing the Jewish religion, praying that, when absent in foreign lands, the same civil and religious rights may be extended to them as are accorded to foreigners while resident in the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a remonstrance of citizens of New York, against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAWSON presented documents in relation to the claim of John Makin, a pilot, for salvage or compensation for aid rendered the frigate Saranac when in distress off the harbor of Savannah, Georgia; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HAMLIN presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the inhabitants of Harrison and its vicinity, Cumberland county, Maine, against the passage of the Nebraska bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SUMNER presented the following petitions, praying a reduction of the rate of ocean postage to two cents for single letters, and others in proportion; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:

Petition of citizens of Boston and its vicinity, Massachusetts;

Petition of inhabitants of Dorchester, Massachusetts;

Petition of inhabitants of the town of Aulborough, Massachusetts;

Petition of inhabitants of the town of Ashburnham, Massachusetts.

Petition of citizens of Portsmouth, New Hampshire; and a Petition of citizens of Massachusetts.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of Oscar Cole and Alexander Cook, praying that the law compelling restaurants and eating-houses in Washington city, D. C., to be closed at midnight, may be repealed; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. GWIN presented the memorial of Charles Wolter, of Monterey, California, praying indemnity for loss of live-stock during the administration of Governor R. B. Mason in 1848 and 1849; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CHASE presented a memorial of the inhabitants of the town of Oberlin, Ohio, praying the reduction of the rate of ocean postage for a single letter to two cents; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a petition of citizens of the United States professing the Jewish religion, praying Congress to take such measures as will secure to them religious freedom while absent in foreign lands; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. RUSK presented a document containing a new plan of a railroad, intended for the transportation of the mails, and to secure the safety of passengers and pedestrians, invented by Robert Mills, engineer and architect; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MALLORY presented a petition of the citizens of Hernando county, Florida, praying a grant of land wherein to locate a county site; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a petition of citizens of Hot Spring county, Arkansas, praying the establishment of a post route from Fair Play to Owensville, in Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HUNTER presented the petition of William Woodward and others, praying that $200 may be granted out of the Treasury to mechanics, if the homestead bill should become a law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of George J. Cornell, Albert Gallatin, A. J. Hamilton, and other citizens of New York, remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, the petition of Charles Neilson, executor, son, and heir-at-law of John Neilson, praying compensation for the services of his father, and remuneration for losses sustained by him in the revolutionary war; also, praying to be allowed the pension to which his father was entitled; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the petition of C. M. Clarke, praying remuneration for losses sustained by her father, Ethan Stillman, under a contract with the Government to furnish muskets; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

RIGHT-ASCENSIONS AND DECLINATIONS.

Mr. EVERETT. I have been requested to present the memorial of Benjamin Pierce and others, members of the American Association for the Promotion of Science, praying Congress to make an appropriation to enable Professor Mitchell, of Cincinnati, to construct a machine for observing right-ascensions and declinations by the aid of magnetism.

This is a subject of very great importance to science. The memorialists are among the most distinguished men of science in the country. Their memorial is accompanied by the report of a committee of this association, in which they represent this machine to be of great importance, promising great practical utility in its application to scientific purposes, and reflecting great credit upon American science.

I am somewhat at a loss to know what disposition to ask for the memorial. It does not seem to belong to any of the standing committees of the Senate, and I have been requested to move that it be referred to a select committee. I make the motion with great reluctance; but as the subject does not fall within the province of any standing committee, I move that the memorial be committed to a select committee of five members.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVERETT. I now move that the committee be appointed by the President pro tempore. The motion was agreed to.

PETITION WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. EVERETT, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Henry Newman be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Charles Gordon, praying compensation for his services as draughtsman to the Committee on Public Lands, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico, praying the confirmation of the titles to land under grants from the Mexican Government, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico, praying that measures may be taken to protect the inhabitants of that Territory from Indian depredations, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico, praying the reestablishment of the military post at Fort Atkinson, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following petitions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to: Petition of Frances Depriest, praying to be allowed bounty land;

Petition of the heirs of George Hoyle, deceased, praying authority to sell a land warrant issued to said George Hoyle; and Petition of D. McManus, a chaplain in the Army, praying to be allowed bounty land.

Mr. CLAY. The Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the petitions of James Worden, John O'Leary, John Williams, and others, invalid pensioners of the Navy, praying an increase of their pensions, have directed me to submit a report, and ask to be discharged from their further consideration, having concluded to report a general bill, embracing all cases of their kind. As is known to the Senate, I presume, generally, the highest pension paid to an invalid pensioner of the Navy is six dollars per month; that is to what is called the seamen, but the seaman in ordinary is paid five dollars per month, and a marine $3 50. The committee have ascertained, on inquiry of the Commissioner of Pensions, that the aggregate increase of pensions by the bill which we report, will be something upwards of $9,000. They have, therefore, instructed me to report a bill placing the pensioners in the naval service on the same footing with pensioners in the Army of the United States. I move that the report be printed.

The bill was read a first time by its title, "A bill to increase the pensions of seamen and marines," and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Nock, praying indemnity for the violation, by the Post Office Department, of his contract for making mail locks and keys, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the petitions of Nannie Denman, Arabella Riley, Minerva Catlett, and Eliza G. Townsend, praying pensions on account of the services of their husbands, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, on the ground that their cases had been provided for by the general bill reported in the case of Mrs. General Childs; which was agreed to.

GRAFTON BAKER.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the House bill for the relief of Grafton Baker, have instructed me to report it back, with a recommendation that it do pass; and at the instance of the honorable Senator from Mississippi, whose constituent Mr. Baker is, I ask that it may be considered now.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Grafton Baker $366 50 in full for services rendered and expenses incurred by him as bearer of dispatches from the Governor of New Mexico to the President of the United States in 1852.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had passed the joint resolution from the Senate for extending an existing contract for carrying the mail in Alabama.

Also, that they had non-concurred in the first amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, concurred in the second, and concurred in the third, with an amendment.

OREGON TERRITORIAL EXPENSES.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the joint resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the expenses of the Board of Commissioners appointed by the Territorial Assembly of Oregon to prepare a code of laws, also to adjust the expenses of collecting and printing certain laws and archives of the Territory of Oregon, have had the same under consideration, and directed me to report it back without amendment, recommend its passage, and ask for its consideration at this time.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, accordingly proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to authorize the accounting officers to adjust the expenses mentioned, and to pay the amount reasonably incurred from the balance of the appropriation, for compensation and mileage of the members of the Territorial Legislature, and of the officers and clerks, now standing on the books of the Treasury unexpended.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

NEW POST ROUTE.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Memphis, Tennessee, via Mound City, Arkansas, to Aberdeen, in Arkansas.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. FITZPATRICK asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Alabama, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Girard, Alabama, to the city of Mobile; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move that the message from the House in regard to the Military Academy bill be taken up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The first amendment of the Senate, in which the House non-concurred, was to add to the bill the following:

"For repairs and additions to professors' quarters, $5,000."

The second amendment in which the House concurred, was to add the following:

"For cavalry exercise hall, $20,000."

The third amendment in which the House concurred with an amendment, was to add the following as an additional section:

Be it further enacted, That the compensation of the professors of French and drawing be made equal to that of the professors of the other departments, and the compensation of the master of the sword be $1,200 per annum.

The amendment was to strike out the words:

"Professors of French and drawing be made equal to that of the professors of the other departments, and the compensation of the"—

So as to make the section read:

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That the compensation of the master of the sword be $1,200 per annum.

The PRESIDENT. What action will the Senate take upon the amendments?

Mr. HUNTER. I am disposed to concur in the action of the House. The difference is not large; and I would rather close this bill, and have it finally passed. We have gained something. The House has agreed to the appropriation for the riding hall, and I am rather disposed to concur in their action, and endeavor at another time to obtain the other appropriation which we proposed to make.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should prefer to obtain the appropriations which we proposed to make. Perhaps, however, we had better comply with the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia, though I confess the amendment of the House to our third amendment is very extraordinary. The honorable Senator can see that they have increased the salary of the sword master, and have left the other salaries as they were, thus leaving a marked difference between them. I think it will be doing injustice to those professors. However, rather than hazard the bill, I will agree to it.

The amendment of the House to the third amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on receding from the first amendment in which the House non-concurred.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think we ought, in justice to those officers, to try and have our whole amendment agreed to. I am satisfied that any one who understands the subject will endeavor to give the two professors a little additional salary. If, however, the House shall insist on their amendment, I shall consent at once to it. I think, therefore, we had better disagree to the amendment of the House, and ask for a committee of conference. If the honorable Senator from Virginia will join me in that, I think it will be the better course to pursue.

Mr. HUNTER. If the honorable Senator desires a committee of conference, I will not oppose him. I believe we have gained nearly all we wished. They have agreed to most of our amendments; and although I believe the salaries of those gentlemen ought to be raised, I doubt whether it is prudent to insist now on more than the House has agreed to. It seems to me that something should be due to the House, as they have given us so much; but if the Senator prefers a committee of conference, I will not object to it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I prefer to take that course, because I think we shall have a better chance to do justice to those men. I do not see that it can hazard the bill to ask for a committee of conference, and I would rather that the honorable Senator from Virginia would consent to it.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not suppose that the House will defeat the bill for that; but inasmuch as they had concurred in so much, I thought it better for us to yield, and try to have our propositions agreed to next year.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move, then, that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to our third amendment, and insist upon our first amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The vote will first have to be reconsidered upon concurring in the amendment of the House. The question is on reconsidering that vote.

Mr. PRATT. Who made the motion to reconsider?

Mr. BRODHEAD. If the Senator from Illinois desires, a committee of conference, I will make the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I now make the motion that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to the third amendment of the Senate, insist on the first amendment, and ask a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD IN ALABAMA.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back, without amendment, "A bill granting to the State of Alabama, public lands in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a central railroad, from some point on the boundary line of the States of Alabama and Tennessee, to a point on the boundary line of the States of Alabama and Florida." As, owing to an accidental circumstance, the report has been delayed, I ask that the bill may now be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. Mr. CLAY. I move to dispense with the reading of the bill, as it is in the usual form of similar bills that have been passed at this session.

The reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

RESCUE OF THE SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think the present moment is a favorable opportunity to call up a measure which has been lying on the table for some weeks. It is a subject which I think ought to have been acted upon long ago. I refer to the joint resolution to make some indemnification to the persons engaged in the rescue of those who were on board the steamship San Francisco at the time she was wrecked. The claim is one of courtesy and generosity, and one which should be acted upon as promptly as possible. I hope the honorable Senator from California, who made a minority report upon the subject, is prepared to have the resolution taken up, and considered this morning.

Mr. GWIN. Certainly.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move, then, that the Senate pass by the previous orders, and proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution, "manifesting the sense of Congress towards the officers and seamen of the vessels, and others, engaged in the rescue of the officers and soldiers of the Army, the passengers, and the officers and crew of the steamship San Francisco, from perishing with the wreck of that vessel."

Mr. HUNTER. I am anxious to have the Senate take up the Indian appropriation bill to-day. I hope we shall devote this day to that bill; it is time we were considering it.

Mr. BROADHEAD. This is the day which was assigned for the consideration of the bill giving a credit for a limited time on the duties on railroad iron. There are many considerations which, I think, appeal to us to dispose of that subject. There are many gentlemen about to engage in the manufacture of railroad iron, and it is proper that that bill should be considered and disposed of at an early day, in order that those who are to be affected by it may know their fate. They want to know whether they are to go on with their business or not. I think, therefore, we had better take up the bill which was assigned for consideration to-day, and, at any rate, know whether we are to consider it seriously or not.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will state to honorable Senators the nature of this case; and I think when I do so, there can be no objection to our acting upon the joint resolution to which I have referred. A joint committee of fourteen was appointed shortly after the unfortunate accident which occasioned the loss of the San Francisco, to report upon a suitable form of acknowledgment to the rescuers of the persons on board that wreck. The committee reported; but the consideration of the subject has been postponed from day to day. Every Senator knows that it is one of those peculiar cases, appealing, as it were, to our courtesy, which should have been acted on promptly, if at all. The object of the joint resolution is to make some acknowledgment and some indemnification to those who suffered in rescuing those poor unfortunate persons who were on board the San Francisco. It has been put off from day to day. If honorable Senators will permit it to be taken up and acted on now, it will not take much time.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that this day will be given to the Indian appropriation bill. The joint resolution which the honorable Senator from Illinois proposes to take up will lead to debate. It was reported by a divided committee, as I understand, and there will be a debate upon it. It seems to me that we had better take up the Indian appropriation bill, and go on with it. We know that to-morrow is set apart for Executive business, and it is important to have that bill passed as soon as possible.

Mr. BADGER. I was desirous of having called up to-day the bill to which the Senator from Pennsylvania has alluded, respecting the duties on railroad iron; but I cheerfully defer my wishes on that subject, as he has deferred his, to enable the Senator from Illinois to get the joint resolution to which he refers, passed. I really think we are placed in a position in regard to it which is not entirely respectful. It is, as the Senator from Illinois has said, a matter of courtesy and generosity on the part of the Government. It has been delayed by various causes, without any fault or blame; but I think that a longer procrastination of it would not be right. It ought to be disposed of one way or the other. I will say to my friend from Virginia that it will not take long. Nobody is disposed to protract it. There may be a little discussion; but the joint resolution will only take a very little time.

Mr. HUNTER. I know nothing of the merits of the joint resolution, but I understand there was a divided committee in relation to it.

Mr. SHIELDS's motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to request the President of the United States to procure three valuable gold medals, with suitable devices, one to be presented to Captain Creighton, of the ship Three Bells, of Glasgow; one to Captain Low, of the bark Kilby, of Boston; and one to Captain Stouffer, of the ship Antarctic, as testimonials of national gratitude for their gallant conduct in rescuing about five hundred Americans from the wreck of the steamship San Francisco; and to direct that a sum not exceeding $100,000 be appropriated, to enable the President to reward, in such manner as he may deem most appropriate, the officers and crews of those vessels that aided in the rescue of the survivors of the wreck, and such other persons as distinguished themselves by offices of humanity and heroism on that occasion; the reward to be proportionate to the nature of the efforts made, and the merit of the services rendered, so far as the same can be ascertained.

Mr. GWIN. I laid upon the table some weeks ago, a substitute for the joint resolution reported by the majority of the committee. I now move to amend that resolution by striking out all after the resolving clause, and inserting that substitute, as follows:

That the President of the United States be requested to procure four valuable gold medals, with suitable devices, one to be presented to Captain Creighton, of the ship Three Bells, of Glasgow; one to Captain Low, of the bark Kilby, of Boston; one to Captain Stouffer, of the ship Antarctic, as testimonials of national gratitude for their gallant conduct in rescuing about five hundred Americans from the wreck of the steamship San Francisco; and one to Captain Pendleton of the ship Lucy Thompson, as a testimonial of national gratitude for his gallant conduct in rescuing a large number of those sufferers from the bark Kilby, then in distress, and her crew and the survivors on board in a state of extreme suffering.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the President be also requested to reward the officers and crews of those vessels that aided in the rescue of the survivors of said wreck, and such other persons as distinguished themselves by offices of humanity and heroism on that occasion, by presenting them with medals of gold, silver, or bronze, with suitable devices; the testimonials to be proportioned to the nature of the efforts made and the merits of the services rendered, so far as the same can be ascertained, and that such amount of money as may be necessary to carry out the object of this resolution be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GWIN. I will state very briefly the reasons which have induced me to offer the substitute. I know that important and valuable services were rendered by the captains of these vessels and their crews; but they have been rewarded by the people of the United States. A sum exceeding $50,000 was raised in various cities of the Union, and it was distributed among the officers and men of these vessels. Each captain received a sum varying from $6,000 to $10,000, and the seamen have received sums from $600 to $1,000. In addition, the Government of the United States has paid the owners of these vessels large sums of money for the services which they rendered and the losses which they sustained. The Government paid their accounts as they were rendered—paid the precise amounts which they asked. For instance, the owners of the Three Bells charged $25,000, and the quartermaster paid it forthwith; the owners of the bark Kilby brought in a bill for $15,000, and it was paid at once. What was paid to the other vessels I have not ascertained. The Antarctic went to Liverpool; and when I made the examination, and expected to go into the discussion of the question some weeks ago, a return had not been received from that vessel; and my attention has not been turned to the question since.

My object is to give testimonials to these parties from the Government of the United States, such as will be preserved and held in high estimation by them. Heretofore, in the instances which are stated in the report made by the Senator from Illinois from the majority of the committee, there have been appropriations of money paid from the Treasury, because it was necessary in those instances to make compensation to the owners of the vessels. In this case, the San Francisco was chartered by the Government for the purpose of conveying the third regiment of the United States Infantry to California; and the Government had power, without further provision, to compensate the parties who owned the vessels for the losses which they sustained and the services which they rendered. There are instances where laws have been passed, by which small sums of money have been appropriated from the Treasury for the purpose of rewarding individuals, and also for compensating the owners of vessels. This case, however, is not like any which has heretofore occurred. In consideration of the vast sums of money which have already been paid to these parties, and the munificent manner in which the Government has paid the owners of vessels that rendered the service, it seems to me that the proper course for us to adopt is to give testimonials in the way of medals—to give gold, silver, and bronze medals, subject to the discretion of the President of the United States.

There is one provision which the Senator from Illinois, I have no doubt, will accept at once, whether my proposition prevail or not. It is that the commander of the Lucy Thompson shall also be compensated. He went to the relief of the bark Kilby when she was supposed to be in a sinking condition, and took off all the soldiers who were on board of her. My only object is not to establish a precedent by which enormous sums may hereafter be drawn from the Treasury for services rendered in this form. The Government of the United States has already compensated the owners of the vessels. It has paid their accounts as they presented them. The people of the United States have raised a large sum of money and distributed it among the officers and seamen who rescued the survivors. I think, then, we should confine ourselves to what I have proposed in my amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from California is right when he says that the people of the United States have collected large sums of money, and rewarded, to some extent, the men engaged in the rescue of those unfortunate persons who were on board of the San Francisco at the time of the disaster. He is also right, when he states that the Government has indemnified the owners of the vessels engaged in the rescue, for the sacrifices which they made. But that does not affect the object of this resolution in any one particular. The San Francisco was chartered, and, for the time being, belonged to the Government. The men who were on board the vessel were the troops of the Government. The men who were rescued were the soldiers of the Government. The property rescued belonged to the Government. The fact that owing to the delay and procrastination of the Government in acting, the public came forward, and, to some extent, indemnified these men, only proves that, in the public estimation, they deserved some reward, some indemnification, some acknowledgment on the part of the nation.

A committee of fourteen was appointed by the Senate and the House to take the subject into consideration, and they brought forward this joint resolution, which involves two propositions. It proposes to give a gold medal to the captain of the Three Bells, who well deserves it, as every man will admit; to give a gold medal to the captain of the Antarctic, who also deserves it; and a third medal to the captain of the bark Kilby, of Boston. Then it proposes to enable the President to reward, in such a manner as he shall deem best, (after appointing, perhaps, a commission for the purpose of ascertaining the facts,) all those who were engaged in rescuing the poor unfortunate men on board of the San Francisco, whether the rescuers belonged to these or to other vessels, or to the San Francisco herself.

What the Government has already paid has been paid to the owners of the vessels; but the object of this resolution is to acknowledge and reward the services of the captains, the seamen, the soldiers, and the officers engaged in the rescue; to acknowledge and reward every man who risked his life to rescue those poor unfortunate men from a watery grave.

Now, the Senator from California says that the captain of the Lucy Thompson ought to receive a gold medal as well as the captains of the other three vessels. I think if the honorable Senator considers the matter aright, he will not insist on that. The captain of the Lucy Thompson did his duty. He did all that was required of him. He found these persons in distress, and he relieved them; but, sir, he made no sacrifice, he incurred no risk, he hazarded neither himself nor his vessel. It was not so with these other men. They hazarded everything that men can hazard here.

On the 22d day of last December, I think, the San Francisco left the port of New York. On the night of the 23d, in the very first storm which she encountered, she was a wreck, floating at the mercy of the waves on the ocean. On the next morning she was struck by a wave, and about one hundred and fifty of those on board were swept into the ocean. Among them was Colonel Washington; and I cannot allow this occasion to pass without saying a word in regard to that noble officer, who is now lying at the bottom of the Atlantic ocean. He was on deck with his command when the storm came on. He took shelter in what was called a saloon, that is a painted wood work erected on the deck, which afforded but very little shelter. Some of his brother officers told him that he was in danger, and that he had better retire to the officers' cabin. His reply—and it should be remembered—was, "No, I will retire nowhere; I will seek shelter nowhere; I will endure the same fate that my poor men are compelled to endure." Now, sir, he lies at the bottom of the ocean. This was the condition of the men upon that vessel. Until the Three Bells came up, there was no help, no rescue, no deliverance for them. The captain of that vessel, a noble Scotchman, a brave and gallant man, at the hazard of his own life, at the risk of losing his vessel, and everything which he had upon this earth, lay by that wreck for six days and six nights, until he succeeded in the rescue of those poor unfortunate men. Sir, will any man hesitate to reward such conduct as that? such heroism as that? We had no claim upon that man. His own vessel was almost in a sinking condition when he came in sight of the wreck. Yet there he remained until he aided in rescuing these poor persons from on board the wreck. The bark Kilby, of Boston, and the ship Antarctic, also came up, and assisted in the noble work. The captains of those three vessels were the men who saved five hundred of their fellow beings from the same fate which overtook Colonel Washington and his brave companions. Now, sir, I think it is due from us to give some recognition, or acknowledgment, or reward, to these men, who periled everything to rescue the soldiers of the United States, and who did rescue five hundred of them by their gallant conduct.

So far as the Lucy Thompson is concerned, I repeat, her captain found the bark Kilby very near New York, and the persons on board of that bark were transferred to the Lucy Thompson, and she gave water and provisions to them. That was an act for which I think her commander ought to be highly respected; but there was no risk, no hazard, no extraordinary peril, no sacrifice in this, and by giving that captain a medal, you confound different services.

It is not the worth or the value of the medals which makes them valued by the officers, but it is an acknowledgment given to these men, a testimonial from the nation, for their gallant and heroic conduct. That is the object of giving the medals. Now, sir, let me say that more gallant and more heroic conduct has never been recorded than that performed by the commander of the Three Bells. His own vessel was in a sinking condition, out of water, leaky, her sails were shivered by the same storm, and yet there she lay six days and six nights by this wreck, her commander telling the unfortunate sufferers all the while to hold on, to keep the vessel afloat, encouraging them with the assurance, "I will stand by you to the last." Sir, a medal to such a man is the least testimonial which you can give.

Then, we also propose to give money; and I will explain the object of that. Some of the seamen, some of the common soldiers and non-commissioned officers behaved gallantly; and the object of appropriating the money is to enable the President to discriminate and reward them accordingly. But, by the amendment of the Senator from California, you give medals in the first section, you give medals in the second section, and you give nothing but medals. He proposes to give gold medals, and silver medals, and bronze medals, and, he ought to have added, "all kinds of medals." That is not the way to reward distinguished services; it is turning the whole thing into a burlesque. Do you want the President to go to these men with a pack of medals on his back? I should like to see you go to one of the Jack-Tars, and present him with a bronze medal, and tell him, "this is the way the nation rewards you for an act of heroism." What would he do with that medal? Sir, this is not the way to manage a thing of this kind. Here are three men who stand out prominently, who distinguished themselves on this occasion. Give them medals. Then, if you go further, give the men a little money—give them something to improve their condition—something tangible and substantial—something which will be of value to them; but as for giving the common sailors bronze, and silver, and gold medals, I think it is out of the question. I should like to see them when they receive them.

Mr. GWIN. If I mistake not, the distinguished Senator from Illinois received a sword for his gallant services during the last war. He received one by a vote of Congress, if I mistake not, but certainly a sword was presented to him. I presume when he received from his country a sword as a recognition of his gallant services, he valued it more than all the money in the Treasury. It is not the worth of such a thing in dollars and cents; it is the testimonial granted to an individual by a great nation, which attaches value to it.

Now, Mr. President, in regard to the commander of the Lucy Thompson, the Senator has not stated the case fairly; because, when that vessel came up with the Kilby her crew were in a state of mutiny, and had proposed to run her ashore, which would have resulted in the inevitable destruction of all the passengers and crew. He exhibited his gallant conduct, as the officers on board told me personally, as much as any of the other commanders.

But, sir, the Senator says the Captain of the Three Bells behaved gallantly, and deserves reward. He has been rewarded by the gratitude of the wholenation, and by their money. The people have paid over to him from $6,000 to $10,000 in money. They have given him another testimonial which will live as long as the latest posterity. They have given him a gold medal, infinitely more valuable to him than the money. The people have already rewarded the sailors. They have given them money. From $600 to $1,000 a piece has been distributed to them. That money has been raised by the people of the United States, and given to them. The Government has already rewarded the owners of the ships. There has been more than $100,000 paid by the people and by the Government of the United States, for the services rendered to the unfortunate sufferers on board the San Francisco. I appreciate the services of these rescuers as highly as the Senator from Illinois or any man in the country, but I believe the proper plan is the one which I propose; and that is, to give them enduring testimonials, such as any man who has an American heart in his bosom, would infinitely prefer to money, and which he would preserve and hand down to his posterity.

I have as high an appreciation of the services of these officers and their crews, as any member of the Senate; but, sir, there is one thing perfectly certain, that they would have been eternally disgraced if they had not done just what they did; they would have been driven from civilized society if they had acted otherwise than as they did. I appreciate the daring which they exhibited, and the risk which they ran, regardless of their own lives, to relieve the unfortunate individuals on board that ill-fated vessel; but they were bound to do it. If they had gone off without exhibiting proper zeal in rescuing those individuals, all know what reproach would have been cast upon the commanders of those vessels all over the Union.

I am in favor of giving to those officers gold medals just as the Senator from Illinois proposes to do; but the people of the United States have already given them money, a large amount of money. I am not for paying them money from the Treasury of the United States, in addition to the gold medals which we propose to give them. I have also given, in the second resolution of my amendment, an opportunity to exhibit the thanks of the Government of the United States to the officers of the San Francisco. The only difference between the Senator and myself is, that he wishes to give these men money, and I wish to give them a testimonial in the shape of medals, leaving it discretionary with the President whether they shall be of gold, silver, or bronze. I know that there are bronze medals of very little intrinsic value which cannot be bought for any money; for they are testimonials of a great Government to individuals for valuable services rendered. Now, I think the best thing we can do—the people of the United States having rewarded in money these persons for their services which they have rendered, and the Government having amply paid the owners of the vessels for their services—is to give this testimonial.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, it is a little doubtful to my mind how far the Senator from California and the chairman of the select committee really disagree in the manner in which they would express their gratitude for the meritorious conduct of those who were prominent in rescuing the lives of the officers and soldiers from this unfortunate wreck. I think that when the propositions of the two Senators to whom I have referred shall be examined, it will be found that but very little difference in fact exists between them. However much difference there may be between the views presented by those Senators, their resolutions may, perhaps, be very nearly alike.

Now, sir, the resolution reported by the committee proposes to grant medals to the officers of certain vessels that rendered distinguished services which are therein named. It also proposes to make an appropriation of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States. The amendment submitted by the Senator from California, is to grant medals to the commanding officers of the same three vessels named in the resolution of the committee, and one other; and, then, the Senator from California, in addition, proposes to grant medals to the seamen, to the soldiers, and to the other parties engaged in that transaction. The joint resolution reported by the committee does not limit the President in regard to the manner in which he shall express the gratitude of the country to the soldiers, seamen, and other parties, besides the officers named. It may be, therefore, that the President himself, upon mature consideration, will deem it advisable to express the thanks of the country by granting medals to a certain extent, in the very way which the Senator from California proposes. Hence there is no limitation upon the act of the President; the manner in which the money shall be appropriated is submitted to him; and if the resolution of the committee shall be adopted, it will be in the power of the President, if he shall see fit, to adopt precisely the same rule that the Senator from California proposes in his amendment.

Now, sir, it is desirable, is it advisable, to prescribe precisely the mode and the manner in which the thanks of the country shall be expressed to this great number of persons? Allow me to express my opinion, and to give my belief; that it is not only not desirable thus to limit it, but that, as expressing the commercial spirit of the nation, it may be, and probably will be desirable, in many instances, to make direct appropriations in money, as vastly better than these medals. When the dies are struck, and the medals are delivered to the officers of these vessels, they will no doubt be regarded as of more value than anything which could be presented to them in money. They would be regarded as being granted for acts of heroism, which, I will say, these officers have nobly performed; and would undoubtedly be more gratifying than any other expression of the thanks of the country which could be made to them. But this would not be so with another class—those who are truly the representatives of the commercial spirit of the country. They would expect the compensation which commerce itself would direct. And it might be better, and I doubt not myself the President might—I do not say he would—come to the conclusion that, as representing the commercial feature of the question, it would be desirable, in some cases, to make this expression of gratitude in dollars and cents rather than in medals. The Government was directly connected with this transaction, and it was brought in as representing, and connecting itself with, the commercial aspect of the question. It is appropriate—in my judgment, it is highly appropriate—that the Government, thus connected with it, should do, in the commercial aspect of the case, precisely what your citizens have done. And what have they done? Why, sir, from no other motives than those of a general character, from no other motive than a desire to induce persons whose calling is to traverse the ocean, to render assistance in similar cases; our merchants, our underwriters, our insurance officers, and our citizens generally, have contributed largely, purely, and solely in the commercial view of the transaction. Connected as the Government was with this question in that point of view, it is, in my judgment, equally appropriate that the Government also should contribute in that view, as well as by giving medals to the officers. Still, whatever may be the opinions of Senators in relation to this matter, whether I be correct in the view that I take of it or not, with the President of the United States it will be an open question, and it will be for him to determine, after a full examination of the matter, precisely what he will do. The resolution reported by the committee, therefore, submits the question to the President, leaving it to him to determine, without any restrictions whatever, and leaving him, with such advice and such information as he can get, to pursue precisely that course which he shall deem to be best and most appropriate.

I think for that, if for no other reason, the report of the committee should be sustained, in preference to the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from California. I think the Government owes it to itself and to these men, that there should be an appropriation made in the commercial aspect of this question, as apart from that which is a mere matter of tribute to the officers, who may need no other compensation for the meritorious services which they have performed. But a commercial contribution to the soldiers and to the seamen, who may have lost there all, is more appropriate, or is quite as appropriate to a certain extent, as would be the bestowal of medals in all cases.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine one question. He argues this point as though, if the resolution should pass in the form presented by the committee, it would be discretionary with the President what sum he should expend for the objects contemplated by the resolution. My own impression is, and I think it is consistent with usage, that the President will consider himself bound, in some form or other, to expend the whole amount of the appropriation among the persons who distinguished themselves on this occasion. If the resolution be so amended as to leave to the President the discretion to expend such sum of money as he may think proper, without compelling him to disburse the whole $100,000, I will vote for the resolution.

Mr. SHIELDS. The honorable Senator will perceive that that is the language of the resolution now. The President is to disburse the sum in any way that he may think proper, to the persons best entitled; but that sum is in no case to exceed $100,000.

Mr. SLIDELL. That does not at all answer my question. My desire is to know whether the President will not consider himself bound, according to established usage, to distribute this sum of $100,000, in some form or other, among the persons who may have rendered distinguished services upon this occasion.

Mr. HAMLIN. The second section of the resolution, as reported by the committee, provides:

"That a sum not exceeding $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the President to reward, in such manner as he may deem most appropriate, the officers and crews of those vessels that aided in the rescue of the survivors of said wreck, and such other persons as distinguished themselves by offices of humanity and heroism on that occasion; the reward to be proportionate to the nature of the efforts made and the merit of the services rendered, so far as the same can be ascertained."

I will state to the Senator from Louisiana very cheerfully what is my impression of the matter. I will only say that I have never known an appropriation made by Congress where a maximum was fixed, where the executive officer has not always adopted the maximum in administering the law; and I have no doubt, myself, that the President would deem it his duty to expend the whole sum appropriated.

Mr. SLIDELL. I am extremely reluctant to oppose an appropriation of this sort; but I cannot reconcile it to myself to vote the public money away in such a manner. I think it proper that the people of the United States should not only give some complimentary expression of their high opinion of such a transaction, but also extend some pecuniary compensation to the parties who were so honorably engaged in it; but I venture to say that, in the annals of this or any other country, no set of men on any occasion have ever been so beneficently rewarded as have been the persons engaged in the rescue from the San Francisco. Consult the annals of the British Government, which has always been extremely liberal in such cases. I have not had occasion to refer to them lately; but I am very sure that, under no circumstances, has any greater reward been extended by the British Government towards persons who rescued its citizens from shipwreck, than a medal occasionally; and, in one instance, I believe, £1,000. Now, we are told that in this case $50,000 have been already disbursed by the Government; $60,000 have been distributed among the officers and crew of two ships; and, I believe, some $2,000 have been given for some complimentary presents to one or two officers of the Army and Navy.

We ought to look forward. These things are of a great deal of interest. I do not see that these people are entitled to call upon the Government of the United States for remuneration in this case, because the persons rescued were in the employ of the Government. I do not conceive that that at all changes the merits of the case. Instances of the kind, sir, are occurring every day. It was not more than ten or fifteen days after the arrival of the persons who were rescued from the San Francisco, that a ship, called the Henry Grinnell, arrived in port, having saved from two ships some twenty or thirty persons. Now, why are not the captain and crew of the Henry Grinnell entitled, in some degree, not to the same extent, to some compensation as much as these parties?

It appears to me that the proper mode is to pass some general law on the subject. I think it is highly proper, under all circumstances, to compensate the officers of the vessel by whom property is rescued, for their benevolent efforts, and to compensate the officers and crew who expose themselves personally for the purpose of saving those who are shipwrecked. I think we ought to adopt some general law; and if the chairman of the committee who reported this resolution will introduce some joint resolution or bill to that effect, making, not only a provision for this case, but a prospective provision for all cases of a similar character, I shall most cheerfully vote for it.

In order to enable the President to carry into effect the provisions of the substitute offered by the Senator from California, I will move to strike out "100," and insert "20," so as to make the appropriation $20,000. That will be sufficient for all the purposes.

Mr. MALLORY. I shall support the chairman of the committee who reported this joint resolution; and the only regret I have on the subject is, that the resolution has been postponed to so late a day as this. It was reported upon the 6th of February, and if it was proper at all to pass it, it loses much of its grace by the delay; so that I must express my regret that the vote has not been taken at an earlier day.

Mr. SHIELDS. If the honorable Senator will permit me, I will set him right on that point. I acted as the organ of the committee in bringing forward this resolution and report. I endeavored to have it called up, until I got so tired that I had to abandon it. I came very near losing it to-day.

Mr. MALLORY. I did not mean to accuse the chairman of the committee of producing the delay in not bringing this up before.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GWIN. I have on more than one occasion been charged with the delay in this matter. It was called up one day when I was not here. I was necessarily absent at the time, and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SLIDELL] stated that I desired to be present when it was considered, and that I was prepared to offer a substitute for the resolution. I have always been ready ever since, and was ready on the first day that the joint resolution was introduced, to give my objections and my reasons why I was opposed to it. It has never been delayed one day, on my account, except that on which I was absent.

Mr. MALLORY. I did not mean to say, or to indicate in any way, that the delay has been the direct result of any gentleman. I only expressed my regret that an act of grace of this character had been postponed. Why, sir, what is the object of giving a reward of this character? What is the philosophy of the proposition, if it be not to stimulate men in the position of these rescuers to go out under similar circumstances, and perform the same high duty? There is no property at stake here. There was no fund out of which the persons could be rewarded. It is the noblest effort, perhaps, in which any one can be engaged—the salvation of life under such circumstances as these; and, Mr. President, there was a moral bravery connected with this act which may very well influence us in our action. I repeat, there is no fund here out of which compensation can be made. If there had been a fund, I have not the slightest doubt that the rescuers would have obtained a far greater amount of compensation than that which the select committee reported.

In one case, the case of the British frigate Venus, salvage was awarded, where no life was at stake, merely for the salvation of property; but, sir, situated as we are here, soon to be the largest commercial Power on earth, it is highly important that we should embrace, not that we should lose, an opportunity to show our readiness to reward actions of this kind. In speaking of the moral greatness of the transaction, I will remind the Senate that there have been two or three expressions used in modern naval warfare which have been handed down to posterity, and kindled the hearts of those who were called to engage in battle. You recollect distinctly the flag which Nelson spread out before his fleet—"England expects that every man will do his duty." You recollect also the last words of our own hero: "Don't give up the ship." When we recollect words of this kind, and see how they spur men forward to acts of bravery under all circumstances in which they may be placed, we ought to recollect with much pleasure the words of the captain of the Three Bells, which the chairman of the committee has so well described in his report. Finding his voice drowned by the storm, he bade the men to mount the rigging and give them three cheers, the only indication which he could throw out that he would not desert the wreck. There was a moral greatness in that, and we should reward it in a suitable manner.

The honorable Senator from Louisiana has spoken of the extravagance of the reward proposed. Sir, this was a most extraordinary case. It is the first case, and the only one that has ever occurred in the history of our Government; and, as I before remarked, as the first commercial Power on earth, who have more tons afloat than any other nation, it is peculiarly incumbent upon us to show ourselves always willing to induce men to go out when no certain reward can possibly arise from the property saved, in order to save lives.

The Senator from California, in his argument upon the subject, seems to look at the amount. Should we hesitate about the amount in interests of this kind? Can we reward these men at all? Can any amount that we can reasonably give reward conduct of this kind? Sir, there are thousands of men upon the ocean who would be exceedingly happy to perform the service for nothing, without hope of reward. Their generosity would lead them to do it; but that is no reason why we should not reward them.

The argument is also adduced, that the people have come forward and rewarded these parties. Is that any reason why the Government of the United States should not manifest, in its capacity as a Government, its appreciation of this conduct? No, sir. If it be any argument at all, it is a stronger one in favor of the proposition. The people themselves have spontaneously set an example as to what we should do. Should we hesitate, as a Government, to acknowledge the propriety of the conduct which the people have approved? I say that if there is any validity in the argument at all, it renders it more incumbent upon the Government to make the reward. I shall have no hesitation in voting for the resolution.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move to amend the substitute of the Senator from California by inserting:

That the President be authorized to appropriate a sum not exceeding $20,000.

Mr. GWIN. The second section, I believe, authorizes the President of the United States to give medals to the different parties, and to pay for them out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The Senator can attain his object by adding a proviso that this sum shall not exceed $20,000.

Mr. SLIDELL. I offer the amendment to the amendment in the following form:

And that such an amount of money, not exceeding $20,000, as may be necessary to carry out the object of the resolution, be, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GWIN. I am willing to accept that.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. After we have seen the expressions and manifestations of gratitude which have been given by the citizens of the United States to these meritorious men, it does seem to me that it would be much more satisfactory to the people that we should award nothing at all, than that we should differ upon the sum, and cut it down from

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 62.

$100,000 to $20,000. These men are entitled to some reward, to some acknowledgment from the country, or they are not. They are entitled to some reward from the Government, or they are not. There is no one here or elsewhere who will maintain that a higher act of heroism in civil life has ever occurred, or can ever occur. Such an act, then, deserves acknowledgment. The very nature of the transaction itself is an evidence of its merit; and all civilized nations regard services of this kind as magnanimous, heroic, and worthy of reward. It is a principle of maritime law that he who shall venture his life, or even his property, at sea, in tempests and storms, to protect the property of another, much more to protect the life of one or of many, is entitled to what, under other circumstances, would be called an extravagant reward. The law divides, by way of salvage, the whole value of the property saved, between the original owner and those who saved it from destruction.

If the Government of the United States is to make a special acknowledgment, as it is agreed on all hands it should, of this great act, the sum which that acknowledgment shall cost is to be fixed with reference to our position and character not less than with reference to the greatness and heroism of the transaction itself. In regard to the first, I need not say to Senators that we have to sustain a character which we are perhaps too proud in claiming, as not inferior to any other commercial or political power on earth. Then the next consideration is the greatness and heroism of the transaction itself, as compared with others of a similar nature; and on this subject I am sure that there is a unanimous agreement, that the history of naval and maritime affairs presents no transaction in which more devoted, persevering, self-denying hardships were undergone, from motives of mere benevolence and humanity, than in this case. Then with reference to the effect of this proceeding as an example, by way of encouragement to similar deeds of heroism. If the amount is to be restricted, it must be wholly through fear that some evil will come from this legislation as a precedent? Now, is any man afraid, by appropriating $100,000 to signalize the public appreciation of conduct such as that which elicits this reward, that we shall encourage too bold, too heroic, too disinterested conduct, in cases of peril and shipwreck, on the part of American seamen, or of seamen throughout the civilized world? Certainly not. There is no danger of that.

I repeat, sir, if we are, by a special act of this kind, to show our appreciation of such conduct, it should be commensurate with the greatness of the transaction itself. I am sure that if such a proposition had been made when the intelligence of the disaster and the partial salvage first reached the Capitol, there is no man who would have been for cutting down the appropriation then to $20,000. We have no claim of property now to settle. We owe, practically, no debts. We have a large surplus in our Treasury. We are rich. We are strong; and a Government which has no use for its surplus funds, except to buy up its own perfectly safe bonds at an advance of fifteen cents on a dollar, ought to make a liberal reward for benefits conferred by others at the peril of the property and lives of those who confer them, or it ought not to make a mockery of the virtue of gratitude at all. Let us, then, sustain our own character, and encourage our own seamen, and those of all nations, to emulate the achievements of the saviors of those who were perishing on the wreck of the San Francisco.

Mr. GWIN asked for the yeas and nays on his amendment; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Butler, Clay, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hunter, Norris, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Toombs, and Williams—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Bright, Brown, Cooper, Everett, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hamlin, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Pettit, Seward, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, and Wright—21.

So it was rejected.

Mr. BRIGHT, subsequent to the declaration of the vote, explained that it was his intention to vote for the smallest sum, and hence that his vote should be recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. GWIN. I move to strike out "$100,000," and insert "$50,000," and on that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bright, Butler, Clay, Dawson, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Williams—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Brown, Cooper, Everett, Fish, Foot, Hamlin, Mallory, Seward, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, and Wright—16.

So it was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. On the question of ordering the resolution to be engrossed for a third reading, Mr. Toombs called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Chase, Cooper, Everett, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hamlin, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pearce, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, and Wright—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bright, Brown, Butler, Clay, Dawson, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Norris, Pettit, Pratt, Sebastian, Slidell, Toombs, and Williams—16.

The resolution was then read a third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855; which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. HUNTER. I think we shall get along faster, if the Secretary will read all the amendments, and if there be any to which any Senator excepts, he can name it, and ask for a separate vote upon it.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART.) If there be no objection, that course will be pursued.

The amendments of the committee were as follows: To insert—

For pay of five Indian sub-agents, for California, at an annual salary of $1,500 each, $7,500;

For pay of four Indian sub-agents in Oregon Territory, at an annual salary of $1,000 each, $4,000;

For pay of two Indian sub-agents in Washington Territory, at an annual salary of $1,000 each, $2,000;

For pay of three Indian agents in Washington Territory, for six months, ending June 30, 1854, $9,250;

For pay of two Indian sub-agents in Washington Territory, for six months, ending June 30, 1854, $1,000;

For pay of six interpreters for the Indian tribes in Washington Territory, $3,000;

For pay of six interpreters for the Indian tribes in Washington Territory, for six months, ending June 30, 1854, $1,500;

For erecting buildings for Indian agents in Washington Territory, $5,000;

For the reappropriation for expenses of the removal of the Catawba Indians to the west of the Mississippi river, and of settling and subsisting them one year in their new homes, provided that a home shall first be obtained for them, and that they shall be removed only with their own consent, $5,000.

In the clause:

For payment to the Chickasaw nation in full of the expenses of their commissioners in negotiating the treaty of June 22, 1852, $1,000, —to strike out "June 22, 1852, $1,000," and insert:

—the 22d of June, 1852, as stipulated in the ninth article of said treaty, $1,500.

In the following clause to strike out "28th" and insert "29th:"

For eighteenth of twenty installments for the purchase of provisions, stipulated in the second article of the treaty of the 28th of July, 1837, $2,000.

In the following clause to strike out "thirteen" and insert "thirteenth:"

For thirteen of twenty-five installments for the purchase of provisions and tobacco, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 4th of October, 1842, $2,000.

In the following clause to strike out "eighteen" and insert "eighteenth:"

For eighteen of twenty installments for iron and steel for shops, stipulated in the thirteenth article of the treaty of the 24th of March, 1832, $540.

To insert the following:

For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Navajos, pursuant to the requirements of the tenth article of the treaty of September 9th, 1849, $5,000.

In the following clause to strike out "27th" and insert "20th:"

For interest to be paid as annuity, on $300,000, at six per cent. per annum, stipulated in the resolution of the Senate of the 27th of May, 1836, $12,000.

In the following clauses to strike out "eighteen" and insert "eighteenth:"

For eighteen of twenty installments as annuity in goods, stipulated in the second article of the treaty of the 29th of September, 1837, $10,000;

For eighteen of twenty installments for the purchase of medicines, agricultural implements, and stock, and for support of farmers, physicians, and blacksmith, stipulated in the second article of the treaty of the 29th of September, 1837, $8,250.

In the following clauses to strike out "third" and insert "fourth," and strike out "of interest:"

For third of fifty installments of interest, at the rate of five per centum, on $1,360,000, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 23d of July, 1851, $68,000;

For third of fifty installments of interest, at the rate of five per centum, $112,000, being the amount in lieu of the reservation set apart in the third article per Senate's amendment to treaty, 23d July, 1851, $5,600;

For third of fifty installments of interest, at the rate of five per centum, on $1,160,000, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 5th of August, 1851, $58,000;

For third of fifty installments of interest, at the rate of five per centum, on $69,000, being the amount allowed in lieu of the reservation of lands set apart by the third article per Senate's amendment to treaty of 5th of August, 1851, $3,450.

To insert the following:

For payment to Thompson Connolly and James Connolly, children of John Connolly, deceased, $200.

Stockbridges.—For the removal of the Stockbridge Indians to the country west of the Mississippi river, which has been selected for and approved by them, and for subsistence for one year, stipulated in the eighth article of the treaty of 24th November, 1848, $7,000.

Utahs.—For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Utahs, pursuant to the requirements of the eighth article of the treaty of December 30, 1849, $5,000.

In the following clause to strike out "twenty-six" and insert "twenty-sixth:"

For twenty-six of thirty installments as annuity, stipulated in the second article of the treaty of the 1st of August, 1829, $18,000.

In the following clause to insert before "treaty" the words "fifth article of the:"

For twenty-third of twenty-seven installments for pay of two physicians, stipulated in the treaty of the 15th of September, 1832, $400;

To insert the following:

For the expenses of holding a council with, and making presents of goods and provisions to, the Blackfeet, Grosventres, and other wild tribes of Indians, immediately within or adjacent to the eastern boundary of Washington Territory, $100,000.

To strike out of the following clause the words "and farming to the lands," and insert "to the bands."

For the expense of making presents of agricultural implements and farming to the lands of Pueblo Indians, in the Territory of New Mexico, $10,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his discretion the public interests require it, be authorized to use any part of the appropriations herein made for making treaties in Oregon, Washington, Utah, and New Mexico, and for holding councils at Fort Benton, prior to the commencement of the next fiscal year.

To insert the following:

For adjusting difficulties and preventing outbreaks among the Indians in Oregon Territory, $10,000;

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oregon Territory, $10,000;

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Washington Territory, $15,000;

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of New Mexico, $25,000;

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, $20,000;

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, during the year ending June 30, 1854, $10,000;

For general incidental expenses in the Indian service in Washington Territory, for six months, ending June 30, 1854, $5,000;

For payment of balance due for transportation of presents, goods, and provisions, to the Camanches, Kioways, and other Indians on the Arkansas river, $1,300;

To pay for certain goods borrowed by late agent J. S. Watrous, to fulfill treaty stipulations with the Chippewas, to be replaced out of annuity goods, but which, with the agency building, were consumed by fire, in May, 1853, $4,136 03;

For payment to the Winnebago nation of Indians of certain unexpended balances of appropriations under various treaties, on account of annuities, education, provisions, goods, &c., $40,004 69;

For payment of balance found due the Creek Indians for losses sustained during the war with Great Britain, by that portion of the tribe who were friendly to, and cooperated with, the United States, in addition to the appropriation of the 30th of August, 1852, $258 10;

For payment to certain Creek Indians for their individual reserves, sold with the approbation of the Secretary of War, in the year 1841, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs having received the consideration for the use of said Indians in certificates of deposit on the Planters' and Mechanics' Bank of Columbus, Georgia, which failing, while said certificates were in the hands of the Commissioner, became lost to said Indians, $2,600;

For the second and third of ten installments of provisions and merchandise, in addition to former appropriations, for payment of annuities and transportation of same to certain tribes of Indians, per seventh article of the treaty at Fort Laramie, of 17th of September, 1851, $24,000;

For the fourth of ten installments in provisions and merchandise, for payment of annuities and transportation of the same to certain tribes of Indians, per seventh article of the treaty of Fort Laramie, of 17th of September, 1851, $72,000.

Mr. BELL. I think we ought to have some explanation from the chairman of the Committee on Finance in regard to the amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for treaties with, and presents to, the wild tribes of Indians on the eastern boundary of Washington Territory. I do not remember that any of these tribes of Indians are on this side the Rocky Mountains, and the $100,000 is proposed to be appropriated, as I understand by reading the amendment, merely for treating with them. Now, sir, if it was proposed to appropriate for treating with the Indians anywhere connected with the present settlement of the United States, and it was necessary to send an expedition and a squadron of horse or infantry to accompany commissioners to treat with them, and for the transportation of supplies, I can readily see that it would be very costly; but upon no ground that I know of, or can conceive of, except one, is there any utility in making these treaties at all; and that one is, if it should be ascertained that the northern route surveyed by Governor Stevens should be the proper one for the construction of the Pacific railroad. If that is an ascertained fact, I can see some propriety in this; but I have not yet understood that it has been ascertained that that route is a practicable one at all. I am not opposed to an appropriation, or even a bill, if one were introduced to make an appropriation of lands, and to give the aid of this Government, so far as it is proper to do it, for the construction of the road; but it seems to me that this is an appropriation in advance of the facts, which are important to be ascertained. For what other purpose do you want to treat with these Indians except that? They are a thousand miles removed from any white settlement on either side of the Rocky Mountains. I think that item ought to be excepted from the general vote, so that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance may give a full explanation of it.

Mr. HUNTER. This proposition has nothing to do with a route for a railroad. The design is to prevent wars among the Indians, and to secure peace to the emigrants passing over the country. The estimate of Governor Stevens was not quite so large as is now asked for by the Department, but it was found that the furnishing of provisions to the tribes would amount to some $25,600 or $27,000. That is an expense of less than five dollars per head. This includes not only the expense of feeding them when they are got together—and Governor Stevens had a conference at Fort Gibson with some of them—but the distribution of presents among them to keep the peace, not only with regard to one another, but in regard to the whites. It is stated that the assurances which Governor Stevens gave them have already been of some use in keeping the Blackfeet in peace. It is proposed now to collect a great many of the Indians, not only west, but east of the Rocky Mountains, and to have a conference to secure the peace of the country. I have here the communication of the Indian Department upon which the estimate is founded.

Mr. BELL. I only wanted the chairman of the committee to state the facts. I deny that there is any line of communication over that part of the country. There is no route over which the emigrants pass that I know of, or that I ever heard of. I imagine that the whole appropriation is predicated on the idea that we ought to have a railroad constructed there. Take that away, and I can see no possible ground for the appropriation.

Now, with regard to the Indians themselves, we know that they will fight. We have been making treaty after treaty with the Sioux. That does not prevent them massacring each other, and the neighboring tribes, and from engaging in regular wars with them. I can see no use whatever in the appropriation, unless it has reference to the project which I have stated. If that be ascertained and established to be a practicable route, I have no objection to it.

Mr. HUNTER. The estimate has no reference to that route. I believe Governor Stevens states that he did find a wagon route that would answer for emigrants, but that is a minor consideration. The object for which the appropriation is asked is to keep the peace between the Indians, prevent inroads into the Territory, and their attacking the emigrants and each other. It has been thought that the policy, to some extent, of feeding and making presents to the Indians, instead of making war with them, is not only more humane, but in the end more economical.

Mr. BELL. We have had no wars with them, nor they with us.

Mr. HUNTER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. We shall be called upon for a pretty heavy appropriation for wars with one of the tribes of Indians. I am told that a very small amount expended in presents would have prevented them.

Mr. BELL. One of these tribes?

Mr. HUNTER. Not one of these tribes; but in the Territory of Oregon.

Mr. BELL. That is a different region altogether.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator is mistaken in that. The council will comprehend tribes not only east but west of the Rocky Mountains. It comprehends the Blackfeet, who, as I understand, range on both sides, and are troublesome on both. It is the design to have the Indians on both sides included. If the Secretary will read what Governor Stevens says, the Senator will be in the possession of the grounds for the appropriation.

Mr. BELL. I do not pretend to make any further opposition to it.

The Secretary read as follows, from a communication of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

"His Excellency Isaac I. Stevens, on his recent exploration of a northern route, reports that he met with a most friendly reception by all the Indian tribes which he encountered; yet after consultation with agent Vaughan and Mr. Culbertson, a gentleman long resident among these Indians, and on account of the well known warlike character and hostile feeling of some of the tribes located on the east and west sides of the eastern range of the Rocky Mountains, he esteems it necessary that a council be held with all the tribes in that vicinity not parties to the treaty of Fort Laramie, for the purpose of conciliating them by means of presents of goods and provisions, and that the council be held during the coming summer at Fort Benton, on the Upper Missouri.

"For accomplishing this purpose Governor Stevens estimates that $30,000 would be required for presents and transportation; $5,000 for provisions; $15,000 for incidental expenses; and $10,000 to enable a number of chiefs of the principal tribes to visit the President of the United States.

"The tribes which he proposes to invite to the council are the Grosventres, Pegans, Bloods, and Blackfeet, east of the mountain range, and all the tribes west of the same range with whom they are at variance. Agent Vaughan, in his annual report, also urgently recommends that a treaty similar to the treaty at Fort Laramie be made with the Grosventres and the Blackfeet tribes. He estimates the Blackfeet nation to number about 10,000, and the Grosventres 3,750.

"Governor Stevens estimates the Blackfeet nation, embracing the Pegan, Blood, and Blackfeet tribes, at 14,400, and Mr. Culbertson at 14,000.

"Their number, heretofore, has generally been estimated as much greater, which is doubtless to be ascribed to their roving, bold, and warlike character.

"Assuming, then, that the number is about 14,000, and the Grosventres 3,750, the number of Indians in the tribes west of the mountain range, which Governor Stevens proposes to invite to the council, may probably be stated at 6,000 to 10,000, which will make the census of the tribes to be invited to the council and furnished with presents, 25,000 to 27,000.

"Governor Stevens estimates that there would be needed about one hundred tons of transportation; and assuming this to be about the correct amount, in view of the remoteness of the points of delivery, and the dangers of the navigation of the Missouri river, and also because presents are proposed to be made to the Indians of so many and so populous nations, I am led to believe that the estimate made by Governor Stevens for goods, provisions and transportation, is too low, and that if the council is to be held as proposed, a supply of goods and provisions should be distributed to the Indians more plentifully than funds to the amount of his estimate would procure.

"I have, therefore, to state my approbation of the proposition of Governor Stevens in respect to the council, and to recommend that an appropriation be asked for, of $100,000, to be placed at the disposal of the Department, for the expenses of holding a council with, and making presents of goods and provisions to, the Blackfeet, Grosventres, and other wild tribes of Indians, immediately within, or adjacent to the eastern boundary of Washington Territory, and to defray the expense of conveying a delegation of the chiefs of those tribes to Washington city."

Mr. PEARCE. The Senator from Virginia stated that the amount proposed by the amendment is greater than Governor Stevens recommends. What did he recommend?

Mr. HUNTER. About $60,000. I think the communication of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs states the reason why it is proposed to increase it.

Mr. PEARCE. Governor Stevens takes a large and comprehensive view of these matters; and I suggest that he would recommend all that was desirable in this case. I think the estimate which he gives would be quite as large as it is desirable that the Senate should pass. I doubt very much whether there is any great pressing necessity at this time for concluding treaties of peace with the Indians between the Rocky Mountains and that part of the Territory of Washington in which there is any settlement. Certainly one consequence of this appropriation will be a large array of Government officers. It will lead to a considerable amount of money being paid to Indian agents and sub-agents. I think, therefore, it will be better to limit it, at all events, to the amount proposed by Governor Stevens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the question first be taken on such amendments as are not objected to; and then it would be in order to amend the amendment to which reference is now made. If desired, the question will now be taken on all the amendments except that one.

The question was taken; and they were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now upon the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to the reduction. I do not care about the sum. I have followed the estimate of the Indian Department. I believe it is important that something should be appropriated, because these tribes have been invited to meet in council. They will meet there in great numbers; and if there is not provision made for them, there will be a difficulty.

Mr. PEARCE. I move to amend the amendment by inserting in place of "$100,000" the amount which Governor Stevens estimates for.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. If the Senator from Tennessee is right, I do not think there should be any appropriation for the purpose indicated by the amendment. If, as he says, the tribes for whom it is proposed to make an appropriation, are not within a thousand miles of any white settlement, and that there is no emigrant route which goes near their habitation, I do not see the reason for commencing treaties with the numerous nations of Indians who are so far removed from us as not to interfere with us at all, or with our people who are going from one section of the country to the other. There is no necessity for the appropriation, if the Senator from Tennessee is right; and I do not understand the Senator from Virginia to differ from him in regard to the facts. It is known to us that if we once commence the system of treating with the numerous nations of Indians mentioned in the report which has been read, we shall increase every year our appropriations to each of them. It is not presents for this year alone for which we are making ourselves responsible, but it is the commencement of future appropriations for the tribes mentioned; so that, in all future time, we shall have an annual increase of the appropriation for those different purposes. If the Senator from Tennessee is right, as I presume he is, I do not think the appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. ATCHISON, (Mr. STUART occupying the chair.) It seems to me that if the argument of the Senator from Maryland is worth anything at all, it goes to the whole appropriation.

Mr. PRATT. I say so.

Mr. ATCHISON. Now, if I understand the matter aright, this appropriation is asked for on account of, and the necessity for it grows out of, communications of Governor Stevens to the Indian department. The Senator says, this is not on the line of any route to Oregon or Washington.

Mr. PRATT. So, I understand.

Mr. ATCHISON. It is not at this time, it is true. The main line is through the South Pass, but the probability is, that in future, this will be the route for those from the extreme northwestern States, being the nearest and best route to the Territory of Washington.

Now, sir, the Government of the United States has never had a treaty with the Blackfeet. We have an agent on the head waters of the Mississippi, who has had "talks" with them for many years, but yet we have never had a treaty with them. They are anxious now, it seems, from Governor Stevens's report and other reports, to treat with the United States, and for a very obvious reason. They see other bands of Indians in their neighborhood obtaining annuities from the Government of the United States, and they desire to be bound to the Government by the same ties that their neighbors, the Crows, and other Indians are. They say further, as I am informed by Mr. Culbertson, who was a trader among them for many years, that the means of subsistence are now giving out. They have heretofore subsisted on the buffalo. They have followed the buffalo from the head waters of the Mississippi to the waters of the Yellow Stone, and frequently south of the Yellow Stone. The buffalo are now giving out. The means of subsistence, which were formerly so abundant among them, are becoming scarcer and scarcer; and every year hundreds of them die, it is said, from starvation.

They have been informed by other Indians, and by traders, that the Government of the United States has agents among the various tribes of Indians; that the Government sends to them missionaries, blacksmiths, and other persons, teaching them the arts of civilization, by which they will hereafter be supplied with the means of subsistence. The Blackfeet are anxious to be placed in this category, in the same condition with other Indians. If this be so, I can see no reason why they should not be placed on the same footing. If they desire to commence the work of civilization, they should have the means of doing so, and the means must be furnished by the United States. You must furnish them with blacksmiths and with farmers; and to do this, you must treat with them. My opinion is, that the sum of $100,000 is little enough for the purpose.

Mr. PRATT. The amendment proposes to appropriate $80,000.

Mr. ATCHISON. Then the argument is still stronger. If $100,000 be necessary, surely $80,000 is little enough. I think, sir, that the demand of the Blackfeet is right, just, and proper; that they should be treated as other Indians east and west of them are. We have treaties with the Oregon Indians, with the Indians of Washington Territory—bands that roam from the Pacific ocean to the Cascade Mountains, and across to the Rocky Mountains—who are in communication with the Blackfeet. Then the Crows, the Sioux, the Pawnees, and the Camanches, and all the other Indians have treaties with us. Perhaps the Blackfeet are now the only exceptions to this general rule. Then, sir, I think it is good policy to treat with them. I am satisfied that to transport $20,000 or $30,000 worth of presents into the Blackfeet country, would require three times the amount of the original cost of the goods. Then $80,000 is certainly necessary.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand from the Indian Department, that the cost of transportation for presents will be very heavy, I think something like twelve or fourteen cents per pound. That is one reason for the increased estimate. I understand, also, that it is desired to treat with the tribes which range on both sides of the mountains in Washington Territory, as well as along the route. It is true that Governor Stevens looks to the further probability that there may be an emigrant route along that direction, and I think he says a wagon pass has been found. But in order that the Senate may see the grounds on which the Department rest this appropriation, I ask that the letter of Governor Stevens may be read.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
OLYMPIA, WASHINGTON TERRITORY,
January 31, 1854.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have this morning received from Lieutenant Mullan, in charge of a winter post in the valley of the St. Mary's river, in connection with my exploration, a report of outrages committed by the Blackfeet Indians since the period of my passing through their country, a copy of which is herewith inclosed. It seems that, notwithstanding the promises made to me in council at Fort Benton, they are still committing their terrible depredations; and I consider that the convening of the council at Fort Benton during next summer, which I recommended in communications from that point, is become a matter of necessity. It is my belief that the chiefs whom I met at Fort Benton are abiding by their promises; but their young men are numerous, and require a stringent course to compel them to abandon their accustomed depredations. It is mentioned by Lieutenant Mullan that the traders at the posts of the American Fur Company purchase horses of the Indians without inquiries as to where they were obtained; and it is my impression that those in charge of these posts have not paid sufficient attention to this matter.

I will most urgently repeat my recommendations to convene the council at Fort Benton; and, though I would still further try the influence of kindness with these Indians, my opinion is that a military force should be present at the time of the council, and that a military post should be established at this point. If, then, after a fair trial of the influence of kind treatment, outrages continued to be committed, the force of Government should be brought to bear upon them with great force. A report just received from Mr. Finkhnm, one of the civil engineers of my exploration, states that in crossing the Rocky Mountains, for the third time during the fall, he took a trail which carried him through a pass which even now will permit of the passage of an emigrant wagon. It seems to me that a route for emigration is now open which will come into competition with the route through the South Pass. By steamers, emigrants can probably ascend the Missouri river as far as Fort Benton, and certainly as high as the mouth of the Milk river, carrying with them their effects, and driving their cattle along the river trails. From either point good wagon routes lead to the passes of the mountains, and to the St. Mary's Valley. For the protection of our emigrants, as well as to secure peace between the Indians, the importance of the council at Fort Benton becomes more and more obvious; and I cannot doubt that a military force ought to be present, and a military post be established at that place. Mr. James Doty, in charge of a meteorological post at Fort Benton, is engaged in collecting all possible information concerning the Blackfeet Indians; and by the hands of Lieutenant Grover, who is expected to arrive here in March, I shall probably receive a full report, which will be immediately communicated to the Department.

Very respectfully, sir, your most obedient,
ISAAC I. STEVENS, Governor of Washington Territory, and Superintendent of Indian Affairs.
Col. GEORGE W. MANYPENNY,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs,
Washington City, D. C.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I regard this appropriation, Mr. President, as a very important one. I noticed the suggestion made by Governor Stevens some time since, in his report on that section of the country, and I think the making of it will save very many lives. I believe that the route over which he passed is destined to become a very important thoroughfare; and I am sure that nothing can be more important than at this time to propitiate the good will of these remote and distant tribes, of which I know nothing except as we hear from them through a wandering agent or reporter.

I have met with the same gentleman to whom the Senator from Missouri alluded—Mr. Culbertson. He has spent twenty or thirty years of his life among these Indians. He is in no way interested in this matter; and he thinks that it is of very great importance to our Indian relations in that quarter that this appropriation should be made. I understand it to be recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, as well as by Governor Stevens and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I have a great respect for the recommendation of these officers, and, in this case, especially for that of Governor Stevens, whom I regard as one of the ablest men in the service of the Government—a far-seeing statesman, who is destined to render important service to the Territory over which he presides. I trust that his suggestion in this instance will be carried into effect.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. There are some other amendments made necessary by the treaties which have recently been ratified; and I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, if he has prepared those amendments from his committee? If not, I will offer them; but I shall have to offer them in my individual capacity at present, as I have not conferred with the committee on the subject.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The Committee on Indian Affairs will take charge of them.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I have nothing further to propose from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 24, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER stated that the business first in order was the consideration of Senate bill for the relief of James Jeffries and Jeremiah M. Smith, upon which a motion was pending to refer to the Committee of the Whole House, and also a motion pending to refer to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, upon which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. EDGERTON, by unanimous consent of the House, presented a joint resolution of the State of Ohio in favor of the passage of a bill dividing that State into two judicial districts; which was read by the Clerk, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ELLISON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio upon the same subject; which received the same reference.

Mr. BERNHISEL, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah on the same footing as regards clerks, &c., as those of Minnesota and New Mexico; and that said committee report by bill, or otherwise.

Mr. BANKS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill to refund the balance due to Massachusetts for disbursements during the late war with Great Britain.

Mr. GREY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to report to the House of Representatives why the mail service was not "let" and contracted for on the river routes, 1st. From Louisville, Kentucky, to Evansville, Indiana, and back, daily; 2d. From Evansville to Cairo, Illinois, and back, daily; 3d. From Cairo to St. Louis, Missouri, and back, daily; according to the advertisement of 31st December, 1852, and the eleventh section of the act of Congress, approved 31st August, 1852, which made it the duty of the Postmaster General to issue proposals and contract for the transportation of a daily mail "on those routes, 'on suitable and safe steamboats.' " The bids, by terms of the advertisement, to be received in the Post Office Department "until three o'clock p. m. of the 10th day of February, 1853, to be decided by 1st of March, and service to commence on the 1st July following, and continue for four years.

2. Resolved, That he furnish copies of all the contracts and bids, and "proposals" for contracts and bids, which have been made with, proposed to, or received from Thomas Shirlock and Z. M. Shirley, or either of them, or with, to, or from any other person or persons, together with copies of all the amendments, alterations, privileges, extensions, or restrictions authorized and permitted, or assumed and exercised, and of all orders for additional compensation, except what appears on the face of the contract or contracts, on this route from Louisville to St. Louis, or any part of it, since March, 1851. Also, the greatest number of "mail messengers," "route agents," local agents, and employees, that have ever, or have at any one time during the above period, been engaged in, or connected with, the service on that route, (exclusive of postmasters)—at what points engaged, and the salary per quarter or per annum of each one of them; also, who are now the contractors from Louisville to St. Louis, and in what manner each and all of said contracts were made, whether privately or by being let to the lowest bidder; also, what intermediate offices let between Louisville and St. Louis have been authorized to be supplied by each contract on that route since March, 1851, and how often per week each and every one of those offices were to be supplied under those contracts or arrangements since March, 1851, or either one of them, and why the official reports from the Postmaster General, as published in the "Blue Book," state the service between Louisville and St. Louis is performed for $40,222 22, when the allowance to the contractors on that route is $70,000 per year, exclusive of "route agents," "local agents," "messengers," &c.

3. Resolved, That he furnish copies of all orders, rules, or regulations adopted by him, which tends to prevent or deny to members of Congress the privilege of going into the public rooms of the Post Office Department, and then and there examining, with assistance of the clerks, the "public records" under the charge of said clerks.

4. Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to abolish all rules, orders, or regulations, which prevents or denies the privilege to the members of Congress of going into the public rooms in the Post Office Department, and then and there examining such public records in the presence, and with the assistance of the clerk having charge of them, as such member may desire. That he also abolish all rules, orders, or regulations by which the clerks, or either of them, are prevented or restrained from affording to any member such information during those examinations as the public records of the Post Office Department will enable him to give.

Mr. DRUM. I object.

Mr. GROW. I object to the last part of the resolutions.

Mr. GREY. I move to suspend the rules, that I may have an opportunity of offering the resolutions.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. Is it in order to move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

The SPEAKER. The resolutions are not before the body. It is only proposed that they shall come before the body.

Mr. GREY. Have I the privilege now of saying anything upon these resolutions?

The SPEAKER. They are not debatable, because the subject-matter of them is not before the House.

Mr. GREY. Can I say a few words in explanation of the first part of the resolutions?

The SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent of the House alone.

Mr. DRUM. I object.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I only wish to remark that if the gentleman from Kentucky is allowed to make an explanation, it need not be expected that the privilege of responding to him will not be claimed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky can make no remarks; it is objected to.

Mr. SMITH. I desire it to be distinctly understood that the gentleman is quite welcome to make any explanation, so far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is objected to, and is, therefore, out of order.

Mr. GREY. I will, for the present, withdraw the resolution No. 4 of the series.

Mr. GROW. I objected to the last of these resolutions. I have no objection to the balance.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I believe the objection to the resolutions is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. GROW. I withdraw the objection I made.

Mr. DRUM. I objected to the introduction of the resolutions, and I do not withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, is upon the suspension of the rules, to allow the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREY] to introduce the resolutions just read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Ball, Benson, Benton, Buggy, Carpenter, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Culom, Thomas Davis, Dent, Dickinson, Thomas D. Enot, Ewing, Faulkner, Flager, Franklin, Gray, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Heister, Howe, Hunt, Roland Jones, Keith, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Letcher, Maurice, Middlewarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, John Perkins, Ready, David Ritchie, Rogers, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, William R. Smith, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Vail, Walbridge, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Zollcoffer—61.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Bissell, Bliss, Boyce, Bridges, Caskie, Chrisman, Clark, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dean, Drum, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Elberidge, Fenton, Florence, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glucy Jones, Kurtz, Lilly, Lindsley, Macdonald, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, Mayall, Milson, Murray, Noble, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Richardson, Biddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Tront, Walker, Warren, Wells, John Wentworth, Witte, and Daniel B. Wright—81.

So the rules were not suspended.

Mr. STRATTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Captain Huddy, for the purpose of reference to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey can effect his object by making a memorandum and sending it to the Clerk's desk.

COMMISSIONS TO PRIVATE ARMED VESSELS.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interests, the instructions referred to by President Monroe in his annual message of the 2d of December, 1823, and transmitted to our diplomatic agents abroad, upon the subject of the issue of commissions to private armed vessels, together with the responses, if any, received from said Governments; also, any other instructions, together with the correspondence held with foreign Governments upon the same subject since the date of the last message, and not heretofore communicated to Congress.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, the question will be upon the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. It must therefore lie over, unless two thirds agree to suspend the rules.

Mr. FAULKNER. I hope no one will object to the introduction of the resolution. The object simply is to get information which has never been communicated to Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia will allow the Chair to remind him that debate is not in order.

Mr. FAULKNER. As objection is made, I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to introduce the resolution.

The question was then taken; and the rules were suspended.

The resolution was then received and adopted.

THE POST OFFICE CONTRACTORS AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Ewing] has the floor.

Mr. SAGE. Will the gentleman yield the floor for a moment?

Mr. EWING. I would be disposed, Mr. Speaker, to yield the floor to any other gentleman; but there are so many claiming it that I think it better not to yield to any of them. I therefore insist on the House proceeding to the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Ewing,] as the Chair understands him, insists upon the regular order of business, which is the consideration of the bill in which he is interested; the title of which the Clerk will report.

The title of the bill was then read, as follows:

An act for relief of James Jeffries and Jeremiah M. Smith.

The SPEAKER. There are two motions pending on the subject of this bill. One is to refer it to the Committee of the Whole House, and the other to refer it to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. EWING. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to have read to the House the report of the committee which accompanies the bill.

The Clerk accordingly read the report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom the petition of James Jeffries and Jeremiah M. Smith had been referred. The report states that at the mail lettings of 1850 the petitioners had bid off and received the contracts for a number of mail routes in Texas; including, among other routes, Nos. 6268, 6269, and 6277. These latter routes the petitioners had failed to carry into operation, and for such failure the Postmaster General had imposed several fines on them, and deducted their amount from the allowances made for the other routes when the service was being performed. The report goes on to state that it had appeared in evidence that the petitioners had made efforts to carry out the service on the routes mentioned, but had failed to do so. It was further in proof that route No. 6268 had been advertised as but ninety-one miles in length, while its actual distance was one hundred and thirty-five miles; that the route No. 6269 was stated in the advertisement as thirty-five miles, while its actual distance turned out to be sixty-five miles; and that route No. 6277 was advertised as seventy-eight miles in length, while its actual distance was one hundred and five miles—making the actual distance on the three routes three hundred and five miles, while the advertisement had described them as but two hundred and four miles. Under these circumstances the committee were of opinion that the petitioners were entitled to relief, and reported a bill for that purpose.

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, what is the pending question before the House on the reference of this bill?

The SPEAKER. There are two questions pending on the subject. One is to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House, and the other to refer it to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. EWING. Then I ask the previous question.

Mr. SAGE. I wish that the gentleman from Kentucky would withdraw his demand for the previous question. I would like at this time to make a simple explanation in regard to this matter, and therefore hope the gentleman from Kentucky will comply with my request.

Mr. EWING. Certainly; I withdraw the call for the previous question.

Mr. SAGE. I desire, Mr. Speaker, the attention of the House for a moment or two in relation to this matter, for I deem it one of very great importance in establishing a principle by which we are to be governed here in the future.

It will be borne in mind by the members who were present in the House last Friday, when the gentleman from Kentucky came into the House and asked for the reconsideration of the matter, that he stated, among other things, that these routes were twice the distance described in the advertisement by the Postmaster General. Well, on this statement the House agreed to reconsider the matter, and discussed the reference of the bill. The gentleman from Virginia then called for the reading of the report, but it turned out that the report was not here; and therefore the gentleman from Kentucky asked to have the matter postponed for a few days, for the purpose of enabling members to get the report, and to act understandingly on the question. For that I was charged, by the gentleman from Kentucky, with a want of courtesy.

Now, in following this matter up, I have taken some pains to obtain official information from the Post Office Department. The result of my investigation of this matter is this: It appears that these gentlemen bid for a large number of routes in various States, in 1850. After they were awarded to them, they assented them over, and accepted those routes which suited them, and rejected such as did not suit them. Among all these routes, which were declared off to them, there is not one in which the distance was twice as great as represented in the advertisement, nor anything approximating to it. Some of the routes were shorter than the distance mentioned in the advertisement. But, furthermore, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Jones,] there was a clause in the advertisement which put these men upon their guard. The Post Office Department did not undertake to determine the actual distance, but named the routes as extending from place to place, naming them, and gave the distance as they were understood, and thus threw upon the bidders the responsibility of informing themselves of the actual distance.

With this explanation, I will send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, a letter which I received from the Postmaster General, in answer to one I addressed to him, asking for the information to which it refers. I hope the members of the House will listen to it, as this is a pioneer case; and there are many others of the same sort, which will come in hereafter, if this one be favorably considered by the House.

The letter was then read, as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
CONTRACT OFFICE, April 24, 1854.

SIR: In answer to your letter of the 22d instant, I have the honor to inform you, that under the advertisement of the Postmaster General, for proposals to convey the mails of the United States from 1st July, 1850, to 30th June, 1854, inclusive, in the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas,

Messrs. Smith and Jeffries were the accepted bidders on the following routes, to wit: Nos. 5184, 5201, and 5204, in Kentucky, and 5234, in Tennessee. The latter was transferred to Messrs. Ustry and Fisher, in November, 1850. The service on the other routes appears to have been performed with average regularity. They were also the accepted bidders on the following routes in Texas:

No. 6229. From Shelbyville to Pulaski, 45 miles and back, once a week; distance proved to be 41 miles. Accepted at $270, and relet to James Truit at $305.

No. 6235. From Henderson to Crockett, 85 miles and back, once a week; distance proved to be 93 miles. Accepted at $185, and relet to T. J. R. Greenwood at same pay of $485.

No. 6248. From Jefferson to Greenwood, 42 miles and back, once a week; distance proved to be 55 miles. Accepted at $247, and relet to E. Ussery at $520.

No. 6250. From Dangerfield to Clarksville, 69 miles and back, three times a week; distance proved to be the same. Accepted at $999 50, and relet to W. B. Stout, twice a week, at $944.

No. 6257. From Tarrant to Buffalo, 100 miles and back, once a week; distance proved to be 99 miles. Accepted at $597 50, and relet to W. B. Stout at same, $597 50.

No. 6259. From Paris to Pine Bluff, 20 miles and back, once a week; distance proved to be 21 miles. Accepted at $119 86, and relet to W. B. Stout at same, $119 86.

No. 6268. From Franklin to Chamber's Creek, 91 miles and back once a week; distance proved to be 105 miles. Accepted at $499, and relet to Alexander Douglass at $599.

No. 6269. From Nashville to Leona, 35 miles and back, once a week; distance proved to be 55 miles. Accepted at $210, and relet to W. H. Wheelock at $400.

No. 6277. From Independence to Cameron, 78 miles and back, once a week; distance proved to be 76 miles. Accepted at $468, and relet to E. Burns at $569.

The following note is always embraced in the instructions of every annual advertisement of mail proposals issued from the Department:

"The distances are always given according to the best information; but no increased pay will be allowed, should they prove to be greater than advertised, if the points to be supplied be correctly stated. Bidders must inform themselves on this point."

Messrs. Smith and Jeffries are liable for damages on routes Nos. 6229, 6248, 6268, 6269, and 6277.

On the other routes it does not appear that they are liable for any damages.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. H. DUNDAS,

Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Hon. R. SAGE,

House of Representatives.

Mr. SAGE continued: Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the House are in possession of information upon which they can act understandingly upon this bill—information which shows that those contractors bid off a large number of contracts, and after sorting them out, they executed such as suited them, and rejected those which did not suit them. In several instances these contracts were relet at less sums than those these parties bid them off for. Here are the statistics in reference to the routes bid off by these parties:

No. of Routes.	Estimated distance.	Ascertained distance.	Bid.	Relet.
6229.....	45.....	44.....	$270 00.....	$305 00

Now, I ask the House to bear with me while I read two or three short extracts from the proceedings in reference to this bill on Friday. In presenting the bill to the House, the gentleman from Kentucky is reported as saying:

"I will say a single word in explanation of this bill, if I can make my voice sufficiently audible. These petitioners are poor men. They entered into a contract to carry the mail upon a route in Texas; and by positive and conclusive proof, as is shown by the papers accompanying the bill, the route was twice as long as advertised by the Department. The report made by Mr. Ross, the chairman of the Post Office Committee in the Senate, shows clearly that the claim ought to be allowed. It has passed the Senate twice, but has been lost in the House in each instance, in consequence of want of time. I shall not be in the House again for some time, as I am only waiting until I am well enough to enable me to travel home. I would regard it as a special favor if the bill be taken up and passed."

Again he says:

"They were nearly twice as long as the length advertised, as the gentleman will find by referring to the proof in the case."

Mr. PECKHAM. What was the actual difference?

Mr. SAGE. The actual difference was thirty-two miles on the three routes under consideration. Some of them, as I stated, were less than advertised. Now, sir, I ask the House to bear in mind that, in the absence of official information upon the subject, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] and myself thought it would be better to wait until the report could be brought before the House; and I was very much surprised at the rebuke which I received, and which I may say this House received—for I thought the House were very courteous to the gentleman in obliging him by a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was referred, and by the postponement of its consideration to an early day to suit his convenience.

Now, sir, what I said, to which the gentleman from Kentucky takes exceptions, and all I said, at that time upon the subject, was the following:

"I hope the motion to recommit this bill, or the motion to postpone, will prevail. There is no disposition upon the part of any member, I presume, to delay action upon it from any captious motive. The objection seems to be that if we act upon it now, it would be establishing the precedent of acting upon a bill without a report, and without investigation, but upon the recommendation of an individual member. We all have equal rights here, and I have bills in my possession which I am interested in getting through, but I take it for granted that this House is not ready to allow these bills to be put upon their passage without a report and examination. If it will meet the wishes of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. EWING,] I will move that the further consideration of this matter be postponed until next Wednesday."

To this the gentleman from Kentucky replies, as follows:

"I have not been disposed, and am not disposed, to press this matter upon the House against their wishes. I appealed to the courtesy of the House, not with a view of establishing a precedent for ordinary cases, but hoping that by an explanation of the peculiar circumstances connected with this case, the House would allow the bill to be disposed of at once. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. SAGE,] however, seems to place it simply upon the ground of ordinary transactions. Sir, I wish very much I could establish in this House a precedent for courtesy. I know of no precedent that would be more useful, save more time, or contribute more to secure justice to those having honest claims against the Government of the United States. But I despair of being able to establish a precedent which would be of sufficient force to reach the sense of propriety of the gentleman from New York. I say I despair of such a result; for I have discovered that when the great body of the House seem to recognize the peculiarity of the circumstances attending this case, a few members, like the gentleman from New York, seem disposed to throw insurmountable obstacles in the way of accomplishing what is the obvious wish of the great majority of the House."

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I have stated what the action of the House was in relation to this matter, and I leave it to gentlemen to say whether they, or I, acted with a want of courtesy, or with a want of anything which should actuate every legislator? They desired to have correct information.

Here is an official letter from the Post Office Department detailing all the facts in the case; and I am informed that this is not the only case which will come before the House. There are many of a similar character, where mail contractors have contracted to transport the mails of the United States from certain points in the country to certain other points. After they have received the contracts they have accepted those which suited them, and by which they could make money, but they rejected those which they deemed unprofitable. This proves to be of that class of cases.

In conclusion, I hope that the House, before it passes from this matter, will give it the consideration which it deserves; for, as I said before, this is only a pioneer bill. If it be passed, we shall have a score of a similar description before us previous to the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant, I may say, to parade anything like my private afflictions before the House; but I think it due to the body to give the reason why I asked the favor which gentlemen were kind enough to grant me last Friday. I had been confined for a week or two with an affection which I feared was about to assume a chronic form. If that were the case, I was perfectly aware that I could take no further part in the action of this House during the balance of this session. I was about to go home, at all events for a length of time, on a call of pressing business. I appealed to the courtesy of the House, so far as I could make myself audible in giving the explanation necessary in taking up this bill, to act on it instead of referring it, as they were about to do—to act on it at once, as the facts were brief and simple.

As to the courtesy of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SAGE,] I repeat that I said that I should be most happy if I, or any member of this House, could establish a precedent of courtesy. The gentleman very ingeniously attempts to identify himself with this House. I acknowledged at that time the courtesy of the House. In the very remarks which the gentleman has read I spoke of the amiable disposition of the House to make an exception in this case, and to recognize the demands of courtesy which I invoked, the disposition which prevailed among at least the great body of the House. I did not say whether the gentleman was courteous or not. I am willing to acknowledge that I said by implication that he was not so; and I am now willing to say explicitly that I do not think that he was. I leave it to the judgment of members of the House, who were witnesses of the facts, whether he was. At the same time I am disposed to acknowledge my obligation to the kindness of the gentleman who has taken such peculiar interest in this case from the very first, and whose counsels with the Department, I am willing to allow, have led to the results which have just been read.

"We have been courteous," said the gentleman. We have been courteous! Why, sir, who denied that the action of the House was courteous on Friday last? Most cordially did I thank the great majority of the House, and I hoped to have an additional reason for gratitude in their overruling the evident purpose of the gentleman who comes here at the risk of defeating the ends of private justice to gratify a personal resentment, because I used language not grateful to his ears.

I did not intend to explain this matter further than the reading of the report which the gentleman was so anxious to see the other day, and which is only about an inch and a quarter in length. It was a Senate report, and not in the hands of the printer of this House, but the hands of the printer of the Senate. I am driven by the gentleman to do more.

He has facts, which he has carefully gathered from the Department, as to the length of these routes; he means, and ought to have said, the length which they are advertised the second time, allowing, as he does, and as the Department also allows, that they are longer by the second advertisement than they were by the first advertisement. I did not say—and I was tempted, though very reluctantly, to interrupt him, to ask him what was his purpose in reading this letter from the Department, and in reading my remarks—I did not say that the routes were twice as long.

Mr. SAGE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will read him what he said, as reported.

Mr. EWING. The gentleman has read it already. I know it is so reported. But if the gentleman will look at another portion of my remarks, he will see that I there said they were nearly twice as long, not recollecting the precise figures, or having examined them since the last Congress, when I carefully investigated the case, though then in vain. I did not say they were twice as long. I said, and I now say, that the proofs in the case, upon oath, and the only proofs I had seen—proofs which satisfied the committee of the Senate and the Senate—showed that they were nearly twice as long, or, at all events, they were advertised at only one third of the distance which they afterwards turned out to be.

Now, I ask the attention of the House to this petition for relief. Sir, when the gentleman from New York was making his remarks in opposition to this humble petition of poor and humble men, I could not help reflecting upon the difference between the action of the gentleman, or his predecessors, in the past, with his probable action in the future. I could not help contrasting his conduct on this occasion with the action of his predecessors upon the claims which were presented during the last Congress by mail contractors, constituents of the gentleman from New York, who filled these lobbies, and who did not ask to be released from a fine inflicted upon them; who did not ask that this Government would refrain from putting its hands into their pockets, and taking their own private money in the rigorous infliction of an unjust fine, but who said that they had made a bad bargain, and demanded the small sum of several hundred thousand dollars as an indemnity for their want of judgment. That claim was carried through, as all such claims are, by the influence brought to bear upon Congress from that great omnipotent commercial emporium. But when an humble mail contractor from the West, beaten down and ground to the earth by the parsimoniousness—perhaps it is necessary—of the Department under the cheap postage system—a cheap postage brought about by the great cities, in order that the merchants may circulate their circulars at the expense of taxation upon the people of the West—when such a contractor comes here, under all these circumstances, ground down by the force of competition to the lowest limit, and compelled by the rules of the Department to accept the service for the lowest possible sum, and asks, not indemnity, but to be released from an unjust fine, they are met with such replies as that made by the gentleman from New York. Why is this difference made? Why is it that after paying our fair share towards supporting this Department, which has become a sort of merchants' express, and is regulated at the will of merchants, because they regulate its amount of business, we are to be treated so differently from those who ask more, merely because they ask more? I was a mail contractor under that same letting, and I know of my own personal experience and personal losses, that mail contractors could not, under the peculiar circumstances of the times, have borne the hardships inflicted on my constituents. Just at that time, owing to peculiar circumstances, everything which these mail contractors were obliged to buy—horses and provender of every description—rose in price upon an average of one hundred per cent. at least. I know that this is true, because I had a good right to know. These contractors bid for various routes, looked over and selected what suited them, and rejected others that they did not like. Where did the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] get his information in regard to these gentlemen? It is entirely gratuitous, and is not true. These contractors bid for contracts upon various routes, and they performed service upon most of them, while other routes were let through their instrumentality at great expense, and perhaps at a possible sacrifice and personal loss. They were fined upon three only; and they ask therefore to be released from the fine imposed upon them. When the routes were discovered to be longer than was at first supposed, the Department relet them; but they could not do so without a considerable reduction in the terms. The difference between the two lettings is the sum which these contractors desire to be reimbursed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question? The report states that some of the routes bid for by these persons were much longer than at first supposed. Is that the chief reason urged for the passage of the bill?

Mr. EWING. That is one of the reasons why these contractors ask to be released from the fine imposed upon them.

Mr. SMITH. I call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to a section in the advertisement of the Department.

Mr. EWING. I will explain that directly.

Mr. SMITH. With the permission of the gentleman I will read it:

"8. The distances are given according to the best information; but no increased pay will be allowed should they be greater than advertised, if the points to be supplied be correctly stated. Bidders must inform themselves on this point."

Mr. EWING. I will explain the meaning of the section just read by the gentleman from Virginia, as far as I can. I know very well that the laws of the Department could not release these contractors from the fine, and therefore the reason of this application to Congress.

It would not, perhaps, do for Congress to say that a contractor should be always released from a contract if it should turn out to be half a mile or a mile longer; but the contractors in this case, where the distance proved to be so great, apply to the equity and justice of Congress to pay back to them the money which was exacted from them by the Department. I know very well that the terms of the law state that contracts must be let upon exact distances. But here was a first letting in a new country where the distances were taken from maps, and which were vaguely and blindly given. The bidders themselves knew nothing of the distances, save as they procured them in this way, and as a result, these mistakes occurred. The Department states the distance is so much. The statements of the Department in the advertisements are usually correct; but if they do not mean to inform the bidders of the correct distances, why make any statement at all about it, and why not leave a blank?

They might as well leave the advertisements with simply the names of the termini, with blanks as to the distances. If it were not intended to give correct statements and information as to the distance of the route, of course the law, as interpreted by the Department, does not provide for the relief of these people, otherwise they would not be found applying to Congress for relief.

I simply ask here—not that which has been conceded to other contractors—not that which was conceded to the constituents of the gentleman from New York during the last Congress, when indemnity was made for the losses sustained by a company of contractors under a bad contract—I simply ask that these men who attempted to fulfill, and who, for the greatest part, did fulfill their obligations to the Government; who discharged all their obligations under peculiar hardships—for there has not been any letting under which so much hardship has been inflicted on western mail contractors, and from which such losses and bankruptcy have resulted—I simply ask, I say, that relief be extended to these men by Congress. They have discharged their duty under peculiar difficulties, and they simply ask to be released from the fines imposed on them by the Postmaster General.

I hope the House fully understands the case; and begging pardon for engrossing so much of their time, which I had not intended to do, and would not have done but for the objections that have been made in the matter, I now desire to call for the previous question.

Mr. GROW. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw for a moment his call for the previous question.

Mr. EWING. No; I cannot now consent to withdraw my call for the previous question. I have already done so to-day once before; but as I speak with great difficulty, I do not wish to do so again.

Mr. EDGERTON. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw his call for the previous question, for the purpose of enabling the House to be put into full possession of the facts of the case. For, I say here, that the House is not at this time in possession of the facts; and all I ask is that the gentleman from Kentucky will agree to allow the House to understand thoroughly the question before us. I wish to refer to the memorial of the petitioners, and the report of the committee.

Mr. EWING. If the gentleman from Ohio desires to have the memorial read, it can be done. The report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has been already read by the Clerk. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] comes now with a letter from the Department; but I think the question has been fully discussed, and I do not believe that the House needs any further enlightenment on the subject.

Mr. EDGERTON. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me to read the memorial of the petitioners, I think I will be able to satisfy the House that after all there has been no very great hardship sustained by these persons.

Mr. SAGE. I wish the gentleman from Kentucky would withdraw for a moment or two his call for the previous question. I want to make a single remark, and to present an abstract of facts in the case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky declines, as the Chair understands, to withdraw the call for the previous question; and consequently debate is out of order.

Mr. EDGERTON. Then I hope the House will vote down the previous question.

The question was then taken; and the previous question was not seconded, only thirty-three members—not a sufficient number—voting for it.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to the House—and I do so upon the memorial presented by these gentlemen, the claimants—the facts, the real facts in the case. It appears from the memorial that the contractors made bids for fourteen routes in Texas—

Mr. EWING, (interrupting.) Let the memorial be read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. EDGERTON. No. I will briefly state the facts.

Mr. EWING. I would rather have the memorial read from the table.

Mr. EDGERTON. It is not necessary. These persons got the contracts for the conveyance of the mails on fourteen routes in Texas. One of the contractors went from Kentucky to Texas for the purpose of examining the country. It appears that the Post Office Department were without any previous knowledge as to the condition of the country; but the bids for the contracts were taken on the representation of some persons in whom they had confidence. This contractor went down, as I said, from Kentucky to Texas, and on his arrival there he found himself greatly deceived as to the nature of the country and the state of the roads over which the mails were to be carried, inasmuch that it was with difficulty he succeeded in employing persons to carry the mail on one part of the route. He succeeded in employing persons to carry the mails upon parts of the routes; and those routes over which he could not get persons to carry the mails for a less sum than their bids, they abandoned.

They state, that for their failure to execute the bonds required by the Department, as security for carrying the mails over the aforesaid routes, that is, the three routes upon which they have been fined, the Postmaster General has imposed fines to the amount of $1,644. The length of these routes is not the cause of their complaint. It is not so stated in the memorial. Their complaint is the fact that they were deceived as to the nature of the country over which the routes pass; and, in the concluding prayer of the memorial, they state that they "conceive that it cannot be for the interest of the General Government rigorously to exact from its citizens, your petitioners and their guarantors, a forfeiture incurred by their failure"—or, more properly, their inability to comply with a hard bargain. "They therefore pray that your honorable body will take their case into consideration, and exonerate them from the fine and forfeiture aforesaid, or extend to them such relief as may be deemed reasonable." That is the whole case. They proposed to carry the mails upon certain routes, and in doing so they made a bad bargain. They relet those routes upon which they could save money, and the others, in relation to which they could not make advantageous bargains, they abandoned. The Department fined them for the abandonment. If this relief is granted to these gentlemen, every individual who makes a bad bargain with the Government will come here and claim remuneration at the hands of Congress, and will cite this case as a precedent for such application.

Mr. GROW. I have but a word to say upon this matter; for, take it as presented by its friends, and is it such a case as Congress ought to grant relief in? The amount in controversy may not be very large, or of any great consequence. But the policy of the Post Office Department, in receiving bids for the transportation of the mails, is to secure a faithful performance of the contracts; and, previous to 1836, the bidders for the routes were simply required to present a recommendation to the Department from some persons known to it. But Congress then changed the law in that respect, and required the bids to be guaranteed, for the express purpose of having reliable and sufficient security to secure and compel a faithful performance.

Now, in the case before us, as in every other case of mail lettings, bidders put in bids upon a large number of routes. Then, on examination of their routes, if they ascertain that they have been mistaken in relation to the nature of the routes, and that they have become involved in expenses above the receipts, is the Government to relieve them? Bona fide bidders who live in the vicinity of the routes, who understood the character of the country, and knew the expenses of carrying the mail over it, bid in the expectation that if their bids are accepted, they will go on and perform the service. But they were deprived of the opportunity of carrying the mails, by the competition of such individuals, who have subjected the Government to unnecessary inconvenience and delay by the non-performance of their contracts, and who have subjected the citizens along these routes to inconvenience, delay, and disturbance, in their mail facilities.

If we grant this relief, we establish a precedent for making up for losses, which will induce speculating men to bid upon every route advertised, and then, when they find that they have been deceived, or have made hard bargains, to throw up their contracts and apply to Congress for relief, based upon this very case. It is a bad precedent to establish. Let Government hold men who take contracts to a strict accountability; and when the Government has not deceived the parties, nor done any act to their prejudice, it should not grant relief. The Government has not deceived these parties, because it gave notice to them of the routes, and named the points between which they run; and that the contractors should inform themselves in relation to them. A clause of the advertisement for these lettings is in these words:

"10. The distances are given according to the best information; but no increased pay will be allowed should they be greater than advertised, if the points to be supplied be correctly stated. Bidders must inform themselves on this point."

If these routes had been one third less in length than they were advertised to be, the parties would have had the benefit of that variation. If they advertise a route as three hundred miles in length, and it turns out to be only two hundred and fifty, they must pay for the three hundred miles advertised, and the contractor would get the benefit of it. I am opposed to granting the relief asked for, however great the case of individual hardship; for it was one brought on the parties by their own folly.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw the proposition long enough to have the memorial read.

Mr. GROW. I will withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. EWING. I was about to ask to have the memorial read.

Mr. GROW. I do not withdraw the demand for any remarks to be made.

Mr. EWING. That would be a very hard case.

Mr. GROW. I appealed to the gentleman to withdraw his demand in my favor a few minutes since, and he refused. I withdraw only for the purpose of having the memorial read.

The memorial was read by the Clerk, as follows:
To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners, James Jeffries and Jeremiah Smith, state that they were the successful bidders for carrying the mail for four years ending the 1st day of July, 1854, on fourteen routes in the State of Texas, among which were those numbered 6263, 6269, and 6277. Your petitioners state that one of them went from his residence in Barren county, Kentucky, to the State of Texas, for the purpose of making the necessary arrangements for filling their contract; but, on his arrival, found himself greatly deceived as to the nature of the country and the state of the roads over which the mails were to be carried, inasmuch that it was with difficulty that he succeeded in employing persons to carry the mail on only a portion of the routes, which he did by engaging to give them the whole of the compensation they were to receive from the Government. Your petitioners, anxious to carry their contract into execution in good faith, being willing to lose their time and their necessary expenses incurred in traveling. Your petitioners are informed that most of the persons with whom they contracted, as aforesaid, have been substituted for them by the Postmaster General, and it is presumed they have executed the necessary bonds, so that as to all such routes your petitioners suppose they are exonerated. But for their failure to execute bonds with the required security for carrying the mail on the aforesaid routes—Nos. 6263, 6269, and 6277, they have been fined by the Postmaster General in the sum of $1,644, part of which, viz: $444, they have paid. Now your petitioners state that the distance on route No. 6269 was stated in the advertisement of the Department to be thirty-five miles, whereas they have been informed, and believe the actual distance is about seventy-five miles; and they have, moreover, understood from information that the real distance on all the routes in Texas which they bid off, exceeded that stated in the advertisement—they looked to the advertisement for the distances, and have thus been misled. But, however deceived or misled, your petitioners humbly conceive that it cannot be for the interest of the Government rigorously to exact from its citizens, your petitioners and their guarantors, a forfeiture incurred by their failure, or more properly, their inability, to comply with a hard bargain. They therefore pray that your honorable body will take their case into consideration, and exonerate them from the fine and forfeiture aforesaid, or extend to them such relief as may be deemed reasonable.

JAMES JEFFRIES,
J. M. SMITH.

Mr. EWING. I hope the House will refuse to second the demand.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered to be put.

The question then recurred upon the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PHELPS. Is there not a motion pending to refer the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

The SPEAKER. There is such a motion pending, but the question is first upon referring to the Committee of the Whole House.

The question was then taken on the motion to refer the bill; and it was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. EWING. Is not the call for the previous question now exhausted?

The SPEAKER. It is not, and will not be until the motions to commit are disposed of.

Mr. HESTER. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The question was taken; and the House refused to lay the bill on the table; there being, on a division—ayes 48, noes not counted.

The question was then taken on the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; and it was agreed to.

SENATE AMENDMENTS TO THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question under consideration when the committee was last in session, was the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. PHELPS. I move the bill be laid aside, that we may take up for consideration the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to occupy much of the time of the committee at present in explaining the action of the Committee of Ways and Means on the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill. The bill as it passed the House of Representatives contained appropriations to the amount of nearly $1,500,000. The Senate, by its action, has added, as amendments to the bill, appropriations (besides indefinite ones) to the amount of upwards of $2,000,000. The Committee of Ways and Means, in considering those amendments of the Senate, concluded to recommend to the House the adoption of a number of them, amounting to little less than $500,000. If the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means be adopted, there will be still more than $1,500,000 involved in the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

A portion of the amendment made by the Senate, and in which the Committee of Ways and Means agree in recommending to the adoption of the House, consist of appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Indians. These amount to about $150,000. The object of having them in this bill is, that the Department may be enabled to have at their command this sum of money in advance of the passage of the regular Indian appropriation bill. This money is for annuities we are bound to pay to the Sioux Indians in Minnesota, by treaties made with them in 1851. A portion of these annuities have to be paid in goods, and as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under existing laws, is required to give sixty days' notice for proposals for furnishing those goods, and as those goods have to be transported from the Atlantic cities to the Territory of Minnesota, it is important, nay more, it is necessary, that these goods should be delivered to the Indians agents in the summer months. For if we wait until the rivers are frozen, the transportation would have to be entirely by land from the shores of Lake Michigan. The appropriation does not increase the expenditures of the Government at all. It is a mere transfer of this appropriation from the Indian appropriation bill to this deficiency bill, and the Department urges upon Congress that a similar course shall be pursued with the appropriations designed for the next year.

The Committee of Ways and Means also find an amendment adopted by the Senate, appropriating $500,000 towards the construction of water-works for the cities of Washington and Georgetown. This appropriation is proposed as a deficiency. The sum of $100,000 was appropriated by the last Congress to be expended on these works during the present fiscal year. I am informed that, since the passage of this bill by the Senate, a portion of the workmen who have been employed upon these works have been discharged, and no more have been retained than can be employed under the appropriation during the residue of the present fiscal year.

A more important question than that of expediting the work by making appropriations in advance of the regular appropriation bills is, in the opinion of the Committee of Ways and Means, whether Congress will prosecute work on this aqueduct upon the plan adopted. This plan, according to the estimate of the officers having the work in charge, will cost about $2,400,000. Shall Congress prosecute this work or abandon it?

It is stated a sufficient supply of water can be obtained at a cost of about $1,000,000 by adopting a different plan. The Committee of Ways and Means did not feel competent to decide this question; they leave it for the decision of the House.

Another amendment provides for the construction of a bridge across the Potomac, at Little Falls. It appropriates $75,000. The Committee of Ways and Means cannot concur in this, but recommend to the House to disagree to it.

There is another important amendment made by the Senate, which was much discussed at the time the deficiency bill was under consideration here before: I refer to the appropriations for the further prosecution of the work on various custom-houses. It will be recollected that the first deficiency bill failed in this House in consequence of burdening it with appropriations for custom-houses. A second bill was reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, omitting them. The Committee of Ways and Means deemed it expedient to report a separate bill, providing for the prosecution of the work on those custom-houses, and also providing some additional guards and checks upon the expenditure of that money. The Senate has added to this deficiency bill all those custom-houses which were defeated here, and has also made appropriations to the amount of $450,000 in addition—$250,000 of it for the completion of the custom-house at San Francisco, and $200,000 for the construction of a new custom-house at Portland, Maine, the late custom-house in that city having been burnt down.

Again, there is another class of appropriations for the completion of marine hospitals. The Senate has added an appropriation for such marine hospitals as were adopted in the Committee of the Whole here, but rejected in the House. In addition to those, it has appropriated $15,000 towards constructing a new hospital at the town of Burlington, in the State of Iowa. While we were discussing the proposed expenditures for custom-houses and marine hospitals, it was urged in the House by the advocates of these appropriations, that it was necessary that fire-proof buildings should be erected.

In explanation of the action of the Committee of Ways and Means upon this subject, it is proper to say they desire to see erected substantial fire-proof buildings, but do not feel justified in recommending large expenditures for the purpose of constructing ornamental public buildings. Whilst the Committee of Ways and Means desire to secure a wise public economy, they do not desire the Government to be either parsimonious or niggardly in its expenditure of money upon important public buildings. It must also be recollected that these appropriations are not deficiencies. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that but a small portion of the money already appropriated for the erection of these custom-houses has been expended. Perhaps not one fourth of the money appropriated has been expended up to this time; certainly it was not expended in the month of January last, the date of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. There has been, and now is, sufficiency of money on hand in the Treasury, as appears by that report, which may be applied to the erection and completion of these buildings, and more money than can be wisely expended during the residue of this fiscal year. For these reasons, the Committee of Ways and Means felt themselves bound, at that time, to oppose those appropriations, and for the same reasons they now recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment.

I did not expect, in the few remarks which I felt called upon to make in explanation of the action of the committee, to comment upon every amendment proposed by the Senate. There will be time for this when the five-minute debate shall commence; and I hope that the House, when the committee have risen, will agree to close debate at an early hour, for a great deal of the money appropriated in this bill, in the form in which the appropriations were passed in the House of Representatives, is needed, and needed at this moment, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the Government. I shall therefore feel myself bound to ask the House to close the general debate upon this bill at an early period. Some other bill can be taken up upon which general discussion can be resumed. I hope, therefore, when we shall go into the House again, a resolution will be passed closing the general debate upon this bill to-morrow; for in such debate, I am satisfied, very little will be said in relation to the expenditure of money proposed to be made by this bill.

Mr. PHILLIPS then addressed the committee on the subject of the bill for the organization of territorial governments for Nebraska and Kansas. He said that the bill was assailed by many who admitted the correctness of the principle upon which it was founded, and yet objected to it as a repeal of the Missouri act of 1820. If that act had no further claim upon their consideration than its own intrinsic merits, it surely would be illogical to say that the wrong of their predecessors should be a bar to righteous action on their own part.

But it was said that the act of 1820 was something more than a legislative act; that it was the result of a compact, an agreement between the two great sections of the confederacy at that time intended to be perpetually obligatory. It was, then, of the greatest importance to examine into the truth of this allegation; for if it were true, then, whatever might be the merits of the measure before them, it could not receive the assent or concurrence of any honorable man.

Now, for the purpose of making this examination, he had, with great care, looked into the Journals of the two Houses of Congress for the sessions of 1820-'21, for the truth of the proposition was not to be tried by hearsay evidence, but by the records—the faithful chroniclers of the past, and the unerring guides for the future.

He would say in advance, and say it boldly, that so far from the Journals showing that any such compact or agreement as was now alleged was then entertained between the representatives of the non-slaveholding States and those from the slaveholding States, there was not a page relative to this subject-matter which did not dispute the assertion.

Mr. P. then quoted from the Journals of 1820-'21 to show that the idea of the Missouri act of 1820 being a compact or agreement, was not entertained at that time, and in behalf of the North he rejected this argument as a reproach and a calumny upon that great section of the Confederacy.

Mr. BENTON and Mr. HARRIS took the floor.

The CHAIRMAN decided that the gentleman from Missouri had obtained the floor.

Mr. BENTON stated that he would, for the present, yield the floor to the gentleman from Mississippi, on condition that he (Mr. BENTON) would be entitled to it to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection on the part of the committee, that will be the order of proceedings.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was here received from the President of the United States by the hands of SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he did, on the 20th instant, approve and sign House bill No. 32, entitled "An act to authorize the school commissioners of fractional township number one, of range ten east, in Alabama, to locate one half section of land for school purposes."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. No. 235. An act for the relief of Grafton Baker.

Joint resolution of the House authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the expenses of a Board of Commissioners appointed by the Territorial Assembly of Oregon to prepare a code of laws; also, to adjust the expense of collecting and printing certain laws and archives of the Territory of Oregon; severally without amendment.

Also, that the Senate insist upon its first amendment disagreed to by the House, and disagree to the amendment of the House to the third amendment of the Senate (House bill No. 47) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1855; and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, of Mississippi, then addressed the committee for some time in regard to the Nebraska bill. He had not concluded, when

Mr. KEITT said: Mr. Chairman, my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRIS] is unwell, and unable to proceed; and therefore, with his permission, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to that motion?

Mr. HARRIS expressed his assent.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and especially House bill No. 271, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to offer a resolution to close the debate on this bill in two hours after the committee shall have resumed its consideration; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. HESTER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken on the latter motion; and it was agreed to.

The House thereupon, at a quarter past three o'clock, p. m., adjourned to to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 25, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SELECT COMMITTEE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Messrs. EVERETT, TOUCY, MALLORY, DAWSON, and NORRIS, as the Select Committee to consider the memorial of the American Association for the Promotion of Science, praying that an appropriation be made to enable Professor Mitchell to construct a machine for observing right-ascensions and declinations by the aid of magnetism.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Messrs. HUNTER, SHIELDS, and BELL, as managers, on the part of the Senate, of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1855.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. WADE presented resolutions passed at a meeting of citizens of North Benton, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the Nebraska bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the memorial of Robert B. Forbes, praying the establishment of floating schools in the principal seaports of the United States, and on the lakes, for the partial education of seamen; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, and a petition of citizens of New Jersey, remonstrating against any infringement of the Missouri compromise; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Also, a petition of citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, remonstrating against an extension or renewal of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a memorial of the Franklin Institute of the State of Pennsylvania for the Promotion of the Mechanic Arts, praying that the Executive of the United States be authorized to negotiate with the Government of Great Britain for the establishment of a coinage for the two countries identical in everything but name; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a memorial of the heirs-at-law of Samuel R. Fisher, the surviving partner of the firm of Joshua Fisher & Sons, praying payment for goods taken by the Committee of Safety, of Philadelphia, in 1774, for the use of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COOPER presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, praying that steel in sheets, as well as steel in bars, may be admitted free of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, five petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Also, the memorial of the Uwchlan monthly meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, of Chester county, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of the Nebraska bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, the memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, signed by Henry Vethake, Provost of the University of Pennsylvania, William H. Allen, President of Girard College, L. A. Godey, Joel Jones, A. V. Parsons, Edward King, Elliott Cresson, and others, praying Congress to set apart three or four millions of acres of the public national domain for the education of female teachers; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of Washington J. Jackson, William J. McElroy, and other citizens of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the ratification of an international copyright treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

BENJAMIN ROWE.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to take up House bill for the relief of Benjamin Rowe, for the purpose of having it recommitted, with additional evidence, to the Committee on Pensions.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present now additional documents in relation to that case. I move that they be referred to the same committee.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WELLER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of John de Wolf, praying to be indemnified for losses sustained in consequence of having been suspended in the performance of his duties as United States consul at Sidney, Nova Scotia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of M. Jean Deplaigne, a French subject, resident in Mexico, praying indemnity for the loss of certain property seized by the naval force of the United States after the surrender of Frontera de Tabasco, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of William G. Morehead, late United States consul at Valparaiso, praying compensation for the time he acted as chargé d'affaires, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. EVANS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Margaret Barnitz, sole heir of Lieutenant Colonel David Greer, praying for commutation, and for the payment of moneys due her deceased father by the United States, on account of advances made by him during the revolutionary war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of C. C. Beatty, son and executor of Reading Beatty, praying an increase of the pension allowed his father for services as surgeon in the war of the Revolution, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Caty White, widow of William White, a lieutenant in Colonel G. Gibson's regiment in the war of the Revolution, praying for arrears of pension due her, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Hiram Upson and others, of Warwick, New York, praying that pensions may be granted to the children of officers and soldiers who were killed or died in service during the revolutionary war, and whose mothers would have been entitled to pensions if they had survived, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Edward Bartlett and others, praying to be placed on the same footing as pensioners of the Revolution, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, on the ground that the committee had already made a report upon a similar petition.

It was so ordered.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Nathan Daggett, deceased, praying compensation for his services during the revolutionary war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Jane Becannon, widow of Philip Becannon, praying a pension on account of his services during the revolutionary war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COOPER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William L. Meredith, the son and only heir of Major William Meredith, late of Edmonson county, Kentucky, praying compensation for services and losses in the revolutionary war, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to. He also submitted a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a joint resolution relative to the administration of pension laws; which was read and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the petitions of Sarah Larabee and Nancy Bowen, praying to be allowed pensions, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COOPER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was recommended the bill for the relief of Robert C. Thompson, only surviving child and legal representative of William Thompson, deceased, formerly a brigadier general in the Army of the Revolutionary war, reported it back without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the representative of Henry King, praying payment for arrears due him for services in the war of the Revolution, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

PETITION WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. TOUCEY, it was Ordered, That the petition of George Dennet be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MAISON ROUGE GRANT.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers and settlers on the Maison Rouge Grant, in the event of the final adjudication of the title in favor of the United States," approved January 27, 1851. There have been contested claims in reference to this land, and it is very necessary that the bill should be passed speedily. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to put it on its passage now.

The bill was read a first and second time, by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to amend the act of January 27, 1851, so that the preemption privilege granted by the second and third sections of that act shall extend to the smallest legal subdivisions on which any portion of the improvements or possession of the settlers contemplated by those sections, extends; with a proviso, that, when the improvement or possession of two or more settlers extends over the same forty-acre subdivision or subdivisions, it or they shall be patented to all the settlers whose improvements extend thereon, and who avail themselves of the benefit of this act and of the act of which it is amendatory—the right of each to be in proportion to the extent of his improvements thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have received a letter from the Commissioner of Public Lands, on this subject, which explains the bill. I ask that it be read.

The communication was read, as follows:

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 17, 1854.

SIR: In accordance with your request I have prepared, and I have the honor to inclose, a draft of a bill to amend the act of 27th January, 1851, "to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers and settlers on the Maison Rouge Grant," &c. The bill does not propose to interfere with the rights of those who purchased from Daniel Cox, and whose rights are protected by the first section of the act of 1851, but simply to extend the provisions of the other sections, so that the actual settlers may get all the lands improved by them. As settlers, they have higher rights than any one else; and the Government will get the minimum price for the land. Every principle of justice and expediency would seem to require the enactment of such a provision.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN WILSON, Commissioner.
Hon. ROBERT W. JOHNSON, Senate Chamber.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill "to grant other lands in lieu of certain sixteenth sections in the State of Mississippi, heretofore disposed of by the United States for other than school purposes," have instructed me to report it back with amendments, and to recommend the passage of the bill as thus amended. I ask the Senate to allow it to be put on its passage at this time.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the Senate will agree to consider the bill now.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill.

It proposes to enact that, in all cases where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, that the sixteenth section of land in any township of the State of Mississippi has been given to an Indian as a reservation, or has been otherwise disposed of by the United States, so that it cannot now be used for school purposes, the Secretary shall permit such person as may be appointed by the Governor of Mississippi for that purpose, to locate another section in legal subdivisions on any of the vacant lands of the United States in any land district where that sixteenth section lies.

The amendments of the committee were to strike out the words "the State of Mississippi," where they first occurred, and insert "any State in which there are public lands;" and to strike out "Governor of Mississippi," and insert "Governor of such State."

Mr. BROWN. These amendments are simply meant to make the bill general, instead of confining its provisions to a single State. I have no objection to them myself.

The amendments were agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed. Its title was amended so as to read: "A bill to grant other lands in lieu of certain sixteenth sections heretofore disposed of by the United States for other than school purposes."

PENSACOLA MARINE HOSPITAL.

Mr. MORTON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the erection of a marine hospital at Pensacola, in Florida.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the bill making a grant of land to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore then signed the bill.

JUDICIAL EXPENSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, and recommending to the favorable consideration of the Senate, a report of the Attorney General, suggesting modifications in the manner of conducting the legal business of the Government.

Mr. MASON. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would suggest to the Senator from Virginia that this communication is in response to a request from the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform. I think, therefore, that its proper reference should be to that committee.

Mr. MASON. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I move to refer the communication to the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform, and that it be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened; and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 25, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question first in order is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS], providing for closing the debate on the deficiency bill in two hours after the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall have resumed its consideration; and on that motion the previous question has been demanded.

[Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bill; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act making grants of public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of insane persons.]

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been demanded upon the resolution offered yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] to close debate upon the deficiency bill in two hours after it shall be again resumed by the committee.

Mr. EWING. Before that vote is taken, I should be happy to have the consent of the House to introduce a resolution of inquiry, as I shall not be here on Monday, when such matters are more properly in order.

The resolution was then read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform this House what steps, if any, have been taken by this Government to secure, the permanent acknowledgment, by treaty of the rights of neutrals by the Governments of Great Britain and France, and what degree of success has attended those efforts, if any have been made.

Resolved, further, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform this House whether, in any particular, the Government of Great Britain has assumed to act for Spain in the negotiations consequent upon the seizure of the Black Warrior—what degree of responsibility that Government has assumed in the matter, and if so assuming to act for Spain, upon what pretext, if any is alleged.

Mr. EWING. I have but a word to say in regard to the object I have in view in presenting the resolution. As the question is upon its adoption, an explanation of the object may influence some members in the vote they may give upon it.

I drew up the resolution and have submitted it to the judgment of some of the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as well as to other gentlemen outside of that committee, all of whom regard it as a matter of practical importance. I am as much averse to wasting the time of the House in the passage of mere declarations of sentiments as any member can be. I have always been opposed to that course. But I am fully convinced the time has come for practical action upon this subject.

It has been said that our able representative at the court of Great Britain is endeavoring to perfect a treaty to effect the purpose referred to in the resolution. I know not that it is so; but it has been intimated that there is danger that, amid the jealousies of the leaders of that great party whose peculiar mission it is to furnish Presidents to this country and to divide the spoils, that this negotiation may come to naught. At all events, I believe that secret diplomacy is of no advantage to this Government. We gain nothing by it. Our only strength arises from the knowledge that the uncontrollable Democracy of this country plant themselves upon their rights, and are determined to assert them, and will not yield a particle of them, and that is our greatest, perhaps our only advantage in negotiations with foreign Governments. Secrecy gives us no strength, because we cannot secure that profound secrecy which surrounds the diplomacy of foreign Governments.

I think, therefore, that this Department of the Government, and the people of the country, ought to participate in the councils, and in the knowledge of all such matters as this. In reference to the last of the two resolutions, I will also say a word. I perceive in the reports of the debates of the British Parliament, that a member asked Lord John Russell what course the British Government had taken in relation to the Black Warrior affair. He informed the House that instructions had been transmitted to Mr. Crampton, the British Minister to this country, but that no answer had been received. I read that with amazement. It is important that we should know what action, if any, that Government has taken in relation to that affair in connection with Spain.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order. It is, that this resolution gives rise to debate, and must go over, under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the resolution will not go over, for the reason that the House allowed its introduction by unanimous consent. It is properly before the House to the exclusion of all other business. It would go over under other circumstances, but not now.

Mr. EWING. I only wish to add, sir, that it would seem the purpose of the British Government, or of the present Ministry of that Government, to interfere—as they have expressed their determination, in conjunction with France, to do—in the regulation of affairs upon this continent, and all over the universe. These are my reasons for calling the attention of the House to this subject at this time. I hope the House will, at least, see that I have a practical object in view; and now, in accordance with the request of gentlemen around me, I move the previous question.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I wish to inquire whether it is in order at this time to move to refer this resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs? The gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. EWING. I rise to a question of order. I demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair heard no call from the gentleman.

Mr. EWING. I certainly closed my remarks with a demand for the previous question, as gentlemen all round me can testify.

The SPEAKER. The Chair repeats that he did not hear the gentleman. It is in order to move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, sir, I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky what members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs have been consulted in reference to this resolution?

Mr. EWING. I do not feel called upon to answer the question.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I then move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and upon that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. KEITT. I ask that the resolution may again be read.

The SPEAKER. It will again be read, unless objected to.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. WALKER. I move that the resolution be read.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk then read the resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If the motion to refer this resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs be voted down, the question will then recur upon its passage; will it not?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. STEPHENS. I hope then the motion to refer will be voted down.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the resolution will be referred.

The question was taken; and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was taken, and the latter motion agreed to.

ESTIMATES FROM INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

Mr. ORR. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to have printed, for the use of members, certain estimates which I have received from the Department of the Interior in reference to Indian matters.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. LATHAM. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report a bill from the Committee on the Public Lands, in order that it may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed, inasmuch as it is connected with territorial business, which is set down for hearing for Monday next.

There was no objection.

Mr. L. then, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

A bill to extend the rights of preemption over unsurveyed land in Minnesota, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY BILL—CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. PHELPS. Yesterday evening I introduced a resolution proposing to close debate on the deficiency bill, and called for the previous question. I now withdraw the call for the previous question, in order to modify the resolution so as to propose that the general debate on the bill referred to, be closed to-morrow, at one o'clock.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "Yes!"]

Mr. PHELPS. The necessity for the passage of the deficiency bill, so that the money may be at the disposal of the Government, is very great. If we pursue the course I have suggested, we shall soon reach another bill on which the general debate may proceed.

The question was put on seconding the call for the previous question, and there were, on a division—yeas 51—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for tellers.

Mr. PECKHAM. I move to amend the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri, so that it shall propose to close general debate a week from to-day.

Mr. JONES. Next week is devoted, by special order of the House, to the consideration of territorial business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's amendment is not in order, the previous question having been called on the resolution.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PERKINS, of New York, and CHURCHWELL, were appointed.

The question was put on seconding the call for the previous question, and the tellers reported—aye 58—

The SPEAKER. Not a sufficient number.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ascertain whether a quorum be present, because the question is substantially raised by the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to count the number of members present, and announced that there were one hundred and sixty-two in their places, being more than a quorum.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. DEAN. I move to amend the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri by inserting "Thursday next, at one o'clock," in lieu of "to-morrow, at one o'clock;" and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. PECKHAM. Am I in time to move to amend the resolution by inserting "Tuesday next, at one o'clock?"

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would have been in time, but for the fact that his colleague, occupying the floor, has demanded the previous question.

Mr. PECKHAM. I ask my colleague to withdraw the demand for the previous question that I may offer an amendment.

Mr. DEAN. I will withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. PECKHAM. I then move to amend the resolution so as to close the debate on Tuesday next, at two o'clock.

Mr. MACE. I have a prior motion to make.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. MACE. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is a highly privileged motion, but so is the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri, and it has been usual under the practice of the House to give precedence to a motion to close debate on a particular question over a motion to go into committee to consider that question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire of the Chair if the order for territorial business does not commence on Monday next, and continue during the whole week?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. JONES. Then it is no use to allow the debate on this bill to continue till Tuesday.

Mr. PECKHAM. I do not think it will do us any harm.

Mr. JONES. It will stave the bill off for two weeks longer. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PECKHAM.]

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put; and, on a division, there were—aye 73, noes 53.

Mr. PHELPS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL, and TAYLOR of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—aye 80, noes 61.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurring upon the amendment as amended, it was taken, and carried in the affirmative.

The question then recurring upon the resolution, as amended,

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to lay the resolution upon the table.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Jones's motion; and it was decided in the negative.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the resolution, as amended; and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. DEAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MACE. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is on the Senate amendments to the deficiency bill. On that question the member from Mississippi [Mr. HARRIS] has still the floor.

Mr. HARRIS not availing himself of his right, Mr. BENTON addressed the House in opposition to the Nebraska and Kansas bills, and in favor of maintaining the Missouri compromise. [See Appendix for his speech.]

After the expiration of the hour allotted to Mr. BENTON under the rule, and before he had concluded, the following proceedings took place:

Several gentlemen rose to get the floor at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] has the floor.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] wishes to speak a few minutes longer, and I am willing, with the consent of the committee, to yield him a portion of my time for that purpose.

Mr. SEWARD and others objected.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. If the gentleman from Mississippi, who is entitled to the floor, [Mr. HARRIS,] does not desire to avail himself of his right, I wish to address the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] as having the floor.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Certainly, sir, I claim the floor; but I am willing, indeed, I am desirous, that the gentleman from Missouri should have enough of my time to finish his speech.

Mr. BAYLY. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Missouri being permitted to go on and conclude his speech; but if the gentleman from Illinois does not want the floor, I will want it.

Mr. HUNT. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I have the control of the floor, and I can see no objection to the gentleman's concluding, if he does so out of my time.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that the courtesy of the committee will be extended to the gentleman from Missouri, and that he will be permitted to occupy such further time as will enable him to conclude his speech. This privilege has been frequently granted heretofore.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It has been again and again decided out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The rules of the House must be observed. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor, and expresses his desire to yield it to the gentleman from Missouri for explanation. But this cannot be done unless by the general consent of the committee.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask the Chair if I have the floor; and, if I am entitled to it for one hour, who is injured by my giving fifteen minutes, more or less, of my hour to the gentleman from Missouri?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to the floor; and the committee will preserve order, so that the gentleman can proceed.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of submitting a motion to alter the rules.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. PERKINS. I withdraw the motion.

Many MEMBERS. Mr. Chairman! Mr. Chairman!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor, and gentlemen will take their seats, and forbear conversation.

In the midst of much noise and confusion

Mr. WENTWORTH proceeded: I wish, at the outset of my remarks, to know, if at any time during this Congress, or any other, when any member of this House has obtained the floor, and another gentleman has requested a short portion of his time to finish his speech, that request has ever been denied by the House?

Many MEMBERS. Never, never.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that I have an hour, and I can talk it out if necessary; but, nevertheless, if the gentleman from Missouri has not finished his speech, as this is an important question—as the eyes of the whole country are turned to this debate, and to the course which is to be taken in the determination of this question—I want the whole country to understand that the oldest man living in Congress, the man who was here at the time when the Missouri compromise was adopted, and the only man in the whole Congress, is now refused a courtesy which has been refused to no other living man. Let it go out to the country as a sample of the courtesy of those who are trying to control this House.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman's statement is not true in point of fact.

Mr. ORR. He is mistaken.

Mr. KEITT. As the gentleman wants the facts to go to the country, it would be well enough for him to state them as they are.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!" all over the House.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is upon the floor, and gentlemen will preserve order.

After order was restored,

Mr. WENTWORTH continued: I have not been here always; but this is my ninth session; and I am in my seat as much as any other man in Congress; and I never knew an instance when this appeal to the courtesy of the House was denied. Never, sir! In the bitterest of party times, John Quincy Adams often made the appeal, and it was never denied him. I make the assertion, and let those who dispute me contradict me by the record. Where are the instances on the Journals to prove that I am wrong? Sir, I now ask that the oldest man in the House, one who knows more than all the rest of us put together, may be heard a few moments out of my hour.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a word?

Mr. WENTWORTH. I yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that the gentleman from Missouri would desire but a few minutes of time longer; and I do hope, in view of the importance of the question, and in view of the great age and experience in legislation of the gentleman, he will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman cannot make a speech inside of the speech of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. I am proceeding by the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH,] and not by the courtesy of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] for I never appeal to his courtesy.

[Cries of "Good!" "Good!"]

Mr. CULLOM. I say here, in the face of this committee, that I have seen this courtesy extended over and over again, during my short probation in Congress, and I ask if there is anything peculiar in the case of the gentleman from Missouri why a discrimination should be made against him?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I insist upon my point of order, that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I appeal to the committee to extend to the gentleman a few minutes, and I hope they will do it.

Mr. WENTWORTH. It is evidently within the power of any one member of the committee to object to the gentleman from Missouri proceeding. I am too well acquainted with the rules of this House to trespass upon its courtesy, if it is the determination, even of one individual, to object. But, if I understand the rules, a majority may allow the gentleman to proceed, if it is taken out of my time.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Not at all.

Mr. PECKHAM. What is the decision of the Chair upon the question?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a word?

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to state the question.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I call the gentleman to order. He is not addressing the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a point of order.

Mr. WASHBURN. In the last Congress, a case precisely similar to this occurred. A gentleman from Kentucky was occupying the floor for a certain time; his time expired, and I obtained the floor. I yielded to him for further remarks, and upon the motion of some gentleman, the committee gave him an extension of time.

Mr. ORR. That was by unanimous consent, not by a vote of the committee.

Mr. WASHBURN. It was by a vote of the committee. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. ORR. I ask the gentleman to produce the record. I do not think such a case has ever occurred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor, and cannot yield it but for the purpose of explanation, except by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. PECKHAM. From that decision I respectfully appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. PECKHAM. I understand there is no objection to the gentleman from Missouri proceeding with his remarks. If there is not, I withdraw my appeal.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I hope the objection will be withdrawn, if any is made. I understand the gentleman from Missouri would have finished his remarks before this time, if he had been allowed to go on.

Several gentlemen here rose at the same time and addressed the Chair.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. I want to know who is entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor?

Mr. SMITH. Then I hope the gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The gentleman from Illinois objects to proceeding in discourtesy to the venerable gentleman from Missouri, who asks a few moments more in which to conclude his speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that an appeal has been taken from the decision of the Chair, that the gentleman from Missouri cannot proceed in the time of the gentleman from Illinois, without the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Well, if an appeal has been taken, I ask that it may be decided without further delay.

Mr. OLIVER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to make a single suggestion?

Mr. WENTWORTH. I will hear the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Before any further debate is had, the Chair desires to know whether the gentleman from New York appeals from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BISSELL. If no other gentleman appeals, I do.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, being decidedly in favor of the bill under discussion, and feeling that the friends of the measure have nothing to fear from the most thorough investigation, not even from anything that my venerable colleague may say in opposition, on account of my respect for his age and position, I am prompted to beg the committee to extend to him the courtesy of permitting him to finish his remarks.

Mr. BISSELL. That he may proceed in the time of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WENTWORTH. Certainly, within my time.

Mr. SMITH. Now, I should be very glad of an opportunity of saying a word, if I can get the attention of the committee. I am perfectly willing myself—perfectly willing—that the gentleman from Missouri should be allowed to finish his remarks; but the committee will understand that while it is desirable to himself, to the committee, and to the country that he should proceed in order—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order. All this discussion is out of order.

Mr. SMITH. I hope the gentleman will allow me to go on and finish the single remark I was making.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Well, sir, there are other members who desire to make remarks too. Debate is out of order, and I think it had better be stopped.

Mr. SMITH. Have I the floor or not?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SMITH. Well, sir, I rise to a privileged question.

Several MEMBERS called to order.

Mr. SMITH. I appeal to the committee to listen to me for a single moment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Again I rise to a question of order. I must object to any discussion. My friend from Virginia will understand that I do not make any personal objection to him. But as this debate is all out of order, I must insist upon the rules being observed.

Mr. SMITH. Just one single word—

Mr. WENTWORTH. I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Virginia; but first, I desire to know if there is any objection to the gentleman from Missouri proceeding to occupy a part of my time in concluding his remarks? If it is objected that I cannot yield to the gentleman from Missouri a portion of my time, how can those making the objection appeal to my courtesy, and ask for a portion of my time to themselves? The gentleman from Missouri has the first claim. If he cannot have my time, no one can. Is there an objection? If there is, I shall have to make another point, whereby I am confident that I can get him a chance to speak by right. I think it would look better if we allowed so old and so wise a man to speak by courtesy than by right. I am neither joking nor boasting when I say that "Old Bullion" will yet be heard again to-day.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Certainly there is. I have objected, and other members have objected.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Then I make the point of order that I have the right to yield the floor to the gentleman, and that he has the right to occupy a portion of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that, according to his understanding of the rules of the House, the gentleman from Missouri may proceed with the unanimous consent of the committee, and not otherwise.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

Mr. PECKHAM. From that decision I respectfully take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The question then will be, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. ORR. Upon that question I demand tellers.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the Chair be pleased to state the question again?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH], who is in possession of the floor, desires to yield a portion of his time to the gentleman from Missouri, that he may complete his speech. The Chair decides that that may be done, but that it cannot be done unless by the unanimous consent of the committee. From that decision an appeal has been taken; and the question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. ORR. Before the question is again taken, I ask for the reading of the rule which prohibits a member speaking more than one hour.

[Cries of "I object!" "Let us hear the rule!"]

Mr. ORR. I am entitled to have the rule read.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule will be read.

The Clerk then read the rule, as follows:

"34. No member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House, or in committee; but a member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close the debate: Provided, That where debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed, in committee, five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which any member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate on the amendment; but the same privilege on debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to the amendment; and neither the amendment nor an amendment to the amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof, unless by the unanimous consent of the committee."

The CHAIRMAN. It is on the rule which has just been read that the decision of the Chair is founded.

Mr. SEWARD. I submit whether a rule of the House can be changed in committee. It cannot; and gentlemen have no right to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have a right to put their own construction on the rules.

Mr. HUNT. I understand that the appeal from the decision of the Chair has been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been withdrawn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If I understand the Chair, he decides that gentlemen have a right to appeal in this case, and that a majority of this committee can change the rules of the House. If that be the decision, I, for one, will not vote on the appeal.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DAVIS, of Indiana, and SAPP, were appointed.

The committee then proceeded to divide on the question, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. SEWARD. I have made a point of order, and I do not withdraw it. If the Chair decide against me, I appeal from his decision.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a question of order already pending, and the committee is now dividing on it. Two questions of order cannot be entertained at the same time.

Mr. SEWARD, (amid much confusion.) I make my point of order, and insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order cannot be entertained at this time.

The question was put on the question, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and the tellers reported—ayes 96; no quorum voting.

[Cries of "Call the roll!"]

Mr. PECKHAM. I withdraw the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the committee allow the gentleman to withdraw the appeal?

[Cries of "No! no!" and "Object!"]

Mr. COBB. We want a record made up of the facts.

Mr. ORR. The roll must be called.

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not now in order. The roll must be called.

The Clerk then proceeded to call the roll, and the names of the absentees were noted. The committee then rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the amendment of the Senate to the deficiency bill, and finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called and the names of the absentees to be noted, and had directed him to report the facts to the House, with the names of the absentees.

The following are the names of the absentees:

Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Bell, Bliss, Bocoek, Campbell, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chase, Chastain, Cumming, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dowdell, English, Everhart, Faulkner, Fenton, Fuller, Gambie, Giddings, Goode, Andrew J. Harlan, Hastings, Hendricks, Hill, Hillyer, Johnson, Lane, McCulloch, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Matteson, Morrison, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Packer, Peck, Preston, Pringle, Reese, Russell, Sabin, Snodgrass, Sillers, Frederick P. Stanton, Stratton, Tracy, Tweed, Vansant, Wade, Westbrook, and Yates.

A quorum (172 members) being now present, the committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman who took the appeal from the decision of the Chair withdraws it. If there be no objection, the appeal will be considered as withdrawn.

No objection was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WENTWORTH. What is the proposition now pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill are now before the committee.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Is there any proposition pending to amend the amendments of the Senate?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no such proposition pending.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Well, I desire to offer an amendment on the fifteenth page of the bill. If I cannot succeed one way, I must try another.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments of the Senate will be read in their order. The Chair will have the first amendment reported.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Has the reading of the bill commenced?

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the amendments has not commenced.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Has the bill been read through?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments of the Senate only are before us.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I understand that when a bill is taken up in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it must first be read through, and then read by paragraphs. I make the point of order that the bill has not all been read over.

Mr. WENTWORTH. That is only the case with original bills.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Yes; and the amendments of the Senate to this bill must all be read through, and until they have all been read, no amendment will be in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I care not what is read, provided that it does not come out of my hour.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been customary to read the first amendment first.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I insist on the rule in this case, as we have got into some difficulty already. I make the point that, before we can be called upon to amend any amendment, or before the question can be changed in any way, all the amendments must be read over.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Were not the amendments read yesterday?

The CHAIRMAN. They were not read. If the gentleman calls for the reading of the amendments, they will be read.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I hope the reading will not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly not.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I make the point of order, that the amendments of the Senate must be regularly read before any amendment can be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to read the amendments to the House.

Mr. HUGHES. I make the point of order, that one of the members of this House, who reported this bill, has already spoken upon it. I ask the Chair to state whether it is not so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS], a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, has already spoken upon the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. Then is it not too late to raise a question of order, and have not the committee passed over the amendments?

Mr. WENTWORTH. No matter; let them have their own way, and see how much they will make.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My point of order is, that that gentleman cannot move amendments until the whole bill is read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] propose an amendment?

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask what the proposition is before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the consideration of the bill generally.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Are not the Senate amendments before the committee?

Mr. CLINGMAN. The Senate amendments are before the committee, but before any amendment can be offered to them, they must be read.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Well, read away; I can await if the gentleman from Missouri can.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire, if the amendments are to be read, that they shall be read in connection with the bill itself, so that we may understand their direct application.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The customary practice is, first, to read the bill and amendments through; and then, upon the reading of the first amendment, the bill is open for amendment and debate. But, as the committee have commenced and progressed with the bill, passing over the first reading of the amendments, I think it is too late now to make the question of order of having the amendments all read over.

The CHAIRMAN. I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Tennessee is right in the opinion he has expressed.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Does the Chair decide that the amendments are not to be read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the House has waived the necessity of reading the amendments.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move to amend the first amendment by inserting the word "three" in the place of the word "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment will be reported by the Clerk.

The amendment was then read as follows:

On page 2, line 22, to strike out the word "two," and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

Mr. WENTWORTH. That is the amendment pending before the committee. I understand that no gentleman has spoken since that amendment has been made.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. If the gentleman from Illinois does not propose to go on with his remarks in the Committee of the Whole, I claim the floor against any one who has spoken upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. WENTWORTH. And intends to hold it.

Mr. BAYLY. The chairman, I presume, understood me. I only remind the Chair of my right to the floor against any gentleman who has spoken upon this bill.

Mr. PECKHAM. What is the decision of the Chair upon that question?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no point made as yet upon that question.

Mr. BENTON. Has there been an amendment offered?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment has been offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH.]

Mr. BENTON. And entertained?

The CHAIRMAN. Not entertained as yet. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] proposes an amendment.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask the chairman if he decides that it cannot be entertained?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it can be.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I will ask the Chair if he decides that an amendment can be entertained until general debate has closed?

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that it is an amendment in the second degree, and therefore it is liable to be spoken to.

Mr. TAYLOR. But, Mr. Chairman, that will so alter the practice—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me, I will state that, so far from that altering the state of the case, no debate is in order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon any proposition, except there is a pending motion touching that proposition.

Mr. WENTWORTH. That is my doctrine. I have made a proposition. I have an hour upon it.

Mr. TAYLOR. But we are going on now by general consent.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. There is no general consent to the course about being pursued.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me, I would suggest that he had better go on and make his hour's speech, and then move his amendment.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio, and to the committee, that I moved the amendment for a particular purpose; and those gentlemen who know me, and know the course which I have pursued in Congress, know that when I undertake to effect a matter of this kind, within the rules of the House, I will persevere in my efforts until I exhaust my powers under the rule. Until I have exercised the full powers which I may possess under the rule, I will not stop. This is a matter which is frequently seen carried out here. After the members have spoken round, some one moves an amendment, and then, under that motion, the discussion goes round again, and each member is entitled to another hour to express his views. An amendment is now pending, and the whole House understands what my object was in moving it. I now ask that the gentleman from Missouri, who claims the floor, be heard upon this amendment.

General assent was expressed.

Mr. BENTON. What is the decision made by the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides, that in an amendment of the second degree, as that offered by the gentleman from Illinois, debate is in order, and therefore the gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will state his point of order.

Mr. BENTON. "Amphibology," sir, "Amphibology;" that was the point where I left off.

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has risen to a point of order.

[Several MEMBERS here cried "Give it up!" "Give it up!" "Oh, withdraw your amendment!" "Withdraw it, WENTWORTH!"]

Mr. WENTWORTH said he thanked members for their suggestions to withdraw. He doubted not their kind feelings. But they were new members, and, with all due respect, he was confident that they would not make such suggestions if they knew the points he still had. And, as those opposed to the venerable gentleman's speaking were principally old members, and had served with him many years in Congress, he would respectfully suggest that he had made up his mind to hear the gentleman from Missouri speak. He had reflected well upon his rights in this matter, and had made up his mind fully upon the subject. And those who knew him knew well that every one of those rights would be exhausted before he should leave the floor.

When he spoke of his rights, he meant his rights under the rules. It was not his purpose to discuss the propriety of the rules now. He should obey them all. Those rules were now in his favor, and gentlemen might as well keep cool; as, sooner or later, the gentleman from Missouri would follow him with his speech, even though he [Mr. W.] kept the committee in session to the end of time. For he was confident that the Chairman would not take these interruptions out of the full hour which he was entitled to, and which he intended to exhaust, unless the committee would allow an older and abler man to be heard in his place. He hoped the gentleman from Missouri would now be allowed to proceed.

Mr. SMITH. The question of order which I rise to, Mr. Chairman, is this: I want to know distinctly whether that be the decision of the Chair, that during the consideration of a matter—

Some MEMBERS interrupted.

Mr. SMITH. Gentlemen will please allow me to express myself. I did not exactly hear what the gentleman from Missouri said; but if I gather his meaning aright, I can only say in reply that threats have no terror for me.

Mr. BENTON. Is that a point of order, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is going to state his point of order.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. SMITH. The point of order to which I wish to call the attention of the Chairman and of the committee is this: I want to know if, during the consideration of a bill, and after a gentleman has discussed the general question on the Union, he can go on again, and discuss it upon each amendment that may be offered. Is that the decision of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides, that after the general discussion has closed, members have a right to speak on such amendments as may be subsequently offered.

Mr. SMITH. Very well; I only wanted to know that fact. I can know how to avail myself of the effects of that decision.

Mr. BENTON. That was all I wanted.

Mr. WENTWORTH. And that's all I wanted.

Mr. BENTON resumed, and concluded his speech, the full report of which is given above.

Mr. HESTER obtained the floor.

Mr. MEACHAM. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HESTER,] I move that the committee rise.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House, (No. 271,) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, and had come to no resolution thereon.

[A message from the President of the United States was here received, by the hands of SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, transmitting a report of the Attorney General suggesting modifications in the manner of conducting the legal business of the Government.]

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. FLORENCE. I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to present a resolution.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object, and insist upon the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands "granting lands equally to the several States to aid in the construction of railroads and the support of schools." The first question in order is upon recommitting the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If the gentleman from New York will give way, I move that the House adjourn; or rather, before that is done, take up the message of the President. I suppose that the gentleman from New York was not expecting his bill to come up to-day, and is not prepared to go on.

Mr. BENNETT. I willingly yield to the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia proposes that the message from the President be now presented to the House. As it is not objected to, the Chair presents the following message from the President of the United States:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The Clerk read the President's message, transmitting a report of the Attorney General, suggesting modifications of the manner of conducting the legal business of the Government; which message and report were referred to the Judiciary Committee, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEPHENS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope that the member from Georgia will withdraw his motion. We have yet an hour before the ordinary time of adjournment, and there are several committees which have reports to make. I think, therefore, that we ought to remain and receive their reports.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw his motion, I will renew it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I insist upon my motion. I think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] is mistaken about the reports of committees.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon, at a quarter before three o'clock, p. m., adjourned to to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 26, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of any bill which will permit the introduction of slavery into Nebraska or Kansas; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, a petition of citizens of New York, remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of the Pennsylvania Yearly Meeting of Progressive Friends, praying Congress to adopt such measures as will tend to induce foreign Powers to refer all disputes to an arbitration of nations; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a petition of citizens of Bradford, New Hampshire, remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, an additional document in support of the claim of Hall J. Kelly, for remuneration for discoveries made by him in Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. GWIN presented the petition of Charlotte S. Westcott, widow of Captain George C. Westcott, of the Army, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented the petition of John F. Moses, of Exeter, in the State of New Hampshire, praying the further favorable action of Congress in relation to the indigent insane bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EVANS presented two petitions of citizens of the United States professing the Jewish religion, and residing in Charleston, South Carolina, praying that measures may be taken to procure for all citizens of the United States, of every creed, a just degree of civil and religious freedom while residing in foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. STUART presented a document in favor of the establishment of certain mail routes in the mineral region of Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Michael Hanson, praying to be allowed a pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Captain E. A. F. Lavallette, of the United States Navy, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; which was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the petition of George Dennett, praying compensation for services as naval officer at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, to whom were referred a petition of citizens of Washington, and a memorial of Barnes & Mitchell, S. P. Hoover, and others, citizens of Washington, praying that Pennsylvania avenue may be paved with the Russ pavement, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the memorial of Urban Stoll, praying to be allowed arrears of pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

PORTRAITS OF THE EARLY PRESIDENTS.

Mr. PEARCE. I am instructed by the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate instructing them to inquire into the expediency of purchasing portraits of the first five Presidents of the United States, to report a bill "to authorize the purchase of portraits of the first five Presidents of the United States."

The bill was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. PEARCE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill, if such be the pleasure of the Senate. I presume that not any, or, at all events, not much discussion will ensue upon it.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to considering the bill now, provided the Senator will agree to postpone it, if it gives rise to debate. We wish to dispose of the Indian appropriation bill to-day.

Mr. PEARCE. If I find that the bill gives rise to any debate of more than a few minutes duration, I will consent to its postponement.

The bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the President to purchase, and place in the Executive Mansion, a series of portraits of the first five Presidents of the United States, by Gilbert Stuart, and to appropriate $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for that purpose.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, there are five portraits, being those of the first five Presidents of the United States, which have been offered to the Government. They were all painted by Gilbert Stuart, whom the Senate know to have been one of the most eminent artists of the country. They are originals, except that of Washington, which is Stuart's copy from his original. They are paintings of great value, as is certified by a number of gentlemen who are themselves artists or amateurs, of great skill and judgment. All the portraits of Stuart are highly valued, as we know. Very lately a portrait of Washington, painted by him, was purchased, I believe, by the Boston Athenaeum for $1,000. Those portraits are now insured at the sum of $5,000. They are believed to form the only complete series of portraits of the first five Presidents by Stuart, now in existence. There was a series of the same Presidents, by the same artist, which the owner had deposited in the library of Congress, some few years ago, but they were destroyed by the fire which consumed the library in 1852. This is probably the only opportunity which the Government will have of acquiring the portraits of the Presidents by such a master.

The committee thought they would be appropriate ornaments to the President's House, and fitting testimonials of the great men who served their country so well and so ably in the office of Chief Magistrate. The committee had no doubt that Congress would readily furnish the means for their purchase, and desire to see them placed in the President's House.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I think, myself, it is very desirable that this appropriation should be made, and I shall vote for the bill with great cheerfulness. I should, however, vote for it with much more cheerfulness, if the committee had thought it expedient to make its provisions more extensive. This may, perhaps, be the last opportunity we shall have to obtain the five portraits for which the committee makes provision. I suppose, with the lapse of years, that difficulty will increase, and it will also increase in regard to those not provided for. It seems to me that the bill should be so amended as to include all the Presidents, or, at least, all the ex-Presidents, for there might be an impropriety in including the President for the time being. But I certainly should be glad to see the Executive Mansion adorned with the portraits of all the preceding Presidents, and, if there is no impropriety in the thing, I would also include the present President. I think the portraits of all our Chief Magistrates ought to be preserved in the Executive Mansion.

Mr. PEARCE. If we knew where we could procure portraits of the other Presidents, executed by competent masters, and at the proper price, I should have no sort of objection. This, however, will do for a beginning. We know that we can get these portraits painted by a consummate artist; and I think it is as well to begin in this way, and leave anything further to time and the future determination of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF INDIANS.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior communicate to the Senate copies of the contract and instructions under which Luther Blake was employed to remove the Indians from Florida, together with copies of his correspondence with the Department upon that subject, and of his accounts and vouchers of his expenditures as such agent.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. FISH. A few weeks since, on my motion, last Friday week was set apart for the consideration of adverse reports. The day arrived, but the Senate was not in session. I now move that Friday next be set apart for the consideration of those reports.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the order will be made.

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer several amendments to the bill. The first is to add to the following clause—

"For the pay of superintendents of Indian affairs per acts of 5th June, 1850; 27th February, 1851, and 3d March, 1852, $12,500"

the words:

Provided, That the President may, from time to time, in his discretion, remove or change the location of any of the superintendencies, now, or hereafter to be, established by law.

The object of that amendment is simply to give the power to the President to make a change in the location of the superintendencies now established by law, if, in his discretion, it should be desirable. It is to leave it, as a matter of discretion, with the Indian Department, in order to accommodate the service, and to bring the superintendent in such connection with the Indians, that he may the more easily perform his duty. It is found that in some cases a change of location would not only be desirable, but sometimes necessary for the proper conducting of the business of the Department, and now the object is to authorize the Department, at discretion, to make the removal or change.

Mr. STUART. I am in favor of the proposition made in that amendment, but I desire to move an amendment to it, to the effect that the proviso in the second section of the act, approved February 27, 1851, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Will the Senator state what the proviso is which he desires to repeal?

Mr. STUART. I want to repeal the proviso in the second section of the act of February 27, 1851, which connects the superintendency in Minnesota with the Governor of Minnesota. That superintendency should be under the charge of the superintendent now in Wisconsin. It was retained with the Governor, as will be seen by looking at the law, as a special case east of the Rocky Mountains, because the then Governor of the Territory was said to be engaged in making a treaty; so that at that time the general provision of the law could not apply to him. My amendment will be in the following form:

And that the proviso contained in section two of the act approved February 27, 1851, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I think I am not mistaken in saying, that the object which the Senator from Michigan has in view, can be accomplished under the law as it now exists. In the act of 1851, and in the proviso which he proposes to repeal, and which established the connection between the superintendency of Indian affairs in Minnesota and the office of Governor of Minnesota, the President is vested with the power of separating the two offices. The connection is to continue "until he shall otherwise direct." Under the law, as it now stands, the power is conferred. I think it better to leave it to the Executive discretion, inasmuch as that is the case. I think, therefore, that the Senator had better withdraw his amendment.

Mr. STUART. The Senator will see in a moment that he is mistaken in that respect. The proviso which I propose to repeal, as I said, makes an exception to the general law which was passed at that time, and the reason for the exception is the one which I have assigned. Now, sir, whilst it is true that the proviso itself authorizes the President of the United States to discontinue the connection whenever he chooses, yet he has no power to increase the salary of the Governor to such a point as it ought to be increased to. The Governor gets $1,500 as Governor, and he gets $1,000 a year as superintendent. He should have $2,000 a year as Governor, which is the usual salary in such instances, and the superintendency should be separated from the Governor, and given to the general superintendent now in Wisconsin, who can do the business better, and by doing which you will save $500 a year. You have a general superintendent there, who, like all others east of the Rocky Mountains, receives $2,000 a year, and he can just as well superintend Indian affairs in Minnesota, in connection with what he has, as not. You will see, therefore, that the power attempted to be conferred upon the President by the proviso, is incomplete. He can separate the duties, but by doing so, the Governor would receive only $1,500 a year, which is insufficient.

My object is to separate the duties—to leave the Indian duties with the superintendent of Indian affairs, where they ought to be left, and at the proper time to increase the salary of the Governor of Minnesota $500 per annum, so as to put him on a par with the other Governors of Territories—the whole operation of which, in a pecuniary point of view, will be to save the Government $500 a year, while you will have the business connected with the Indian affairs done better. The Senator will see that the only way to effect the object is to change the law—to repeal the proviso. The President has not the power now to carry it out as Congress intended.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It is very true, as the Senator from Michigan remarks, that though that proviso confers upon the President the power of separating the duties of Governor and superintendent, he will not be able to increase the salary of the Governor. The proviso provides for the contingency of separating the offices, but does not provide for the increase of the salary; but if that is not now provided for, it can be effected directly and appropriately by a provision authorizing the Governor to receive a salary of $2,000 or $2,500 per annum, in case the President may think proper to separate the two offices.

I therefore suggest to my friend from Michigan, that he can obtain his object by providing that, in the contingency that the Executive does this, the salary shall be raised to, say $2,000 or $2,500, and leave the duty of separating the offices to the Indian Department, instead of fixing it now, at a time when, perhaps, this step ought not to be taken.

I will remark, also, that this is a subject which the Committee on Indian Affairs have had before them, and they came to the conclusion that they were not prepared to recommend the separation of the duties of superintendent from the Executive of the Territories, for the reason, that in Washington Territory, in Utah Territory, and in the Territory of New Mexico, the laws, as they now exist, confide the superintendency of Indian affairs to the Executive of the Territory. They have concluded to report a bill, for reasons which will be assigned when the bill comes forward, recommending a separation in the Territory of Utah. But that is done for reasons applicable to that Territory, which do not apply to the others. If we adopt the policy of separating the two classes of duties in the Territory of Minnesota, we shall, almost for the same reasons, have to separate them in Washington and New Mexico. We, therefore, thought it best to confine the innovation upon the present law to the case, and in the manner which I have mentioned.

Mr. STUART. I am really at a loss to know why the Senator from Arkansas, as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, should object to this proposition. A little experience on the subject, it seems to me, ought to have convinced everybody that, as a measure of policy, there is nothing worse than to give the Governor of the Territory the superintendency of Indian affairs. What has it cost the Government of the United States already, with the superintendency as it was conducted by the late Governor Ramsay, and the investigation of the charges brought against him? And who is satisfied with the result of the investigation? Now, just as long as the Governor of the Territory has confided to him the superintendency of Indian affairs, just so long will you have bad management of these affairs, except once in a while, when you may secure a very remarkable man.

So satisfied was I upon this subject, that I addressed a note to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs yesterday morning. I have received his reply, which I will read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, }
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, April 25, 1854. }

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of to-day, asking my "opinion as to the propriety of separating the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs from those of Governor of Minnesota," as "the Indian appropriation bill is now before the Senate, and" you "wish to append to it such a provision, if it meets with" my "judgment."

By reference to the second section of the twenty-fourth chapter of laws passed at the second session of the Thirty-First Congress, page 586, in volume 9, you will find that the President has the power of suspending the execution of the duties of superintendent by the Governor of Minnesota.

My individual opinion has been, and is, that the public interests, so far as Indian matters are concerned, would, in all the Territories, be subserved by a separation of the two offices, there being no similarity in duty, or necessity for connection, in any respect.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEO. W. MANNYPENNY, Commissioner.
Hon. CHARLES E. STUART, United States Senate.

That opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the Senate will see, when I read the second section of the act, is entirely in accordance with the views of Congress at the time; and, as I said, the exception was made in the case of Minnesota, simply because there existed a temporary reason. Let us see the section:

SEC. 2. And he it further enacted, That from and after the 30th day of June next, all laws, or parts of laws, now in force, providing for the appointment or employment of superintendents of Indian affairs, of whatever character, for any of the Indian tribes east of the Rocky Mountains, and north of New Mexico and Texas, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint three superintendents of Indian affairs for said Indians, who shall receive an annual salary each of $2,000, and whose duty it shall be to exercise a general superintendence over such tribes of Indians as the President of the United States, or the Secretary of the Department of the Interior may direct, and to execute and perform all the powers and duties now assigned by law to superintendents of Indian affairs: Provided, That the Governor of Minnesota shall continue to be, ex officio, superintendent of Indian affairs for that Territory until the President shall otherwise direct.

I say it will be seen that the intention of Congress was to clear out all other modes of superintending Indian affairs, and confide it to those three general superintendents. Look at it. There is one superintendent south. There is another in the vicinity of Missouri; and still another north, who resides in Wisconsin. It would make the provision here complete to separate those duties in Minnesota, and give the duty of conducting Indian affairs to the superintendent in Wisconsin, all of which will be effected by the provision which the chairman of the committee has now introduced; but as I said before, the provision of law cannot be properly carried out by the President, because he cannot add to the salary of the Governor as such.

I do not understand why we should not do right things in the right places. We have now under consideration the question of Indian superintendencies. Here is the place, then, of all others, to make that part of it complete; and when we come to the other place, I shall propose to add such sum to the salary of the Governor of Minnesota as shall place him on a proper footing. But, sir, there is, I apprehend, in the experience of no man a reason for retaining the superintendency of Indian affairs with the Governors of the Territories. I have the authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I have just read, sanctioning that view. He says that the duties should be separated in all cases.

Mr. HUNTER. I think I would rather leave this matter to the discretion of the Executive. I think it would be better to do that than to make it imperative. I have, myself, some doubts as to the policy of separating the two offices. I can well conceive, especially in the distant Territories, that the two powers ought to be united in the hands of the Governor, who would be enabled more effectually to control the Indian tribes and prevent wars. It may be so. For that reason it seems to me better to follow the suggestion of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and leave the matter to the discretion of the President.

Mr. WALKER. As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I feel it my duty to say a few words upon this subject. I have very opposite views to those of the Senator from Virginia. I believe that one of the most fruitful causes of the difficulties among the Indian tribes, and between the Indians and the whites, has been the result of the inability on the part of the Governors of Territories to bestow that attention to the superintendency of Indian affairs, which it was requisite they should bestow. We know that, at the season of the year when the Indians require the supervision of the agents, and of their superintendents, more than at any other time—the winter season—the Legislatures of the Territories are almost always in session.

The Governor has, in the duties of his office as Governor, about as much to attend to as he can do, and very frequently more. At those times when Indian affairs might call him from the seat of government, he cannot attend to them; but in the hurry of the discharge of his duty, he employs persons to attend to them who are frequently inadequate to the task imposed. The Indians perhaps dislike the person; he is odious to them; they have a contempt for him, and a collision springs up between them and the Government, in consequence of an improper person having to attend to the duties. Difficulties begin, in consequence of the neglect, necessarily, on the part of the Governor, and the Indians begin to seek to right their own wrongs; they make aggressions upon the settlements. There is no one whose special duty it is to superintend them, to conciliate them, and to supply them with what it is necessary they should be supplied. The result is, that more difficulty arises in consequence of this than from almost any other cause.

I do not know what would be the effect in regard to the northern superintendency, of the adoption of the proposition offered by the Senator from Michigan. Its main effect would be to separate the office of Governor from that of superintendent in Minnesota; but what effect it would have upon the present office—upon the present location of the office—I cannot determine. This much, however, I have determined in my own mind to do, to vote for the proposition of the committee, if amended according to the motion of the Senator from Michigan; but I cannot vote for it as offered by the chairman of the committee.

I can see no reason why, while there is a superintendent for the North, termed the northern superintendency, he should not, in point of fact, have the superintendency of the Indians. It is his duty to attend to them; it is his duty to study the best policy, the best system for conducting the business of the office, and to communicate frequently with the Indian Bureau. It is his business to learn, and to practice what he learns, in regard to them. It cannot be so with the Governor. I believe that one of the most efficient officers of the United States, in the Indian service, is the individual who now discharges the duties of the northern superintendency. I believe that he could take charge, as superintendent, of all the Indians in the northwest, and discharge the duties to them more faithfully, and serve their interests and those of the Government better, than the Governor of Minnesota, who has a great amount of duty resting upon him as Governor, can possibly do. I say this with some considerable knowledge of Indian matters in that portion of the country. It is where my home is. With many of the individuals of these tribes, their chiefs, &c., I am personally acquainted, and I know their great solicitude to have some one as their superintendent, or agent, or "local father," as they term him, who shall give his undivided attention to their affairs. I do not think those affairs can receive that attention so long as the Governor has to divide his time and attention between the duties of his office as Governor and those of superintendent of Indian affairs.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I have great doubts about the propriety of adopting an amendment like that of the Senator from Michigan. It contemplates a change in our Indian department—a very radical and sweeping change. Heretofore it has been the custom that the Governors of Territories shall be superintendents of Indian affairs. In Oregon, I think such is the case now; and in Utah, and in New Mexico also. It has usually been the case in all Territories. I have never heard any complaints of that mode of conducting Indian affairs. If our forty or fifty years' experience has proved that it is not a proper and efficient mode of conducting them, it would be a good reason for a change; but I do think that it is a change of that sweeping character that ought to be well matured by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and brought forward in an Indian bill by those who have directed their attention to the subject, and not sprung upon us suddenly by way of an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill.

I think it ought also to be general. I know of no reason why this change should take place in Minnesota, that would not apply to the other Territories; and, sir, if we are to make a general change, I certainly am not prepared to act upon it until I can hear from those who understand the question better. I am not aware that there is any reason applying to Minnesota that does not apply elsewhere. I do not understand, therefore, on what ground it is brought in at this time and place, and not applied to the other Territories.

But, again, if we should conclude to dispense with the services of the Governors of Territories, as superintendents of Indian affairs, another question very properly arises. The salaries of the Governors then would necessarily have to be raised. The form of the territorial laws now is, that the Governor receives $1,500 or $1,000 a year as Governor, and $1,500 or $1,000 as superintendent. The effect of the amendment to the amendment would be, to leave the Governor with a salary that is not sufficient to defray his expenses at all. The same act that provides for releasing him from his Indian duties, and thereby takes away one half of his salary, certainly ought to provide for an adequate salary for him in his capacity as Governor.

Inasmuch, therefore, as it involves other matters that require consideration, that of what the proper salary of the Governor should be when released from these duties, and as it should apply to other Territories and involve a general rule, I think the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to take charge of it, and bring forward a new system. If they think the present system ought to be changed, I should certainly defer to their better opportunities of knowing—to their better information upon this subject—than I can possess.

Mr. STUART. The Senator from Illinois evidently has not looked at this subject with his usual attention. He says he sees no reason why this should be done in this case, and not in Oregon or Washington Territory, for instance. The reason is contained in the very act to which I alluded. The law of 1851 abolished all superintendencies of a minor character east of the Rocky Mountains, the object of which was to place all the Indians east of those mountains under the three superintendents provided for in the law. Then Mr. Sibley, the Delegate for Minnesota in the other House, suggested that, inasmuch as the Governor of that Territory at that time was engaged in making a treaty with some Indians in that Territory, it would be best to form a temporary exception, so that he might carry out that object.

The three superintendents east of the Rocky Mountains have control of all Indian affairs, except in the Territory of Minnesota; and this exception was made for the purpose to which I have alluded. The Senator will see, therefore, that west of the Rocky Mountains, on the Pacific side, where there are no general superintendents, the reason exists for keeping the superintendencies in the hands of the Governors, although the letter which I have read from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, states that, in his opinion, they ought to be separated in all cases. The system is complete when you carry out what the Legislature, in 1851, intended to carry out. You abolished all minor superintendencies, and placed the whole in the hands of three general superintendents. We have the third general superintendent in the person of Mr. Huebschmann, in Wisconsin, who can superintend these affairs in Minnesota, as well as those which he has now under his charge. So far as regards the duties of the Governor, I intend to move, if nobody else does, to increase his salary up to the proper point—say $2,000 or $2,500; for, so far as I am concerned, I will vote for either. It need not be done here, if this is not the proper place; but this is the proper place to perfect what the Congress of 1851 intended to perfect in reference to Indian superintendencies. The Senator will see that the reason exists in full force. Here are three general superintendents provided for; and the effect of my amendment is simply to obviate an exception which, at the time, was made for a mere temporary purpose; and I say again, that the experience which we have had in Minnesota, under Governor Ramsay, the amount it has cost the Government, and the difficulties which have grown out of it, admonish us that the Congress in 1851 were wise in these general provisions. The Commissioner says, in his letter, that the business of the two offices has no relation to each other. The duties are inconsistent with each other. What is said by the Senator from Wisconsin, one of the Committee on Indian Affairs, is said with great truth and force. It was the existence of all these things that induced Congress, in 1851, to abolish all other means, and regulate it by the appointment of three superintendents. I am very much disinclined to consume the time of the Senate on this subject; but I confess that, to my mind, the proposition is one of the plainest in the world.

Mr. WALKER. I think the Senator from Illinois will discover, when the facts are fully presented, that his views are the very reverse of what they ought to be. He assumes that the general rule now is, that the Governor shall, ex officio, discharge the duties of superintendent, and that we are about to make an exception to that general rule in the case of Minnesota. The reverse is the fact. He will perceive that, under the law which it is now proposed to amend, the general rule is made that the Governor shall not be, ex officio, superintendent, but that there shall be superintendents of Indian affairs appointed, though for the reason mentioned by the Senator from Michigan—that at that time the Governor of Minnesota was negotiating treaties—that locality was made an exception to the general rule. It is to get rid of that exception, that the amendment of the Senator from Michigan is designed. There exists now, east of the Rocky Mountains, this exception, in the case of Minnesota. Perhaps it would be well for it to exist, provided we had no northern superintendent; but we have a northern superintendent, an officer who can take charge of the Indian affairs and relieve the Government of them. As for the gentleman who is Governor, I have no doubt he is as competent, and will as faithfully discharge the duties of superintendent, as any other man in America, but he cannot do it properly and attend to his other duties. Suppose that, during the session of the Legislature in winter, a difficulty arises with the Indians; it becomes his duty to leave the seat of government; the law compels him to do it, and go among the Indians. What is he going to do? He must seek the agency of some irresponsible person, and send him there, and ten to one he is not the man to reconcile matters with the Indians. The Governor cannot go himself in person, for he has to be at the seat of government in attendance upon the Legislature, and hence very often these difficulties arise. I think it is well to get rid of the exception made in the law of 1851, and place the Indians where they are placed everywhere else east of the Rocky Mountains, under the superintendency of the superintendent of Indian affairs proper.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is true, as the Senator from Michigan has said, that I do not understand this question as well as I should if I had thoroughly investigated it. I had not turned my attention specially to it for the reason that I had no idea such a proposition would be made on a motion to amend the Indian appropriation bill, and that if any such radical change was contemplated in our Indian affairs, I presumed it would come from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that I should have time to examine it. The act of 1851 does provide that the superintendencies shall be dispensed with east of the Rocky Mountains and north of New Mexico, except that in Minnesota, where the Governor shall continue, ex officio, superintendent of Indian affairs, unless the President of the United States shall relieve him therefrom. Then, as under this law as it is the President of the United States has the power to-day to make this very change as to that Territory, if he sees proper, why the necessity of this provision on the subject?

Mr. STUART. The Senator did not hear what I said in the outset. The object is this: The President, as the matter stands, would not separate these duties, and leave the Governor only $1,500 a year. It would not be fair. He can separate the duties, but he cannot increase the salary.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Exactly.

Mr. STUART. Therefore, there is the necessity to legislate on the subject.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I know; but still, in this legislation you do not propose to increase the salary. You only propose in this bill to do what the President is authorized to do under the existing law. I take it for granted that if, in the estimation of the President, the public interest required this change, he would have made it before this time. I take it for granted, that if, in his estimation, the public interest should hereafter require the change, he will make it under the existing law. By your amendment you only require it to be imperative upon him to make a change which he is authorized to make, if he thinks his duty and the public interest require it. Hence, there is no necessity connected with the public service to do this act, unless you believe that the President does not understand, or is not willing to perform his duty under the law.

But, sir, I cannot really understand that this is an exception to the general rule. The general rule has been, in this country, to make the Governors of the Territories ex officio superintendents of Indian affairs. I know that under peculiar emergencies you have sometimes required the appointment of an extra superintendent; but the general rule has been that the Governor shall ex officio be superintendent. It was so in Iowa, it was so in Wisconsin, in Missouri, in Michigan, in Oregon, in Minnesota, in all the Territories. I am not certain but that some slight change has been made in Oregon recently; but if so it has been in this indirect mode, and without due reflection and investigation.

But why should there be a difference between your superintendencies east and west of the Rocky Mountains? If the Governor is a proper superintendent west, I suppose he is a proper superintendent east. Certainly that range of mountains does not make such a difference either in the powers of your Governors, or in their duties or capacity, or in the nature of the Indians, or the duties towards them, as to require one system of policy on the east and another on the west side. I think, therefore, that this attempt to adopt one system in one place, and another one in another place, on the suggestions of members or of particular officers, without having the whole subject investigated, is calculated to lead to confusion. I repeat, if you will show me that the Governor is so much engaged that he cannot perform his duties as superintendent, I am willing, upon a bill to be reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, carefully matured, to make a change; but I wish to make it everywhere, and not make an exception of one Territory when no good reason for that exception can be pointed out.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WALKER] says, that the Governor has to be at the seat of government to attend on the Legislature, and has not time to attend to those duties. He has to be at the seat of government not exceeding forty days in the year. Your law provides that the Legislature shall only continue in session forty days in twelve months. I should think that the Governor might attend the rest of the time to Indian affairs.

Mr. WALKER. Has he not other duties to attend to?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly; he has other duties, but duties that can be performed in one part of the Territory almost as well as in another. At any rate, if he cannot attend to those duties, the same objection applies to New Mexico; why not make the change there? If the Governor of Minnesota cannot perform both those duties, or cannot be permitted to absent himself from the seat of government to superintend the Indian affairs in Minnesota, how can the Governor of New Mexico do it there?

Mr. WALKER. They ought to be separated there.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then, if they ought to be separated in New Mexico, why not separate them in Utah?

Mr. STUART. The Committee on Indian Affairs are going to report a bill to do so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The committee, you say, are going to do that; then, if it is done in Utah, why not also in Washington and Oregon, if it has not already been done there?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to correct him?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. From the tenor of his remarks, I suppose the Senator takes it for granted, that the committee have recommended this separation?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; I do not understand it so. I was pursuing the train of remark because these gentlemen [Messrs. STUART and WALKER] were arguing in derogation of the committee, so far as I am informed.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The committee have recommended simply to make the location or seat of the superintendencies movable—nothing more. The proposition to separate the superintendency from the governorship comes from the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to hear that explanation. I supposed that such was the case; and I was arguing in the manner I was pursuing, because the Committee on Indian Affairs had been deprived of their legitimate functions, and had not had charge of the subject. It was a reason why it should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. We know that that committee have devoted their attention to Indian affairs, and understand these questions much better than the other members of the Senate do. We know that the chairman [Mr. SEBASTIAN] has devoted his attention to them until he is perfectly acquainted with the question in all its bearings; and, I think, that a proposition as sweeping as this, ought to have come from that committee, and not been brought in by persons not connected with the committee at all. That is the reason I was arguing upon that point.

As to the recommendation of the committee, that the President might change the seats of the superintendents, I think it is proper and right. One of them is located now in St. Louis. There are no Indians within many hundred miles of that place. By changing his locality from there to St. Joseph's, Missouri, or the mouth of the Kansas, or some other proper point, it is possible he might be rendered much more efficient and useful in the performance of his duties. If the President should come to the conclusion that such was the case, it would be well to permit him to change the location with reference to placing him nearer the theater of his action, or the scene of his duties. So it would be with the other agencies.

But, sir, when you come to the question of separating the duties of superintendent in the Territories from the office of Governor, it is a question of vast importance, requiring mature consideration. I am, by no means, certain but that the Governor of a Territory possesses a power over the Indians, that no other man would possess. The very fact that he is Governor, the very title of his office, the very fact that he is commander-in-chief of the militia of the Territory, the very fact that he has the executive power and authority in his hands, the right to call out the militia, the right to exercise military power, makes him the proper man to enforce your Indian laws, in the event they are resisted by the Indians. If you have a mere superintendent there, he is a man with naked authority, without the power to enforce his commands. Are you going to have your superintendent with authority to call upon and command the Governor? Suppose the superintendent finds that his orders are resisted, and that he cannot execute them; who, then is to call out the militia, or the military authority for that purpose? Is it the superintendent himself? If so, you make him commander-in-chief over your Governor. It will produce a collision of authority; and I think that it requires deliberation before you throw all this confusion into the government of the different Territories of the Union. I wish to see the necessity for this change. I should like to hear the experience of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. DODGE,] who has been the Governor of Territories. I should like to hear the experience of the distinguished Senator from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE,] who has lived nearly all his life in Territories; or of the other Senator from Iowa, [Mr. JONES,] who has represented Territories nearly his whole life here. I should like to have those gentlemen, who are familiar with the territorial organization, with the duties of the superintendent of Indian affairs, with the authority of the Governor, and who have had experience upon the subject, confer with the Committee on Indian Affairs, and prepare such a general bill as would do justice to the subject.

I did not desire, Mr. President, to interfere with this question; but my position as chairman of the Committee on Territories, makes it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the subject, to show that by pursuing the course proposed by the Senator from Michigan, you will be producing confusion in the whole territorial organization, which ought not to be done except upon mature deliberation.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall confine ourselves to the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and not be introducing other topics, which, it is evident, will lead to debate in regard to the general policy which should prevail in the government of the Indians. I think it would be better to reserve those questions for some separate bill. The provision moved by the Committee on Indian Affairs, in regard to changing the locations of the superintendencies, is a matter of necessity, and I trust that the other matter will not be pressed upon us now.

Mr. WALKER. There is one point in the remarks of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to which I wish to make a very brief reply. He suggested one reason against the amendment of the Senator from Michigan; and I think in that reason there was more force involved than in any other which he gave. He says he thinks that it is peculiarly appropriate that the Governor of a Territory should be superintendent of Indian affairs.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I say such has been the practice; and I do not see what reason there is for a change in the practice, which has existed for sixty years. But I say if the Committee on Indian Affairs can satisfy me that there is a necessity for a change, after mature consideration, I should be likely to bow with deference to the opinion of that committee.

Mr. WALKER. The propriety of the Governor of a Territory being at the same time superintendent of Indian affairs, was certainly enforced by the Senator from Illinois, and he gave a reason for it; and to that reason I wish to reply. His reason was, that the Governor had influence over the Indians because he held the title and official position of Governor, and because he was, besides, commander-in-chief of the territorial militia, and had power to call them out. Did not that Senator reflect, that when the Governor calls out the militia, he does so as Governor, and not as superintendent of Indian affairs? The superintendent is not appointed to fight the Indians, but to protect their interests, to care for them, and to look after their welfare. Then, if the Indians are under the superintendency of a separate superintendent of Indian affairs, what will be the result? If violence ensues between them and the whites, the Governor does just what he would do if he were also superintendent of Indian affairs: he calls out the militia then. For what purpose? To protect the interests of the Indians? To take care of them? No, sir! But to whip them, and to protect the whites. That is just what he would do, if the Indians were under the superintendency of a person separate from the Governor. He would call out the militia to fight them, and put down the insurrection. That is his duty, as Governor, and not as superintendent; and his being superintendent disqualifies him, to a great extent, from doing so; for the very insurrection may arise from his own fault, and after he has committed the fault, and brought the Indians to arms, he turns round and calls out the militia to fight them, and put them down. Sir, there should be a disinterested person to judge of that matter, and he should be the superintendent of Indian affairs, and not the Governor. It is not for the superintendent to set up a rule of action for the whites, but for the Indians; and the Governor's duty is to set up a rule of action for the whites. It is not his duty, and it is never imposed upon him, as superintendent of Indian affairs, to call out the militia to fight the Indians. When he does so, and appeals to arms, he does it as the enemy of the Indians, as Governor, and not in discharge of his duties as superintendent.

I think that when the idea advanced by the Senator from Illinois is properly understood, it will be an argument for the propriety of separating the offices of Governor and superintendent. I hope and trust that it will be done in this instance, and that the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will not be adopted. For one, I do not wish to see it adopted, unless the proposition offered by the Senator from Michigan be also adopted. If the two can go together, I will vote for them.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It may be that all the difficulties which the Senator from Wisconsin portrays may exist in case we do not change the law; but, sir, inasmuch as the system which he proposes to change, and which he thinks will be so dreadful and so unjust in its operation, has been in existence as long as this Government has been in being; and inasmuch as you have had from three to six Territories during that whole period; and inasmuch as no such collision, or injustice, or violence has occurred, I can hardly see that there is any great reason for the alarm expressed that it is about to occur at this instant. In arguing against this change before, what I said was, that as we have had the system for half a century, and there has been no pretense that any one of these evils has occurred, no pretense that any one of these acts of violence or of injustice has been committed, I wanted to know what ground there was for the change. I do not say that it ought not to be made, but I say that fifty years' experience is long enough to enable gentlemen to point out the evils if they exist; and I say further, that that long acquiescence, and the absence of any complaints, and the absence of any of the wrongs and injuries which are feared, should restrain us from acting; at least until the appropriate committee of this body can consider the subject, and give us their sanction for our action. That is all that I was urging. It may be right to make the change, but I do not see that, as yet, any good reasons have been advanced which require us to make a departure from the old policy.

Mr. TOUCEY. Mr. President, I infer from the introduction of this measure here, that the application has been made to the President to make the very change which is proposed by the present amendment. The law gives the President the power to make that change; and I infer, therefore, that it has not been accomplished, because the Executive is not convinced that it ought to be done. Now, sir, I am not willing, unless good ground be presented here for it, to take an appeal from the Executive to this Chamber, or to Congress, in a matter in regard to which he must be better informed (it being a part of his executive duty) than the legislative department of the Government.

If I understand the matter, these two offices are united in every Territory, except in Oregon, by the existing law; but in regard to Minnesota, power is conferred upon the President to make the separation, and he has not chosen to make any such change. The Committee on Indian Affairs of this body has not reported in favor of any such change, nor has any member of that committee, if I understand the matter aright, except the Senator from Wisconsin, favored it. But here is a proposition brought in against the action of that committee, or without its action, and against or without the action of the President, proposing to make an exception in regard to the Territory of Minnesota. It may be right; I am not prepared to say that it is not right; but it is contrary to the practice of the Government hitherto, if I am correctly informed, except in the case of Oregon, and I can readily conceive why that should be an exception. If a proper measure were presented to us, upon general grounds, I would have a law which would apply to all Territories; at all events, I should not be willing to make the change unless it came from the committee, or in some way received its sanction.

Mr. WALKER. I simply wish to answer as to the inference drawn by the Senator from Connecticut. He says he infers that application has been made to the President to do just what it is proposed to do by this amendment. I wish to assure him, and the Senate, that if any such application has been made to the President, I am entirely ignorant of it. I do not think such an application has been made. If it had been made, however, I have no doubt the President gave this answer: "If I separate the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs from those of Governor, I shall reduce the Governor's salary $1,000, leaving him only $1,500 a year. That would be inadequate; and therefore I decline to separate the two offices." That, probably, would be his answer, if he were asked to make the change; and I think he would be correct in it. He would be correct in it if he looked only to the interests of the officeholder, and not to those of the Indians. If he looked to the interests of the Governor of Minnesota, he would see, that by making the change, he was reducing the salary of the Governor so much, without having any power to make compensation for the reduction. Now, what is proposed by the Senator from Michigan is, to separate the duties of the two offices, and, when the proper bill comes up, to increase the salary of the Governor, so as to do him justice. Then it is only to do, on the part of Congress, what the President probably could not do in justice to the Governor of Minnesota. There has been, to my knowledge, no application made to the President for this change.

Mr. TOUCEY. I did not mean to say that there had been any such application. I merely drew the inference in my own mind, from the fact that the power was lodged in the President, and that upon that subject he was much better informed than individual members of the Senate, and I confided in his action, and especially when that action is sustained by the appropriate committee of this body.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The debate upon this amendment of the committee, and upon the amendment proposed to it by the Senator from Michigan, has assumed so wide a range, and involved the discussion of so many collateral questions and considerations, that I beg the attention of the Senate for a short time, merely to enable me to state the very simple question which is presented by the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs. That amendment proposes simply to allow the locations of the present superintendencies of Indian affairs, wherever they may be, to be changed according to the discretion of the President, which is, of course, the discretion of the Indian Department, in order to accommodate our Indian system to the shifting and changing geographical position of the Indians. It is a matter of evident necessity, the propriety of which, I presume, no Senator will question.

The Senator from Michigan proposes to go further, and to separate the office of superintendent of Indian affairs from that of Governor of the Territory of Minnesota. So far as the Committee on Indian Affairs have had that subject under consideration, and they gave but very slight consideration to it, indeed, they could not agree to recommend it. It did not meet the sanction of the judgment of the committee. The opposite policy has been pursued so long, and has, with some few exceptions, worked so well, that we are not prepared to recommend a separation of the duties of the two offices in this case. The offices of superintendent of Indian Affairs and Executive of the Territory are now united in the Territories of New Mexico, Utah, Washington, and Minnesota; we were therefore not prepared to sanction the amendment which has been moved by the Senator from Michigan. He seeks to do by law that which existing laws authorize to be accomplished by a simple order of the Executive.

Now, sir, in order to meet the only argument which, as it seems to me, the Senator from Michigan has brought forward against leaving this discretion with the President—that is, that he would not like to exercise it because by so doing he would decrease the Governor's salary—I intend, if the Senate decline to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, which I hope they will do, to offer this proviso to the amendment of the committee:

Provided, That whenever the President may order the transfer of the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs from the Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, the salary of such Governor shall thereafter be ——— dollars per annum.

By putting in such a provision as this, we shall remove all the difficulty and all the objection arising out of the sudden decrease of the salary of that officer, and leave the question of the separation of the duties of the two offices to be determined as now provided for by law—that is, by the President of the United States. I presume that being a mere matter of administrative detail, that it is much better it should be left to the discretion of the President, who is supposed to be better aware of the exigencies of the Indian service than we are, and allow him to accomplish, by a simple order, that which, if we regulate it, must be done by a fixed, imperative, and compulsory law.

Mr. STUART. It has become a matter of very little consequence with me whether the Senate adopt my amendment, as I shall modify it—because I intend to test the sense of the Senate upon the exact question, and I shall modify it so as to increase the salary of the Governor at the same time—or whether they adopt the suggestion now intimated by the Senator from Arkansas. And, sir, but for some things which have been said in the debate, I should have contented myself with allowing the question to be taken without any further remarks; but the movement which I have made here has been characterized by the Senator from Illinois, and by the Senator from Connecticut, as most remarkable. The Senator from Illinois characterized my amendment as a most sweeping one, making a very great change in our Indian relations, and said it ought to receive the serious consideration of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and of the Senate. This only goes to show how men may differ. I consider it the simplest question in the world, and reduced to a nut shell.

Congress, in 1851, provided for a general change of Indian superintendencies east of the Rocky Mountains; and the Senator seems to have forgotten, in his remarks, that the history of the Government, in respect to its Indian affairs, is a history of fraud and plunder. The Senator says he can see no reason why this change should be made. Why, sir, the system itself was subjected in the hands of designing men to the perpetration of such frauds upon the Treasury of the United States, that it was impossible for human ingenuity to prevent them; and the statistics will show that this Government has been plundered to a greater extent through its Indian agencies than from all other sources put together. Hence Congress, in 1851, being aroused to this question, resolved to sweep away all these informal modes of distributing money among the Indians and superintending Indian affairs, and provided for three general agents, who should be nominated by the President, and confirmed by the Senate, paid a liberal salary, and held to a rigid accountability for the proper exercise of the duties of their office. The Territory of Minnesota was excepted out of that general rule for a reason to which I have already alluded, and which I will not trouble the Senate with repeating. The ground of the exception having ceased, the exception itself should cease. This, therefore, in my judgment, is no sweeping change. The sweeping change was made in the second section of the law of 1851, which swept away this whole mode. It was done then, and done maturely—done with deliberation, and done, I apprehend, with great propriety.

The reason to which I alluded for the distinction west of the Rocky Mountains still prevails. There are no general superintendencies there. But I have read the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who is presumed to know more about the matter than any other man under this Government, in which he says the change ought to be made in all cases; that there is no reason for retaining the two offices in one person anywhere, and that the Government service would be better without it. That is his view, and it should be pretty good authority.

Then, sir, the Senator suggests, and the Senator from Virginia, and the Senator from Connecticut, have fallen into the same argument, that there should be no amendments to appropriation bills except they come from the committees. That would leave very little for the rest of us to do.

Mr. HUNTER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not say so.

Mr. TOUCEY. Nor I.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Nor I; nor any one else, I believe. I neither stated it, nor hinted it, nor said anything from which any one could infer it.

Mr. STUART. The remarks will be published in the Globe; and I venture to say that it will appear from the report, that the argument of the Senator from Illinois against this amendment was, that the subject had not received the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that the Senate ought not to entertain it, because it had not been acted upon, and reported upon by the committee. Now, sir, I say that that argument will cut off the right of any individual Senator, who does not belong to any particular committee, to offer an amendment, because if the argument is sound in this instance, it is sound in all instances. That is the necessary result of the argument.

Now, sir, I think that the Senator from Connecticut has introduced an argument which is still more remarkable than that. He says that he infers that the President has been called upon to make the change, and has declined to do it. If the Senator himself has called upon the President to make that change, and the President has declined, he has a right to draw the inference, because then he knows something about it; but there is nothing in the proposition which carries any such inference. Then he follows this up by saying that he objects to taking an appeal from the action of the President to the Senate, or to Congress. I never dreamed that any such appeal was being taken. I had called upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I read to the Senate the correspondence in which he sanctioned this change. I had called upon the Secretary of the Interior, who has charge of the Indian department, and he told me that he would not recommend the change, because it took away part of the Governor's salary, but that, in his judgment, the change ought to be made. That I had stated here. If I were President of the United States I would not make the change, nor would the Senator from Connecticut do it, and take $1,000 off the salary of the Governor of Minnesota. He could not infer that Congress would increase the salary. Hence, I said in the outset that the proviso to the second section of the act of 1851 was incomplete; that while it purported to give this power to the President of the United States, the power was so incompletely given that he could not exercise it without injustice. I say, therefore, it is quite immaterial to me whether the amendment which I have moved, or that now indicated by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, be adopted. I have the opinion of the Indian Commissioner, and of the Secretary of the Interior, that the separation ought to be made, and, as I said before, it is impossible for me to conceive why the Senate should hesitate in doing what it is conceded ought to be done, but the objection to doing which is, that this is not the proper way and proper place to do it. I should have thought that the general Indian appropriation bill was the very place to provide for everything connected with Indian affairs.

I will modify my amendment by adding to it a proviso, that the salary of the Governor of Minnesota shall remain at $2,500, which is his present salary as Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs. I can see no reason myself—I do not say what reason other gentlemen can see—why a measure which is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and sanctioned by the Secretary of the Interior, (and which I have, therefore, a right to infer would be sanctioned by the President of the United States, because he is in the habit, I apprehend, of sanctioning the action of the officers who have charge of these questions,) should not be carried out by Congress. Why should it not be done? What has been urged against it? Nothing, except what I conceive to be—I say it, certainly, with great respect—a very remarkable argument, charging me with asserting a right which does not belong to anybody but a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and with the intention of appealing from the President of the United States to the Senate, and, therefore, invoking the power of the friends of the President to vote down my amendment. Why, sir, I do not know anything about that course of action. I have offered this amendment because I deem it very important. I had some little knowledge of what occurred under Governor Ramsay. I looked a little into those transactions, and although I believe he was acquitted of the charges brought against him, I also believe he impugned the law, and I believe, just as long as the Governor of a Territory holds the patronage of Governor and the money of the Indians, there is too strong a temptation for most men, and we shall find that the difficulties will continue to occur. It is for that reason that I offered and urged the amendment; but I say again, that I care not how the object is effected. I would as lief turn the responsibility over to the President, if the Senate are afraid of it, as to take the responsibility here. For myself, however, I prefer to do whatever in my judgment ought to be done, and to do it myself. I prefer, as a member of Congress, to take the responsibility, so far as my vote and action go, to change this law, rather than turn the question over to the President, and say to him, "Sir, you must take the responsibility, because a former Congress conferred it upon you imperfectly." I propose to relieve the President of it, and to place the responsibility where it belongs, and that is on the Congress of the United States.

Now, in conclusion, (and I hope this is all I shall be called upon to say on the subject,) let me say, that I predicate my action upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, asked of him for that purpose, upon the opinion informally obtained of the Secretary of the Interior; and I infer, from the fact that these two officers are combined upon the question, that the President would be of the same opinion, if called upon, in respect to this change.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator is entirely mistaken in supposing that he predicates his amendment on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It seems, by a letter from the Commissioner, addressed to the Senator, in answer to an inquiry made by him, whether this change ought to be made in Minnesota, that he says: "By reference to the second section," &c., "you will find that the President already has the power" to make the separation in Minnesota. Then he adds, "My individual opinion has been, and is, that the public interests, so far as Indian matters are concerned, would, in all the Territories, be subserved by a separation of the two offices, there being no similarity in duty, or necessity for the connection in any respect."

What is his recommendation? He answers, as to the point put to him, whether the separation ought to be made in Minnesota, that the law already authorizes it. As to the question, whether there ought to be a general law, he says his opinion is in favor of a general change. Certainly you cannot draw an inference from that letter that he thought it ought to be made in this particular case, while the old system continued in other cases. The inference, it seems to me, should be, that he saw no necessity for making a special exception of this case; but if you are going to reorganize the system, and make a general change, he says he is in favor of it; otherwise, he says, the law as it stands is sufficient to authorize the President to act. Then his recommendation, so far as there is any recommendation at all, is against this special act instead of being in favor of it.

Again, if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had intended to make a recommendation for this change, he would certainly have sent it to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who is the appropriate person to hold communication between that committee and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, on a question of this kind.

Sir, I regret that I have been under the necessity of rising again on this point; but I must say a few words further. The Senator says, that here is an exception to the general rule—that the act of 1851 abolished the sub-agencies, and all that kind of thing, east of the Rocky Mountains, with this exception. Why, sir, if he will look into that matter, he will find that the act of 1851, to which he refers, does not remove an agency in any organized Territory of the United States, and does not deprive any Governor of a Territory of the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs. What is the exception? The act of 1851 excepts from it every organized Territory in America. It applies to the Territories east of the Rocky Mountains, north of New Mexico, thus excepting that Territory, and excepting Minnesota; and those are the only two organized Territories east of the mountains. This shows that the act was intended to apply to the unorganized Indian country, and to none other.

No provision of that act applied to any of the organized Territories of the United States, and for fear it might be construed as applying to an organized Territory, Congress excepted Minnesota by name, and used language excepting New Mexico also. It is very clear, therefore, that the act was intended only to reduce the number of agencies through all that vast Indian country which is unorganized, and not subject to the jurisdiction or control of any Governor, or of any government, except the Indian department.

Then you can find no authority for this measure in the act of 1851. It is not carrying out that act; it is not in accordance with its spirit; and I say, therefore, this proposition to make a radical change in our Indian department, as connected with the organized Territories, should be presented in a different shape. If it is necessary to make the change, let it be done by a general law; and if the Committee on Indian Affairs, on investigation, will report a general law, and satisfy the Senate that there is good reason for it, I will not object; but I wish it brought in regularly.

The Senator says, also, that other Senators and myself have taken the position, that a member of the Senate cannot offer an amendment unless it comes recommended from a committee. Sir, I intimated no such position. I said nothing of the kind. In my argument I did not allude to any such thing. I said that a proposition of this kind, making so radical and sweeping a change in our Indian policy, which had continued for fifty years as it is, should not be presented until the subject had been referred to the proper committee, reported upon, and well considered. I did not intimate that on ordinary amendments such was the case; but in a proposition to make a great change in a permanent system, there should be deliberation, examination, and investigation. I hope I shall have no more to say on the question.

Mr. STUART. I modify the amendment to the amendment, so as to read in this way:

And that the proviso contained in the second section of the act of February 27, 1851, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That the salary of the Governor of Minnesota shall remain at $2,500 per annum.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; and the question recurred on the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I move, as a modification of the amendment of the committee, to add to it the following:

Provided, That whenever the President may order the transfer of the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs from the Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, the salary of said Governor shall thereafter be — dollars per annum.

My object is simply to provide that, if the President exercises the power now conferred on him by law, to separate the executive duties of the Governor of Minnesota from the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs, the salary of the Governor shall be raised to a sufficient amount. I have left the amount blank in the amendment, but the blank can be filled by the vote of the Senate.

Mr. WALKER. I move to fill the blank with "$2,000."

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to accept an amendment of this sort: "That whenever the President shall relieve the Governor of Minnesota, or of any other organized Territory, from the performance of the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs, the salary of the Governor shall remain the same as if the order had not been made," so as to make the provision general.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I will state to the Senator, that the President has not got that authority, except in this particular case.

Mr. DOUGLAS. He will have it, if that amendment be made.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. This power of the President applies to the Governor of Minnesota. The law does not authorize him to separate the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs from those of Governor in any other Territory.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think, however, he would have that power by inference, if we put the amendment in the form which I suggest. My amendment is, that "whenever the President of the United States shall separate from the office of Governor of Minnesota, or of any other Territory, the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs, then the salary of the Governor shall remain the same as it would have been if such order had not been made."

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Then, do I understand the Senator from Illinois to mean that, by the adoption of his modification, the amendment would confer the authority upon the President, in reference to the other Territories, which he has not now by law?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Precisely. It is with that view that I suggest my amendment.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I will accept the modification.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to ask whether the adoption of this amendment will not increase the amount of compensation that will be paid to these territorial officers?

Mr. WELLER. When the President separates them, it will.

Mr. DAWSON. Then I ask, wherefore the necessity for placing the President in a condition where he will be constantly harassed to separate these appointments; and thus make his position exceedingly uncomfortable, for such is the desire to get into office, that we know it will be a prevailing feeling. If the Senate is determined that the superintendency shall be vested in the Governor, let us say so, and not put the President in this embarrassing condition. I think it is legislating in a wrong way. Let us say that this shall or shall not be so, and leave no discretion with the President. That is my view about it, and I hope the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will not accept propositions of this kind, which are merely calculated to embarrass the President.

Mr. COOPER. I do not think it will injure the President much in that respect. He has a good deal of that business on hand now, and the making of this little addition to it will not embarrass him a great deal. If there be no better argument against the proposition than that, I hardly think it ought to prevail.

Mr. WALKER. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that, as regards Minnesota, it will not increase the amount, because there is already a superintendent there, and the Governor now, ex officio, discharges the duties of another superintendent; and therefore, if you leave his salary for Governor alone, as it now is for Governor and superintendent, and take from him the duties of superintendent and impose them upon the person now appointed for the purpose, the amount paid to the two officers will be just the same as it is now. But if you increase his salary as Governor $500, and take from him the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs, and impose them upon the regular superintendent, you will decrease the amount $500, and thus save $500 a year to the Treasury by the operation.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As I understand it, there is now a general superintendent for Wisconsin.

Mr. WALKER. He is the northern superintendent.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Superintendent for Wisconsin, I believe.

Mr. WALKER. Not at all. There are three general superintendents—northern, western, and southern. The northern superintendent, whose office is at present located in Wisconsin, would be entitled to the jurisdiction of the Indians in Minnesota, but for this exception.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The superintendent was appointed for Wisconsin. Then, if you relieve the Governor of Minnesota from these duties, the question is, whether you shall put them on that superintendent.

Mr. STUART. They go there by law.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If they are thrown on that superintendent, the question will be whether his salary shall be increased. If his salary should not be increased, but the Governor's salary should be increased by the amount thus taken from him, it would make no change in that respect in the amount paid. I would say the Governor's salary should be $2,500.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have already said to the Senator from Illinois, that I would accept his modification, and so I will, if he insists upon it; but I think that, by pursuing a different course, we shall relieve the amendment of the committee in relation to the change of the location of the superintendencies, which I think had better be left by itself, without incurring it with the provision suggested by the Senator from Illinois. I will presently offer an amendment to separate the superintendent of Indian affairs in Utah from the Governor of that Territory, for particular reasons, and the Senator's amendment can come in then.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am willing to have it come in at any place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) Does the Senator from Illinois withdraw his amendment?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understood the Senator from Arkansas to accept it, and I am not willing that we shall adopt his amendment, as it now stands, without adding more. I wish, whenever we act in regard to Minnesota, to make our action general; but at the same time, I am willing that the amendment of the committee, in relation to the change of the location of superintendencies, shall be voted on first.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I will say to the Senator that I will offer another amendment presently to separate the office of Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs in Utah, and then the Senator can move more appropriately than here, to attach the general provision to it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Very well; then I withdraw my amendment.

The blank was filled with "$2,500," and the amendment as thus amended, was adopted, as follows:

Provided, That the President may, from time to time, in his discretion, remove or change the location of any of the superintendencies now or hereafter to be established by law: Provided, That whenever the President may order the transfer of the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs from the Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, the salary of said Governor shall thereafter be $2,500 per annum.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer another amendment, to insert, before the appropriation for the Creeks, the following:

Camanches, Kioways, and Apaches, of the Arkansas river.—For the first of ten installments for the purchase of goods, provisions, and agricultural implements, stipulated in the sixth article of the treaty of the 27th of July, 1853, $18,000;

For expenses of the transportation of the first of ten installments of goods, provisions, and agricultural implements, stipulated in the sixth article of the treaty of the 27th of July, 1853, $5,000;

Provided, That the goods, provisions, and agricultural implements which may be purchased and transported out of the moneys hereby appropriated, shall not be delivered until the said tribes of Indians shall have assented to the amendments of the Senate of the United States to the said treaty, on account of which they are procured.

This amendment is merely intended to carry out the treaty lately ratified, which has been made with these Camanches, Kioways, and Apaches; and is in strict pursuance of the treaty stipulations. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs is to insert, at the end of the appropriation for the Creeks, the following:

For the expenses of running and marking the eastern boundary line of the Creek country west of the Arkansas, $8,000.

This is in pursuance of an estimate from the Department, and is in fulfillment of the treaty of 1838 with the Creek Indians, by which the United States assumed the expense of marking the boundary line between that nation and the Cherokees.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have now some amendments to offer from the Committee on Indian Affairs to fulfill the treaties with the Omahas, Ottos, and Missourias, lately ratified by the Senate. The first of these amendments is, to strike out of the appropriations for the Omahas, this provision:

"For agricultural implements, during the pleasure of the President, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 15th of July, 1839, $500"—and to insert in lieu of it—

For fulfilling the stipulations contained in the fifth article of the treaty of the 16th of March, 1854, $41,000.

For surveying and marking the boundary of the reservation of lands, stipulated in the first article of the treaty of the 16th of March, 1854, $1,200.

The next of this series of amendments is, to strike out from the appropriation for the Ottos and Missourias these words:

"For education, during the pleasure of the President, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 21st of September, 1833, $500"— and to insert, at the end of the appropriations for the Ottos and Missourias, the following:

For fulfilling the stipulations contained in the fifth article of the treaty of the 15th of March, 1854, $20,000.

For surveying and marking the boundary of the reservation lands, stipulated in the first article of the treaty of the 15th of March, 1854, $800.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I now offer two amendments from the Committee on Indian Affairs, one of which is to carry into effect a treaty lately ratified by the Senate, which was concluded with the Rogue River Indians in Oregon; and the other, a treaty with a band of the Umpqua tribe of Indians of Oregon. They are both in strict pursuance of treaty stipulations. The first of these amendments is, to insert, after the appropriations for the Quapaws, the following:

Rogue Rivers.—For first of sixteen installments in blankets, clothing, farming utensils, and stocks, stipulated in the third article of the treaty of the 10th of September, 1853, $2,500.

For the purchase of agricultural implements, clothing, and such other articles as may be deemed conducive to the comfort and necessities of said Indians, and for the expenses of such permanent improvements as may have been made by claimants to land on the reserves named in the second article of the treaty, stipulated by the third article of the treaty of the 10th of September, 1853, $5,000.

For payment of the property of the whites destroyed in the late war, stipulated in the third article of the treaty of the 10th of September, 1853, $5,000.

For the erection of three dwelling houses for the principal chiefs of said tribe, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 10th of September, 1853, $1,500.

Provided, That no payment shall be made to said Rogue River Indians, or to claimants referred to in these provisions, until said tribe shall have assented to the amendments of the Senate of the United States to the treaty on account of which these several sums are appropriated.

The second of these amendments is to add, before the provision for the Utahs, the following:

Umpquas—Cow Creek Band.—For first of twenty installments in blankets, clothing, provisions, and stock, stipulated in the third article of the treaty of the 19th of September, 1853, $550.

For the purchase of blankets, clothing, and goods, stipulated in the first clause of the third article of the treaty of the 19th of September, 1853, $1,000.

For the erection of two dwelling houses, plowing and fencing field, and purchasing seed, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of the 19th of September, 1853, $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next amendment of the committee is to insert, after the appropriation for incidental expenses of Indian service in Oregon Territory,

For expenses of insurance and transportation of annuities payable to Indians in the Territory of Oregon, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next amendment of the committee is to insert, under the head of "Texas Indians,"

For the expenses of making the necessary selections and surveys of lands to accommodate the Indians residing within the State of Texas, agreeably to arrangements authorized by an act of the Legislature of that State, allowing the requisite jurisdiction of the Government of the United States for such purposes, and for concentrating and subsisting them, and furnishing suitable stock, cattle, agricultural implements, seeds, and other necessary articles incident thereto, $86,430.

Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to carry out a policy which the Senate has lately approved in more than one instance within the recollection of the body, for changing the administration of Indian affairs in our distant Territories and States. It proposes to enable the Indian authorities in Texas to collect the wandering and numerous tribes of Indians within the territorial limits of that State, and to teach them the habits of settled life, and endeavor to induce them to follow agricultural pursuits. That measure is specifically recommended by the Department, upon the estimate of a very practical man, the present incumbent of the office of Indian agent in that country, Mr. Neighbors—a man who has an extensive reputation as one of the best Indian agents on the western frontier. I have seen the estimates, and I think they are upon a very moderate scale; and I shall be truly gratified if the project sought to be carried out can be accomplished within the means proposed to be appropriated.

The difficulty in this matter heretofore has been, that the State of Texas, having the sovereignty and entire jurisdiction over the whole territory, had not ceded it to the United States, so that we were unable to effect any arrangement with the Indians for civilizing them, or taking care of them. She has now, by an act or resolution of her Legislature, granted that jurisdiction, and given us the right to select lands out of her own domain, leaving the Federal Government only the remaining expense of collecting the Indians upon the reservations which she proposes to give us.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to know, from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, if this sum of $86,000 is the amount estimated for?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It is the precise sum of Major Neighbors's estimate.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to know whether the appropriation is to be for purchasing the lands, or collecting the Indians on them?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. For collecting the Indians, and furnishing them with agricultural implements. Texas has granted us the lands.

Mr. HUNTER. How much?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. A sufficient quantity for the purpose.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know that we can do anything better than agree to this; but it seems to me to be an innovation upon our old policy. The General Government has no public lands in Texas; and no jurisdiction there over either lands or Indians, so far as I know. The jurisdiction of the State of Texas is exclusive. It seems, however, that there have been difficulties between the Indians and the government of Texas; and, perhaps, in order to prevent trouble, and collision, and war, it may be better for the United States to take upon themselves the charge and care of these Indians. I suppose this is but the commencement of that system. How much further it will go I do not know. It would be as well for the Senate to consider that question.

I am not opposing the amendment, for I am inclined to think that we shall have to adopt some policy like that which it proposes. But it would be as well for the Senate to consider how far they are disposed to adopt a new policy in regard to the Indians within the States; and I rose simply to call the attention of the Senate to that question. Perhaps, in order to keep the peace, and prevent collisions between the whites and Indians, it would be better to adopt some such policy as this in regard to reservations where jurisdiction has been ceded to us, as has been done in the case of Texas.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, I have no sort of doubt that this will be an economical measure on the part of the Government, and extremely beneficial to the Indians. The Government has now a great many posts in the State of Texas, and they are kept up at a very large expense, for the purpose of defending the frontier against the depredations of these Indians. The frontier is so long, and the posts are so far scattered, that they do not effectually prevent depredations on the part of these wandering tribes, the Camanches and others. I may here mention that there are other Indians there belonging to other portions of the United States who had no right to come there. The game is giving out, and the only thing they have left to subsist upon with any certainty, is the horses and mules they can steal from the citizens of Texas or from the citizens of Mexico.

During the last summer I was out through this Indian country, and saw these tribes of Indians. I found that many of them were in a starving condition. I met with all the southern bands of Camanches, and I found them in a starving condition. They are forced to steal or to starve. The estimate of Mr. Neighbors, I think, is a very low one. We have adopted this policy in regard to California at a much higher cost. Perhaps that was proper, owing to the higher prices of the necessary articles there. The women, children, and old men of these Indians informed me that they were ready to go to work, and to farm, and they wanted to do so. The agent who has been out among them has made the necessary calculations, and thinks the sum named in the amendment will be sufficient to enable him to get the necessary stock, provisions, and cattle, and settle them down to labor and work for something to live upon.

Mr. BRODHEAD. How many of these Indians are there?

Mr. RUSK. That is a difficult question to answer. I suppose, when I was there last summer, there were three thousand of them; but a much larger portion of the Camanches were still further north. These Indians pass backwards and forwards, up and down the country. They have no settled habitation. Those that I saw were a little over three thousand. Sometimes many of them go north, following the buffalo and other game. Sometimes they pass over into Mexico, and sometimes into New Mexico; and at other times a very large number of the northern Camanches are assembled there together.

I regard the sum proposed as little enough. The agent who has been there, and who is very familiar with them, regards it as necessary, and thinks he can make the experiment for this sum. My opinion is, that this appropriation will do more to preserve peace on the frontier than five times the amount expended in a military force; and I am satisfied it will relieve the Indians from great suffering.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I am also instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the appropriations for the Sioux of Mississippi:

That the President be authorized to confirm to the Sioux of Minnesota forever, the reserve on the Minnesota river now occupied by them, and to embrace the country lying between the Little Maraga and the St. Peter's rivers, upon such conditions as he may deem just. And, further, that it be agreed between the United States and the Sioux band of Indians, that, should it at any time hereafter be considered by the United States as a proper policy to establish farms among them, and for the benefit of said Indians, it shall be discretionary with the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to change the annuities herein provided for, or any part thereof, into a fund for that purpose.

The object of this amendment, Mr. President, is to confirm to the Sioux nation of Indians in Minnesota, as a permanent home, that reservation upon which they are now located for a temporary purpose. It will be remembered, that the Senate amended the treaty of 1851, so as to take away from them the reserve for which they had provided in the original treaty, and required the President to purchase and acquire for them territory outside the limits of Minnesota. In attempting to execute that provision, however, he found it to be impracticable; and, under the general authority conferred on him by the treaty, he located them on the reserve provided for in the treaty, but which the Senate struck out. The license, for it amounts to nothing more than that, which he extended to them to reside on that reservation, expires in five years. In the mean time, under the treaty, different provisions were made for establishing farms, building school-houses, furnishing them with agricultural implements, and all such provisions as are made in favor of those who are permanently fixed upon the soil.

The consequence is, that if the Sioux be driven from that reserve at the end of five years, all that we shall have gained in the mean time in civilizing them, and elevating their social and physical condition, will be entirely lost, and the money not only squandered, but worse than squandered. Inasmuch, therefore, as it is ascertained that we have no place to which to remove them, not occupied by other Indians, and secured under treaty stipulations, it is proposed to locate them permanently on the reserve where they are now temporarily located under the arrangement made by the President. It is understood, that the authorities and Territorial Legislature of Minnesota have agreed to the location of the Sioux there. The provision is recommended by the Department, and by the Indian agent for that tribe.

It is conceded, I believe, in all quarters, by those best informed about the matter, that the lands now reserved for their use, are in that portion which is least valuable, and which will probably be the last reached by the white man in the onward march of white population. The hope is, that by that time they will be so fixed to the soil that they can make it their final and permanent resting place, if such a thing can be found for an Indian at all. It is an expedient of necessity to which we are compelled to resort. They are satisfied with this location, and desire very much to be permanently settled there.

The amendment, as proposed by the committee, goes further than the original boundaries of the reserve in the treaty, and establishes, by the acquisition of a small amount of additional territory, the natural boundary of a river, instead of the artificial and arbitrary line which was to bound the southeastern part of the country under the treaty. This addition gives them a small tract of wooded country, which is very much desired by one of their prominent chiefs, Little Crow, now in this city, and it is but an act of justice to give it to them for a small consideration, and maintain the policy of the Government in the location of the Indians, which is to give them fixed and permanent homes, instead of keeping them continually floating about with the fluctuations of the white population.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next amendment of the committee is to insert:

For settling the accounts of W. A. Gorman, superintendent of Indian affairs of Minnesota, for services in taking testimony and investigating certain charges preferred against the Hon. Alexander Ramsay, late Governor, &c., by appointment of the President of the United States, under the resolution of the Senate of the United States, of the 3d of April, 1853, $1,416;

For expenses of witnesses in said case, summoned on behalf of respondent, and for copying the evidence, $80 00.

The first item in this amendment is estimated for, and recommended in the official documents on the files of the Senate, by the proper Department. The appropriation is for arrearages of expenses incurred in carrying out the resolution of the Senate, passed at the last session, requiring an investigation to be made into the official conduct of Governor Ramsay. That investigation, as will be remembered, was turned over to the President. The proper Department, the Secretary of the Interior, has paid a portion of these expenses out of the contingent fund of that Department; but for some reason did not pay the balance. I believe he came to the conclusion that the payment was not chargeable to the contingent fund of that Department, but should be made out of the contingent fund of the Senate. The Senate has paid a portion of the expenses, for instance, the per diem of Judge Young, one of the commissioners, out of its contingent fund; but there is still a balance remaining, as embraced in this amendment, of expenses incurred in the execution of that resolution, not yet paid out of any fund. They certainly constitute a legitimate charge upon some Department, or upon some fund; and we propose to ingraft them, where we think they most properly belong—upon the general Indian appropriation bill.

The details of the estimate provide for the payment of Governor Gorman, the other commissioner, at the same rate as Judge Young, for a shorter period, and for the payment of the marshal and attorney employed, at the usual rate, and of the witnesses in attendance. The second item, embraces an amount of $250, which we believe to be a reasonable allowance to the person employed by Judge Young to copy, arrange, and methodize the evidence taken; which is a very large volume, and would amount, I suppose, to a large printed octavo volume. The other $350, making up the $600, is estimated for the purpose of covering the expenses of witnesses summoned by the Government at the instance of Governor Ramsay himself. It is believed that this was a proper charge, as part of the expenses, and ought to be paid equally with the witnesses summoned on the part of the United States. No specific return of the expenses of these witnesses has been made; but it was suggested by Governor Ramsay himself, that $350 would be sufficient to cover the amount. It is in that way that the appropriation is asked for.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to know of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, of what items the allowance of $1,416 to Governor Gorman is composed?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. That amount is not for Governor Gorman alone, but it includes the sum to be paid to the marshal and to the attorney.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to know whether the resolution of the Senate required the Governor to discharge this duty. It seems to me to be improper thus to add to the emoluments of one officer.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Virginia, I will state that I have in my hand an estimate of the items making up that aggregate of $1,416, and I ask that it be read, in order that the Senator may see of what items this sum is made up.

The Secretary read the statement, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, SAINT PAUL.
The United States in account with W. A. Gorman.
For services in taking testimony and investigating certain charges preferred against Hon. Alexander Ramsay, late Governor, &c., by appointment by the President of the United States under the resolution of the United States Senate.
From 4th July till 1st day of October, 1853, 87 days, stationery, &c., at $8 per day.....	$696 00
Services of Lafayette Emmett, Esq., attorney general of Minnesota, called by the commissioners to represent the Government, $5 per day.....	435 00
For services of William B. Dodd, Esq., as deputy marshal in serving subpoenas, returns, mileage, &c.....	160 00
Services of Robert A. Smith for copying records of evidence.....	75 00
To J. M. Stone, for services as notary public in personal attendance, swearing witnesses during the whole investigation.....	50 00
	$1,416 00

I certify that the above account is just, as allowed by the commissioners, and is due and unpaid.

W. A. GORMAN.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe that it is right to pay an officer liberally for services which he discharges under his appointment, but it seems to me that it is improper to be heaping upon one officer employments and emoluments in this way. If the resolution of the Senate required the Governor to execute these duties, I suppose he would be entitled to some additional compensation. I should like to know who estimates for this sum—whether the amount is allowed at the Department, or whether it is a mere charge made by Governor Gorman himself?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The President of the United States, in carrying out the resolution of the Senate, conferred the authority to make this investigation on Governor Gorman, who was then, and is now, the superintendent of Indian affairs in that Territory, and Judge Young. He associated them together for the purpose of carrying on that investigation. Now, wherever we allow emoluments to a commissioner of this sort, it is at the rate of eight dollars a day. I think that analogy is preserved for the rates of compensation to all persons acting as commissioners for the Government. That compensation has been paid by the resolution of the Senate to Judge Young, and expressly promised in the letter of appointment to that gentleman. Governor Gorman performed the same service, but for a shorter period of time, and asks for exactly the same compensation per day whilst he was engaged in what he contends, and I think very properly, to have been an extra official duty, something not contemplated, and certainly beyond the sphere of his ordinary official duties. His business as Governor of the Territory and Superintendent of Indian Affairs, does not necessarily impose upon him, by virtue of those offices, the duty of performing extra official labor as a commissioner of the United States, to investigate charges of misconduct against any officer. I think, therefore, if this compensation is not allowed by law, it is proper that we should allow it by this appropriation. The question whether he is allowed by the existing laws for extra official services or not, is a question which I am not able to decide; probably he is not, but the effect of the appropriation, if the Senate agree to it, will be to make him this allowance; and it is for that purpose we have offered the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I can only say that I think it an exceedingly bad precedent to establish, to allow Governors of Territories to receive additional offices and emoluments. It is supposed that the duties imposed upon them in relation to the Territories themselves, and the superintendency of Indian affairs, fully occupy their time. I think, sir, that when such inquiries as these are proposed, or such appointments are to be made, it will be better to employ persons who are not engaged in another capacity in the service of the United States.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance will withdraw his objection to this appropriation. This gentleman, holding a particular office, was called upon by the joint action, I may say, of the Senate and of the President, to institute an inquiry in its nature judicial, troublesome, vexatious, having no connection whatever with the appropriate duties of his office. He was asked to do it by the President. He was directed to do it by the President. And this has been done in consequence of the Senate having refused to institute the investigation, and having turned it over to the Executive branch of the Government as the most proper place in which the investigation should be carried on. I do think he ought to be paid for those services. They had no connection in the world, in my opinion, with the office which he held. I will stand by my friend from Virginia, as he knows, in resisting all improper charges against the Treasury; but I think he ought not to resist this.

Mr. DAWSON. As I understand the matter, Governor Ramsay was in office as Governor of Minnesota and superintendent of Indian affairs in that Territory, and was succeeded by Governor Gorman. An investigation was instituted into the conduct of Governor Ramsay as Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs in that Territory. Now the question raised by my friend from Virginia, as I understand it, is this: whether it was not a part of the duty of Governor Gorman, in settling with his predecessor, Governor Ramsay, to ascertain the state and condition of the affairs in relation to the superintendency prior to his going in? It is, whether the very object of his appointment was not to carry on these unfinished affairs, and see that they had been correctly administered before. Now, as I understand it, Governor Gorman was in office when this inquiry was instituted.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to correct a misapprehension into which I think he has fallen?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly; I wish to know the facts.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Governor Gorman succeeded Governor Ramsay with the change of Administration; but it was not the duty of the successor of Governor Ramsay to settle with him, Governor Ramsay has settled with the Department. Probably some funds left in his possession were ordered to be turned over to his successor; but the charges in relation to official misconduct brought against Governor Ramsay did not originate with Governor Gorman; on the contrary, those charges were preferred before he was appointed. They were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, who took the matter into consideration, and, finding that they were incompetent to carry on an investigation here into a case, the facts of which could be collected only in Minnesota, they asked to be discharged, and were discharged, by a resolution in this body, from the further consideration of the subject. They reported a resolution, which was adopted, asking the President of the United States to cause the official conduct of Governor Ramsay to be investigated, in such manner as he might see proper, and cause a report of the proceedings to be made to the Senate. Under this resolution of the Senate, the President of the United States appointed Judge Young and Governor Gorman commissioners. Under that appointment this duty was discharged and these expenses incurred.

Mr. DAWSON. Then Governor Gorman was superintendent of Indian affairs when the investigation took place?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Certainly.

Mr. DAWSON. And it was in the discharge of his duty as Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs, inquiring into the previous conduct of his predecessor—

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I beg the Senator to allow me to correct him. This investigation was not made by Governor Gorman in his character of Governor or superintendent; but it was under a special appointment by the President of the United States, as commissioner for that purpose alone, by virtue of a resolution of the Senate.

Mr. DAWSON. My idea is, that when he was appointed superintendent of Indian affairs, it was his duty to assume the position of his predecessor, and to examine whether his predecessor had been guilty of any error or impropriety. The very object of sending him there was to discharge that duty. He was sent there at a salary of $2,500 a year; and yet you propose to give him eight dollars a day for investigating the very business in regard to which he was appointed a superintendent by the Government. Now, it is said, he was appointed in a distinct character as commissioner, separate from his gubernatorial and superintending character, giving him a third appointment. What was the object of the third appointment? To inquire into the very duties incumbent on him as Governor and superintendent, and as agent of the Government to see what his predecessor had done. It was his duty to correct any errors of which his predecessor might have been guilty in the discharge of his office. I have no particular objection to paying Governor Gorman, but I like to see principles adhered to in these matters.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to correct him on one point? The resolution of the Senate directed the President to appoint commissioners to make this investigation. The President, therefore, could have appointed any commissioners he pleased. He chose to appoint Governor Gorman as one of the commissioners. Now, suppose he had appointed some other man as commissioner, should we not be bound to pay him? We have paid the other commissioner, as I understand, and should we not have been bound to pay the second, if Governor Gorman had not been appointed?

Mr. DAWSON. Undoubtedly; but still it was the duty of Governor Gorman to make this further inquiry when ordered by the Government, and it is no extra service at all. It is the very duty which he was appointed to perform. That is the ground which I occupy in relation to it. If I had been appointed to go there, of course it would be disconnected altogether from any duty incumbent on me as an officer of the Government. But the duty of Governor Gorman, as superintendent of Indian affairs, was connected with this question. This, I understand to be the view of the Senator from Virginia, and the only question which I have to propound is, shall we pay him an additional eight dollars per day, for investigating affairs, which it was incumbent on him to superintend and investigate anyhow? That is the point.

Mr. PETTIT. This matter stands precisely thus: At the last session, charges were presented to the Senate against Governor Ramsay, for peculation in his office of superintendent of Indian affairs, not as Governor, before the present Administration came in. An investigation was attempted in the Committee on Indian Affairs. They proceeded to some extent in taking testimony, but they discovered that they could not accomplish it here. Therefore, just at the close of the session, a resolution was offered from the committee, by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. WALKER,] that there should be one Senator appointed or detailed from the committee during vacation, to proceed to Minnesota, and to such other places as might be deemed necessary—it was then thought that it would perhaps be necessary to go to New York, and take some evidence in regard to deposits of money in a bank there—to take evidence, and report it to the Senate at this session. That resolution underwent various phases. A proposition was made to extend the number of Senators to be sent out to three. It was debated at some considerable length. Various propositions and amendments were offered; but, finally, it resolved itself into a resolution of this kind—and the records of the Senate will show it—that the President cause the question to be fully investigated during the recess of the Senate. Thereupon, after the Senate adjourned, after Governor Gorman had been appointed as Governor, and after he took charge of the duties prescribed by law, this additional duty was imposed on him. Let it be remembered that the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs and of Governor of a Territory are prescribed by law. The resolution of the Senate did not direct by whose hands the President should make the investigation, but that he should cause the charges to be investigated. The President associated with Governor Gorman, Judge Young, of this city, to make the investigation.

Judge Young presented his claim to the Senate two months ago or more. It amounted to over $900. By a resolution it was directed to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate. The deficiency bill has an express provision in it, making up to the contingent fund of the Senate that $900 paid to Judge Young for his services. Now, Governor Gorman comes in, and asks that he shall be allowed as much per day as Judge Young was allowed for the additional duties superadded to those of superintendent of Indian affairs and Governor of the Territory. Can there be any thing fairer or plainer? It did not belong or pertain to his duties as Governor of the Territory, or as superintendent of Indian affairs. It was an additional duty. The President might have appointed whomsoever he pleased to perform it. He did appoint one. It was an onerous and unpleasant duty for Governor Gorman to undertake to investigate the official conduct of his predecessor. It did not devolve on him by virtue of his official relation as successor to Governor Ramsay. The President might have appointed whomsoever he pleased. He was not compelled to appoint Governor Gorman. It did not appertain to him as Governor; but he was specially appointed by a letter from the Department, under the direction of the President, to make the investigation. He and Judge Young made it together. Judge Young rendered service more days than Governor Gorman; hence his bill is larger—between $900 and $1,000—while Governor Gorman's is about $690. This, then, is the whole matter. Additional services were imposed on Governor Gorman, apart from the duties of his office; and the question is, shall he be paid for them? The whole $1,400 is not for his pay, but for the subordinate officers also—the marshal and attorney, and for summoning witnesses. It seems to me, no more legitimate appropriation could be made. It is certainly in the legitimate place, and upon the proper bill.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I find that the resolution of the Senate was as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to cause to be investigated the charges of fraud and misconduct in office alleged against Alexander Ramsay, superintendent of Indian affairs in Minnesota, which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs by the resolution of the 10th of January last, and to report the results of such investigation to the Senate at the next session of Congress, and a record of the proceedings of said committee, under said resolution, be referred to the President, and be subject to such order as he may make thereon.

Now, it seems to me, it was the official duty of Governor Gorman, who was also superintendent of Indian affairs, to make this investigation, if he was directed to do it by the President. I know that at the time it was said it would cost nothing, so far as it was executed by the Governor of the Territory and superintendent of Indian affairs in that Territory. I have no objection to seeing a full remuneration given to Governor Gorman for all his services, but I object to the principle of this amendment; I object to giving extra compensation to an officer for discharging duties which properly belong to his office. It seems to me that is what we are doing. But I understand that there is no recommendation from the Department for this. Am I rightly informed?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The accounts are certified to be correct.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know that there is any recommendation. I did not hear the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs say that there was.

Mr. BRIGHT. The resolution read by the honorable Senator from Virginia shows very clearly that this subject has been in the keeping of the President of the United States; that, by the terms of the resolution, he was directed to cause this investigation to be made. He has made, I believe, his report to this body; and I think if it was proper to pay a claim for services arising under that appointment, it was proper for the Executive to say so. I believe the President has not recommended that the Governor of Minnesota be paid for his services, and furthermore, when the United States employ, as in this case, the Governor of a Territory, do they not employ all his time? Upon the same principle that you would give to Governor Gorman in this case eight dollars per day for services as a commissioner, you would give to a public officer, who belongs to the Army, and is detailed to supervise the erection of the two wings of the Capitol which we are building, so much per day for that service. Upon the same principle you would give the Attorney General, who is applied to for his opinion week after week, by different committees, a regular fee for his opinions.

Now, sir, I am against the principle. It is wrong. It is demoralizing in its tendencies. When we employ an officer, as in this case, and give him a regular salary, he has no right to claim anything in addition for his time. I recollect very well, as stated by the Senator from Virginia, that when this question was presented before, one of the reasons assigned for raising this board was, that it would cost nothing; that it would, ex officio, come within the duties of the Governor. That was a reason stated at the time the resolution was presented; and it is a sufficient one to operate on my mind against voting for the appropriation. But, independent of that, the precedent is wrong. There are hundreds of other officers who might liken their case to this, and claim additional compensation for their services; and their claim would be as just and meritorious.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have looked into the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, and find that there is a distinct estimate for this. A certified account of Governor Gorman is transmitted with the estimate; but the Secretary declined to make a recommendation, for the simple reason that he deemed it a charge on the contingent fund of the Senate. That is his sole reason. It certainly must be a charge against some Department of the Government.

Mr. COOPER. I think my friend from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] is wrong in the comparison he has instituted between officers of the Army detailed to perform some particular service, and the case which is pending here. Governor Gorman was not discharged from any of his duties as Governor of Minnesota, nor as superintendent of Indian affairs. He was in the performance of those duties at the same time. There is no objection that Governor Gorman left unperformed any of his duties, either as Governor or superintendent. This additional duty was imposed upon him by the President of the United States. He gave to it his attention. It occupied time that might have been employed in his private affairs, without injury to the public service; and why is it that he ought not to be paid, as well as if some person, not officially connected with the Government, had been employed.

Sir, I do not remember that any such ground, as that mentioned by the Senator from Indiana, or that assumed by the Senator from Virginia, was the reason why this question was referred to the Executive. If I remember rightly, nothing of that kind was said; at least nothing of a character to bind us now under the circumstances. The President might have selected any other person. It was not incumbent upon him by the resolution of the Senate, if I remember aright, to appoint Governor Gorman for this purpose. He might have selected any other person, and commissioned him to do this duty; but, I presume, supposing, from his connection with the Indians of the Territory, that he would be better informed, and have access to reliable information with greater facility than any other person, he was selected by the President.

I can see no reason why he should not be paid; and the only hardship in connection with the case is, that Governor Ramsay should not be indemnified. He, as it turned out, had performed all his duties. He had neglected no duty; he had violated no duty; yet, in defending himself, he was called upon to expend a very large sum of money. My objection to the amendment is, that it does not make provision to pay him the money which he actually expended. I would not ask that he should be paid for his time, for it is one of the risks that official personages run; but he ought to be paid for the necessary expenditures incurred in his defense. He was a Government officer; he was not only defending himself, but he was defending the character of the Government, whose agent he was; and in justice and equity, he is entitled to remuneration for his outlays.

I do not know whether, under the rules of the Senate, an amendment to this amendment would be proper, but if so I would introduce one to provide that his accounts should be settled by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, and that he should be allowed for the witnesses whom he subpoenaed to testify as to the correctness of his conduct in the negotiation of the treaties, and in the payment of the money, in regard to which he was accused, as well as for the sums expended in the employment of counsel, necessary for his defense. It would be but justice, sheer justice. I hope, however, that the amendment of the committee will be adopted, and that hereafter, if not now, Governor Ramsay also will be indemnified.

Mr. CHASE. I have no doubt, whatever, that Governor Ramsay is better entitled to compensation than this gentleman. He was accused of malfeasance in office. A protracted investigation was had, the result of which was, as I understand, his complete exoneration from every charge made against him. In making his defense, he was put to considerable expense. I am not, however, of opinion that in any case, any person who is prosecuted by the Government of the United States is entitled to indemnity on account of the expenses to which he is put in that prosecution. It would be carrying the doctrine of indemnity very far. Much less am I of opinion that an officer of the United States, detached for the performance of a particular duty, is entitled to extra compensation whilst in the performance of that duty. I do not now recollect a single instance in which any such proposition has ever received the sanction of the Senate. There are instances of this sort, where an officer in the civil service of the Government has been employed to perform the duties of an office of superior rank, and having a larger salary, temporarily, he is allowed the difference between the salary of his office and the higher salary, but never both. In the case of the Superintendent of the Census, that matter was before us, and we uniformly refused to allow the officer both salaries; in fact, I believe he did not claim them, but only claimed the higher salary, and we refused even to allow him that. So in the case of an officer in the military service of the country. If extra or special duties are devolved upon him, as the Senator from Indiana stated, such as to take charge of the construction of the wings of this Capitol, or to take charge of any public work, or of an armory, nobody ever thinks of allowing him additional compensation on account of the time during which he is engaged in that service.

This case falls precisely within that principle. Here is a gentleman receiving a salary of $2,500 as Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs of the Territory of Minnesota, and in the discharge of the duties of that office, he is called upon to make a special investigation. Nobody says his salary is not ample. The Governor of the State of Iowa, upon one side of him, receives $1,000 a year, and the Governor of the State of Wisconsin, also adjoining the same Territory, receives $1,500 a year. Here is a gentleman who is paid out of the Federal Treasury a full compensation, and now he asks an additional compensation, at the rate of eight dollars a day, for extra services. I agree with the Senator from Indiana, that this is wrong, and that to establish this principle would lead to the appointment of persons already in official stations, and rewarding them at the pleasure of the Executive, for special services. It is wrong, and certainly would tend to bad results.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia, chairman of the Committee on Finance, to the fact, that the whole of the opposition to this amendment is entirely in consequence of one item, and there is no objection to the remainder. If the Senator chooses to controvert the propriety of this extra allowance to Governor Gorman, I would suggest to him that he move for a reduction of the amount, so that the other claims to which no objection at all is made, may be paid.

Mr. BRIGHT. My objections reach the entire amendment. Whenever the President makes a recommendation in reference to these charges, he having had the care of the commission, it will be time enough for us to act upon it. I object to the entire amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until tomorrow morning. I make this motion for the purpose of moving afterwards, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 26, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS, ETC.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I have some estimates here, received by the Committee of Ways and Means, in relation to the surveying of the public lands in the State of California, which estimates I desire to have printed in advance of the proposition to act upon them. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the House to have them printed.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Committee of Ways and Means have also received, Mr. Speaker, the post office estimates; and they have instructed me to report a bill which I would like to have printed and put upon the Calendar. If it be the will of the House, therefore, I will make the motion to that effect.

There being no objection, the following bill was introduced, read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1855.

SALARIES OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I have been instructed by the Judiciary Committee to present a bill to the House for the regulation of the salaries of the district judges of the United States. I therefore ask leave of the House to introduce it, for the purpose of having it printed and referred.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill to regulate the salaries of the district judges of the United States.

EXPENSES OF INDIAN AGGRESSIONS.

Mr. McDUGALL, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs, with a report and amendment; the bill to refund to the State of California, the expenses incurred in suppressing Indian hostilities in that State; which was read, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

Mr. McDUGALL. I give notice now, that it is my intention to move this bill as an amendment to the military appropriation bill, whenever that bill shall be taken up for consideration.

SALARIES OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a privileged question. I understand that the bill to readjust the salaries of the district judges of the United States has been reported this morning from the Judiciary Committee by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. PARKER,] and with a motion of reference, which has succeeded in referring it back to that same committee. I move to reconsider the vote by which that reference was made, for the purpose of moving to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Committee on the Judiciary has just reported the bill this morning, and why now refer it immediately back to them? I can see no good reason for it, and therefore I move to reconsider the vote of reference.

Mr. PARKER. I hope that will not be done. Mr. HAVEN. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] will not be sustained by the House, because the evident intention of the Committee on the Judiciary was to give to the bill the direction which it has received. It is one of those bills which call for action, and this is the only way in which it can receive intelligent action, after it shall have been printed and laid upon the tables of members.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is one of those bills which are more particularly cared for in this House than others, because, I presume, it raises the salaries of the judges. Now, if we are to dodge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in regard to all these bills in this way, I think we had better abolish that committee altogether. If it was proper and right to send those bills to that committee which have already been sent there, why not let this bill take the course of other bills, and thereby allow an opportunity for their discussion?

I presume my friend from Indiana, [Mr. PARKER,] and also my friend from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] voted to refer the Nebraska bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the reason that it might have a free and full discussion upon its merits. If that bill was properly referred, and if other bills should go there too, why should this bill, which proposes to increase the salaries of the district judges of the United States, be exempt from the same order of the House to which other bills are subjected?

* If gentlemen will not consume too much of the time of the House upon the appropriation bills, by a general and irrelevant discussion, we can take up all the bills which are upon the Calendar in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and we can yet, although the session is half gone—and it would have been all gone, if we had pressed forward business as we should—I say we can yet take up all the bills upon that Calendar, and pass the first and last of them. We have actually spent more time this session in attempts to avoid the reference of bills to that committee, than would have been consumed in taking them up from the Calendar and disposing of them.

Mr. LETCHER. It seems to me that about the most reasonable proposition that I have heard coming from any of the committees, is with regard to this bill which has been brought before the House for consideration. For the last month committees have been reporting here, and, without giving anybody an opportunity to examine them, these bills have been put upon their passage and immediately passed by the House. It is not a week since the clerks' bill was introduced here by a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, and, under the direction of that committee, immediately put upon its passage.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask my friend from Virginia to allow me to say that the Committee of Ways and Means gave no such direction, and contemplated no such action. The Committee of Ways and Means directed that bill to be reported with a substitute, but they did not give instructions to have it put upon its passage.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, it was reported here by the Committee of Ways and Means, and with a recommendation upon the part of that committee that it be put upon its passage; and upon the motion of a member of that committee it was put upon its passage, and the previous question called upon it.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman is mistaken. It certainly was not put upon its passage by the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means. The committee contemplated no such thing, that I ever heard of. As one member of that committee, I was very much astonished when I heard the bill had been put upon its passage. My wish was, that it should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I think that was the wish of a majority of the members of the committee.

Mr. ROBBINS. I wish to state, as a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, that I was instructed by that committee to report this bill, to which allusion has been made, with a substitute. I did as I was instructed to do; and the House, by a two-third vote, put it upon its passage. That is the history of the matter. There was nothing unfair or dishonorable about it.

Mr. LETCHER. Nobody has charged that there was anything unfair or dishonorable.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to allow me to say a word in reference to this matter. It is within the recollection of the Chair, I doubt not, and within the recollection of the gentleman from Virginia, and of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who reported this clerk's bill, that when it was reported I raised the question that as it contained an appropriation it must of necessity go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that then the House, by a vote of nearly two to one, suspended the rule, and the bill was then put upon its passage. I will state, however, that upon suspending the rules I believe only one or two members of the Committee of Ways and Means voted in the affirmative.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not recollect how the members of the Committee of Ways and Means voted, except so far as the gentleman from Tennessee himself was concerned; but I recollect distinctly that the bill was introduced here by the Committee of Ways and Means, and put upon its passage by a two-third vote of the House; and not only that, but the previous question was called by the gentleman who introduced it, and sustained by the House, without affording any one an opportunity of speaking upon it, or of having its provisions amended in the slightest particular.

Now, sir, I do not charge anybody with impropriety in this matter. There is no impropriety about it. I claim that every gentleman has the right to regulate his own conduct here as his own sense of propriety may dictate, precisely as I regulate my own. Gentlemen will vote as they think proper; and whether their action or the action of the House is proper action, is for them and not for me to decide.

But, sir, I say these bills have come here from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and from the various committees, and without even being printed have been brought up for consideration, have been put upon their passage, and carried through under the operation of the previous question. Now, sir, why is it that objection is made for the first time to that course with reference to this bill, which has been introduced here to equalize the salaries of the judges?

Many of these district judges receive less compensation than the third class of clerks in the Departments of the Government—men, sir, who are employed continually for months, who perform hard physical labor in attending their courts. And when a proposition is made to equalize the salaries of these men, to place them on something like a clerk's platform, gentlemen of this House object to it. I hope, as the House has given this reference to the matter, and as the committee themselves have furnished to everybody the opportunity to examine this bill by desiring to have it printed and considered here in due form, when there is time to examine it, and familiarize ourselves with its provisions, that it will not reconsider the proposition as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama. I therefore move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the consideration of the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of a motion to recommit the bill granting lands equally to the several States to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the support of schools.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, the bill which I have had the honor to propose for the consideration of the House is similar to the one introduced by me at the last session of Congress; the object of which was to equalize the grants of land among the several States, so far as public lands are granted for certain public purposes, railroads, schools, and the like. That bill did not provide for giving to the States in which there was no public lands as large quantities as States in which it lay; but it did propose to give the public land to the several States for school, and railroad, and other public purposes, in something like equal proportions. That was the principle of that bill, and it is the principle of the present one.

I will state to the House that the bill, as now prepared, is different from the one of the last session. The bill of the last session proposed to give to the States in which there were no public land—the old States—a certain number of acres, according to representation, for schools; but if they chose, they could devote it to railroad or other public purposes; but the object of the grant was mainly for school purposes. It also provided that the new States should equalize their grants of the public land—for instance: Illinois had received a large amount of land for railroads and internal improvements, while Iowa, Wisconsin, and other new States, had only received small grants, or none at all, for the same objects. The proposition was that, as far as possible, the grants should be equalized; and the bill was drawn embracing all the States except those which were deemed to have already received sufficient. That bill was strongly objected to, by gentlemen from the West especially, as unequal in its provisions, and that, although it attempted to equalize the grants among the land States, it did not equalize them as among the land States themselves. That objection may be true to some extent, for in the very nature of things it is almost impossible to make a provision in any single bill which will make these grants equally to all the States.

But there was another objection urged with still more force: that, by giving the lands directly to the State Legislatures of the western States, they would not receive any benefit from them. By the law, in every western State and Territory, there is now every sixteenth section set apart for school purposes. These are devoted and applied to that purpose, consequently the western States desire, at least so their Representatives urge here, that the grants which are made to them shall be made, not for school purposes—those they have—but they want them applied for railroad purposes, to aid in constructing some of their many important lines of railroads. They urge that, under the bill of last session, the grants would be made to the State Legislature, and would be divided by the Legislature among all the railroads in the State, and the result would be that no one road could be completed, and they would all be involved in difficulty. It was universally urged by the Representatives from the West, that if any further grants are made to equalize the amounts given to the land States, they shall be made to the States to aid in constructing some specified line of railroad.

Mr. COBB. I have always protested against that, and I want the gentleman to make an exception of me.

Mr. BENNETT. At least most of the western Representatives take that ground.

Mr. COBB. Make an exception of me.

Mr. BENNETT. But that objection has been urged, and I have, therefore, changed the bill. The original bill is similar to the proposition of last session, embracing all the States; but the substitute which I have offered in lieu of the original bill simply provides for granting the same amount of land as the bill of last session did to the old States—that is, at the rate of one hundred and fifty thousand acres to each Senator and Representative, leaving out the land States—leaving those of them that have not yet received grants to frame bills that will make them equal to those that have. This bill cannot certainly be objected to as unequal; for amongst the old States, the States in which there are no public lands, there can be no fairer mode of distribution for these public purposes, if any such distribution is to be made, than that of representation—so much to each Representative and Senator; the Senators are included for the benefit of the smaller States. This bill, therefore, as far as it goes, would provide for an equal apportionment of the public lands for these purposes; and it leaves the land States that have not received grants equal to those which have been made to other land States, to apply to the Committee on Public Lands to have it settled by that committee how much they are entitled to. It therefore obviates the objection of any inequality in the grants. The bill embraces this principle, whether while these lands are being disposed of and dissipated for every possible purpose; whether, while they are being disposed of in part for these various purposes to the western States, the old States which have contributed their share towards the purchase and the expense of management, shall also have a proportionate share of the benefit of these grants for schools, railroads, and other public purposes.

Sir, this system has been pursued until the grants are now much beyond the sales. Last year the sales amounted to a little over one million acres; and at this very session there are applications here which will be reported on favorably by the committee for over fifteen millions of acres for railroads only.

We are met, however, with some very singular objections to this principle. Gentlemen seem to claim that these lands should be granted away, and devoted entirely for the benefit of individuals and corporations; that they should not be given to the States themselves, or only to a favored portion of the States which have a constitutional right to these grants of land, and the other portion of the States have no constitutional right to similar grants of land for precisely the same purposes.

Is there a different rule applicable to the State of New York, of Illinois, and between Virginia and Missouri? If it is constitutional to give the lands, which are public property, for school purposes, and for the education of children in one State, is it a violation of the Constitution to make the same disposition of lands in another State? Gentlemen who contend for that doctrine should be able to point out the provision in the Constitution which makes such a distinction, and tell us what it is, and where it is. Upon what principle are these grants in the land States made? Upon the ground that such grants are intended to promote education, and therefore tending to promote the public benefit and general welfare of the State. I ask whether the operation of this system would not be just as beneficial in the old States as in the new?

Let me illustrate this by stating a case. Take the State of Virginia, for example. That State ceded her public lands away to the United States, comprising all that vast territory that has since been formed into the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, I believe. When Virginia granted this immense territory to the United States, she expressly stipulated in the act of cession that these grants should be "used for the common benefit of all the States, Virginia included;" and yet Virginia, to this day, has never had the benefit of a single acre of land of all that vast territory, and this, too, while we have been giving the land in large and small grants to every one of the new States formed out of this territory, and even to other States. I contend, therefore, that this system of giving lands to a part of the States is unequal and unjust; and all I claim in this matter is justice and equality. As one of the members of the State of New York, I ask no more than a proportionate share of these lands for that State. I would not ask or vote for more than her just share; but I entirely disclaim the doctrine that these lands belong exclusively to the land States.

There has been growing in Congress, for a few years past, a kind of mania upon the subject of the public lands—to get rid of, and squander them as fast as possible, give away all we can, and sell the rest at a reduced price. As an instance of this,

I need only refer to the homestead bill, and to the land graduation bills which have passed the House this session; and there is an amendment offered to this bill, by which we are to surrender all right to the public lands, to give up the whole of these lands to the States within which they lie. I am opposed to this whole system of giving away the public lands. The original policy, the original land system, has been departed from, and grants of the public lands have been made, to a large extent, to the land States; and the question now is, is it right and just to make a similar provision, to a much less extent, for the benefit of the other States? Such grants will certainly prove as great an advantage to the old States for the purposes of education, for common schools, and for other purposes, as they will for the new States. It is certainly right, according to the very terms upon which these lands were originally ceded, that the old States should be entitled to their equal share in these grants; for they do not belong to the thirteen land States, but they belong, in common, to the whole thirty-one. The new States certainly have no right to claim the exclusive benefit of the lands, and they have no more right to claim an exclusive right to these grants than they have to claim an exclusive right to the money arising from the sales of the public lands, and which is paid into the Treasury.

This is a bill which everybody can understand. It gives to the old States something over twenty millions of acres to equalize—or rather as an equivalent, for it does not equalize—for the grants which have been made from time to time to the land States. Let me state further, that there have been granted for internal improvements, from time to time, as appears from the statement made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, over twenty-eight millions of acres of land, worth over $36,000,000, to the twelve land States exclusively. There has also been granted to the new States and to the Territories over forty-nine million acres of land for schools, worth over $61,000,000—

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman from New York permit me to make an inquiry at this point?

Mr. BENNETT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. The gentleman from New York stated a moment ago that the State of Virginia had never received an acre of these public lands, although her right to them was reserved. I beg to inquire of the gentleman if the proceeds of the sales of these lands do not go into the National Treasury, and whether if the State of Virginia does not, in this way, get her share of the benefits derived from them?

Mr. BENNETT. The proceeds of the sale of the public lands do undoubtedly go into the National Treasury, and in this way Virginia derives her share of the benefits accruing from them; but I am speaking now of grants of public lands, not of the sales. I admit, indeed, that so far as the lands are sold, and so far as the proceeds thereof are received in the Treasury, all the old States share equally and fairly in the benefit of them.

But the object of my remarks is to show that when we give the public lands to some States for particular and public purposes, all the States do not share equally in the advantage. A great injury has been thereby done to the interests of the old States in that respect; and the worst of it is, that the system of granting public lands for particular purposes has been rapidly increasing, and increasing until no sales of public lands worth speaking of are made. Under the operation of this system the land distributed in grants have of late exceeded to a great amount the lands sold. My object is that this sort of legislation be put an end to. First equalize the grants to all, and then stop short, and allow the lands to be sold.

The land States admit the rights of the old States. I have here a resolution from the State of Illinois, which was passed at the present session of the Legislature of that State, on the 20th March, 1854, in which the Legislature instruct their Senators, and request their Representatives in Congress, to exert all their influence to obtain the passage of a law donating to each State in the Union public lands, at the value of $500,000 to each, for school purposes. To each State of the Union! Here it is:

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring herein,) That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives be requested, to use their best exertions to procure the passage of a law of Congress donating to each State in the Union an amount of public lands not less in value than five hundred thousand dollars, for the liberal endowment of a system of industrial universities—one in each State in the Union—to cooperate with each other, and with the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, for the more liberal and practical education of our industrial classes and their teachers; a liberal and varied education, adapted to the manifold wants of a practical and enterprising people; and a provision for such educational facilities being in manifest concurrence with the intimations of the popular will, it urgently demands the united efforts of our national strength."

That is what they seek to have accomplished. And—as the paper states—that resolution was passed unanimously by the Legislature of the State of Illinois. While it is admitted that these lands belong to all the States, that they have cost an immense amount of money—and it is not necessary here to determine whether they have ever paid for themselves or not, although I think that I can show by official papers that they never have; but I will not go into that branch of the question at this time—and that this immense amount of money which they have cost has been paid by all the States: I say that while this is not denied, still the legislation has been, as far as grants are concerned, for the benefit of only a part of the Union, and that, too, of only a very small part. That sort of legislation is unequal and unjust. I contend that some provision should be made to make the public lands equally as well for the benefit of the old States as of the new. Or if not equal, at least some provision so that the old States should not be altogether excluded from participation in the benefits of these grants. Give to the old States, I say, some proportionate part of the public lands for school purposes in their several States, if you extend that privilege to the new States. If you give to the new States land for railroad purposes, give the same proportion of the lands for the same purpose to the old States. If this system of making grants for particular purposes is to be adhered to, let it be general, not local, in its operation. That is what I contend for.

It appears to be a question what should be done by Congress to dispose of these public lands more rapidly than at present? For instance, they are being disposed of just now as rapidly as legislation appears to be able to effect that object. But while we are going on getting rid of the public lands in this rapid way—while we are granting them away by millions, and millions, and millions of acres—certainly we ought to have some kind of fairness and equality in the distribution. The grants should be proportioned to all the States in the Union for the same public purposes.

I was going on, Mr. Speaker, when interrupted by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] to state that there had been granted to the land States—embracing some grants to the Territories—twenty-eight millions of acres of public land for the purposes of internal improvement, and that there were over forty-nine millions of acres granted to them for school purposes. That immense quantity of public land would have brought to the Treasury, if sold at Government prices, over $100,000,000. As equivalent to that, let me ask, what have the old States received? Nothing at all. And yet it is contended that these grants were constitutional. It is contended that these grants were authorized by the Constitution, and that grants for the same purposes to the old States would be unconstitutional. Now, I should like to know whether such legislation can be constitutional in one State, and yet unconstitutional in another? I do not want it to be said in reply that it was the policy of the Government to do so and so. But when the Constitution is referred to as authority, I should like to know whether or not the Constitution makes any difference between the several States of the Union as to the distribution of the public lands. I should have thought that the Constitution required equality in the distribution to be observed. It undoubtedly contains a reference to this subject, and requires equality in the distribution of the public lands. It requires that, in their distribution, the rights of no State shall be prejudiced; but that they shall be disposed of for the benefit of all, equally and fairly.

That is all I ask. I do not stand here to solicit the giving of land to New York, or to urge that you should make any gift to that State. I stand here to claim, that when you disposed of these lands for great public purposes, you shall dispose of them, as nearly as can be done, so as to confer equal benefits to the old and new States. We are told that the Constitution requires a pecuniary consideration in order to justify a grant of this kind. If I should attach to this bill the words "provided each State shall pay one dollar for the grant herein made," I suppose then, according to their view, the grant would be constitutional; but if I do not put in that proviso, then the grant is unconstitutional. Can anything be more ridiculous than to pretend that the power depends upon a pecuniary consideration? I insist that the power in Congress is perfect and original. It has always been so regarded, and has always been exercised. It could reside nowhere else. It is also expressly provided for in the Constitution. I say I have the same right, as good a right, to ask this grant for the benefit of schools in my State, as any gentleman has to ask it for any other State. And if this system is to go on, I do insist upon it that is the object of this bill.

Another thing: I wish western men to understand the reason why a provision for their States is omitted, is, that it is done at the request of western men themselves. They prefer to have their claim and their bills stand alone. They say that the claims of the land States stand upon a different principle; and if they should be included in this bill, they might be prejudiced in the Senate, and might meet with a veto from the President. They prefer to have this bill stand alone. I am content; and I am willing that they should take their bills alone.

I want to understand, by a vote of the House, whether those States which have paid millions and millions towards these public lands—for it will be found that the whole amount which they have paid is enormous—shall be entirely deprived of any benefit of them? The old States paid at least two thirds of the cost. Those States paying most should not be deprived entirely of all benefit from the lands which they so largely contributed to pay for. I would not be illiberal towards the western States; nor do I contend we do wrong when we make grants of the public domain to the land States for public purposes. But if it is right to make grants in one case, it is in other cases, and equally constitutional, equally just. Can the fairness and correctness of that position be answered? I contend that, if the Constitution gives the right to educate the children of the western States by a distribution of the public lands, or by the application of the proceeds thereof, it is equally right to educate the children of the old States in the same manner. The western States have, to a certain extent, had the benefit of these lands; and will you deny an appropriate share thereof to the old States?

The bill, as I have framed it, will not give to the old States, in proportion to their population, one half as much as has been already granted for internal improvement and school purposes to the land States, with the amount now asked for by them for such purposes. It would probably not amount to one third as much, perhaps not a fourth. Twenty eight millions of acres, or nearly that, have already been granted to them for internal improvements, and fifteen millions more are now asked, and over forty-nine million acres for schools; and their population is about one third as large as that of the old States. I am speaking without the figures before me, but I am substantially correct. I have not asked for as large a portion as they have already received; much less, not one half as much, in proportion, as has been granted and is now asked for.

The grants to the land States should also be equalized. It would be wrong to give the public lands to Illinois for railroads, and then deny to Iowa a similar grant, or deny the other land States which have not had a like donation; and this bill will lead to that.

If this bill passes, railroad bills will undoubtedly also pass, sufficient to render the land States equal, perhaps not during the present session of Congress, but they will, in my judgment, pass from time to time as asked for. The Committees on Public Lands in the House and Senate begin to see the necessity of adopting the principle of equalization in the distribution of the public lands among the land States. And, in reporting their railroad bills, they are determined—so far as I know—not to give any State a larger amount of land for railroads, than Illinois has received. They make the donations to that State the standard. They are willing to give to the other land States in that proportion, and to report bills from time to time, donating lands to the different States for public purposes, until they arrive at that point, and there stop. There is, therefore, no danger of the lands being expended beyond this limit for this purpose.

What I propose to do by this bill, is to donate over twenty million acres to the old States, for the purpose of equalizing the donations among the several States. I do not propose to give lands directly to the States, but to donate them in the form of land warrants, to be issued to the State, to be sold by the States, and to be located by purchasers precisely like other land warrants are located. This system of land warrants is no new system. It is a system established. Our military grants, &c., it is estimated, will take about fifty million acres of the public lands; of this, about twenty-four million have been issued in land warrants. These land warrants may, to a small extent, regulate the prices of the lands. But no injury can result from this.

But this bill forbids the States to locate the lands. The warrants are issued to them, and to be sold by them, and located by the purchasers themselves; and the only difference it can make in the operation of the system, as it is now carried out, will be, by throwing an increased number of those warrants into market, to reduce the price to a limited extent. That is all the effect the bill can have in this respect. It is also provided in the bill that preemption rights are to be protected to any person who may have located upon any of these lands. These warrants, too, are to be located only upon the surveyed lands which are in the market, and open for sale. In fact, this bill for the benefit of the old States is so carefully guarded that no inconvenience can result from its passage in the operation of the land system.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to debate this bill. I should have been willing to have made a brief explanation of the provisions of the bill, and then to have called the previous question. It contains but one principle, which all understand; but there are gentlemen in the Hall who are opposed to any grants of this kind upon the part of the Government, who have indicated their desire to speak upon it. I shall therefore content myself with stating, imperfectly as I have, the purport of the bill, without going at all into any argument in its favor, reserving to myself the right, when debate shall be closed upon it, to answer such objections as may have been raised by its opponents. I leave it in their hands for the present.

Mr. DISNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. DEAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask a question of the Chair as to how this bill stands, with a view of making any motion that may be necessary to keep it before the House, and then of moving to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. COBB. Oh, I hope not; I hope we shall have the morning hour for committees to report.

Mr. HAMILTON. I desire to ask the Chair how much of the morning hour remains?

The SPEAKER. About forty minutes.

Mr. HAMILTON. Then I hope we shall proceed with the regular order of business.

Mr. DISNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from New York to ask any question he may wish.

Mr. DEAN. I wish to ask, then, if there is any motion pending to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. There is no such motion pending.

Mr. DEAN. I wanted the House to understand exactly how the bill stood. I would ask whether the motion cannot now be entertained?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make the motion, if the gentleman from Ohio yields for that purpose.

Mr. DEAN. I have heretofore made the motion twice. The Speaker entertained it, and stated to the House that it was pending. I now learn that it is not entered in the Journal, and would therefore ask leave to again submit it.

Mr. DISNEY. I do not think that it is material that the motion should be made now.

Mr. DEAN. If it be not made now, the previous question may be called, and cut it off.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I have been absent, Mr. Speaker, for some time; and during my absence I met a member of this House, who requested me to state that he was deeply interested in this bill; that he had left here in the expectation that it would not be discussed until his return; and that he considered that the originator of it was under a promise not to press it until his return. I allude to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN,] who participated in the debate when this question was postponed, two weeks since. I do not know on which side of the question that gentleman intends to speak; but I feel it due to him to make the request of the House that the bill should not be pressed to a decision until his return.

Mr. COBB. There will be no decision until his return.

Mr. PERKINS. With the gentleman's consent, I would move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. He can then make his speech to-morrow morning.

[Here a message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., notifying the House that that body had passed and amended sundry bills, in which it asks the concurrence of the House.]

Mr. BENNETT. I would, with the consent of the gentleman from Ohio, send a substitute for the bill to the Chair, in order that it may be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio has an amendment pending, in the nature of a substitute. To that substitute an amendment has been proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. PERKINS.]

Mr. BENNETT. The substitute which I send to the Clerk's desk is the one now under consideration with some slight amendment. I ask to give notice of my intention to submit it, so that it may be ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can modify his own amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I modify it by substituting the one I sent up to the Clerk's desk for it.

Mr. PERKINS. With the permission of the gentleman from Ohio, I would ask to modify my amendment by filling the blanks, so that it may be properly before the House in connection with the bill.

Mr. DISNEY. I was about remarking, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. PERKINS,] that I have no disposition to press upon the House action in regard to this bill. But in view of the statements which have been made to the House and the country by the gentleman from New York, as well in the report which he submitted to the House as in the speech he has made in regard to the pending bill, I feel it a duty which I owe to the House and the country, as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, to exhibit the facts, and to make some comments upon the, to me, exceedingly amusing remarks which the gentleman has put forward in the shape of argument.

I say that I feel it my duty to disabuse the mind of the House and the country with regard to the facts; and, in doing that, I shall, of necessity, probably be led, to a greater or less extent, to examine into the value of the reasons advanced by him. When I do this, it is my purpose to be as brief as I can—as much so as the nature of the case will admit of; yet I should exceedingly dislike to be interrupted by the expiration of the morning hour; and, as I see around the Hall indications of a desire to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I am willing to yield for a motion of that sort, with the understanding that on to-morrow morning I can take the floor and proceed with my remarks.

Mr. HIESTER. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN stated that when the committee last rose, the pending question was on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH,] and that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HIESTER] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARRIS, of Mississippi, (who occupied a portion only of his hour on Monday,) claimed the floor.

Mr. HIESTER. If the gentleman from Mississippi desires to occupy the remainder of his time to-day, or a sufficient portion of time to complete the hour which he ought to have had on Monday, I am willing to concede it to him, provided it is not taken out of my hour.

[Cries of "Agreed!" and "That's right!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Mississippi can proceed.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Mississippi, concluded the remarks commenced by him a few days since, in opposition to the Nebraska-Kansas bill. He argued that Congress should repeal the Missouri compromise boldly, or not at all. If they were not prepared to do this, they should let it stand where it is. He condemned the insidious character of the bill, and said that the Badger proviso was the Wilmot proviso in another form.

[The speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. HIESTER addressed the committee on the same subject. He opposed the bill on the ground that, if passed, it would violate our treaties with the Indian tribes residing within the limits of the proposed Territories, and because it contained a clause for the repeal of the Missouri compromise of 1820.

[His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, obtained the floor.

Mr. ELLISON. With the permission of the gentleman from Virginia, I will move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SMITH. I yield the floor for that motion.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and "Go on!"]

Mr. SMITH. I should be gratified if the committee would rise. The committee is very thin.

A MEMBER. We shall lose so much time if we adjourn now.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no; we need not adjourn. There is plenty of business for the House to do.

Mr. HAMILTON. Some other gentleman will, perhaps, speak now, if the gentleman from Virginia does not desire to do it.

Mr. ELLISON. The House is very slenderly attended now, and I therefore insist on my motion to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to entertain the motion.

Mr. SMITH. I understand that there is a gentleman from Ohio who wishes to speak this evening, and I hope the House will consent that the understanding shall prevail which prevailed yesterday, and allow me to have the floor to-morrow.

[Cries of "Agreed!" and "Certainly!"]

Mr. ELLISON. I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] as entitled to the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I should be very glad to hear the gentleman from Virginia, but as he does not desire to go on now, and as it is only half past two o'clock, it seems to me that it would be better to continue the discussion, and get rid of it as soon as we can.

Mr. SMITH. As I am to have the floor to-morrow, I yield it now to the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, said that, instead of progressing with the business of Congress, as the people demanded, they were tied down, day by day, by a sectional question, of which, as a Whig, he washed his hands; nor did he believe that the party to which he belonged instigated it. This was a sectional question, which far transcends in importance any other since the compromises of the Constitution. He did not impute all the responsibility of the introduction of the Nebraska bill to the honorable Senator from Illinois; there were other eminent men who advocated it with equal zeal. It was brought forward as an Administration measure, to relieve it from the consequences of its own conduct. At least such was his opinion; and, in support of it, he quoted a remark heretofore made by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, that he [Mr. SMITH] "believed that this was an Administration measure, and that all good Democrats would support it;"

and further, he quoted remarks from the Union of the 5th of February last. He then opposed the repeal of the Missouri compromise. If you, he said, repeal this, you will set a precedent by which all other compromises will be repealed; and which will leave it to a numerical majority, and not to the good sense and patriotism of the people.

He wished to stand on the compromises of 1850. He gave his reasons for opposing the Nebraska Kansas bill.

[His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BARRY obtained the floor; but yielded it to Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, who moved that the committee do now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House (No. 271) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. LETCHER moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at half past three o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 27, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. EVERETT presented the memorial of Nathaniel Hayward, praying the extension of his patent for an improvement in the manufacture of India rubber goods; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. WELLER presented resolutions of the Legislature of California, in favor of additional mail facilities for California and Oregon; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of California, in favor of the establishment of a free and permanent watering place in Humboldt desert, on the emigrant route from Missouri to California; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Also, resolutions of the State of California, in favor of the enactment of a law authorizing the Board of Commissioners appointed under the act of the 3d of March, 1851, to ascertain and settle private land claims in that State, to hold a session at the city of Los Angeles; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of Massachusetts, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a memorial of inhabitants of Providence, Rhode Island, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a memorial signed by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, President of the Senate, Speaker of the House, and members of the Executive Council of Massachusetts, together with a large number of the other members of the State government, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HUNTER presented the petition of Hardy H. Holstead and others, praying a modification of the bounty land law so as to give one hundred and sixty acres of land to all who served in the wars of the United States, and to their heirs; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RUSK presented a memorial of the clerks and other employees engaged in the city post office, Washington, District of Columbia, praying for an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. TOUCEY presented a petition of inhabitants of Norwich, Connecticut, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented documents in relation to the claim of Betsey Whipple, widow of Stephen Whipple, a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, to a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PRATT presented resolutions of the Mayor and City Council of the city of Baltimore, praying an appropriation of public lands to aid in the establishment of juvenile reform schools and houses of refuge in the several States; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RUSK presented the petition of F. M. Weathered, jr., and others, praying a change in the mail route from Grand Ecore, on the Red river, Louisiana, to eastern Texas; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of citizens of the United States professing the Jewish religion, praying that measures may be taken to procure for citizens of the United States of every creed, a just degree of civil and religious liberty, while residing or traveling in foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

NEW MAIL ROUTES.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be directed to inquire into the expediency of establishing the following mail routes: From Fort Madison, via West Point, Big Mount, and Utica, to Keosauqua, Iowa; from Fort Madison, via Franklin and Primrose, to Farmington; from Marengo, by Toledo, to Eldora; from Cedar Falls to Clear Lake.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of James L. Collins, praying indemnity for property lost in the Mexican war, and for services as secret and confidential agent of the United States, rendered during said war, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, it was Ordered, That James L. Collins have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

HENRY CRONCHEY.

Mr. EVERETT. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, to report a bill to make compensation to Henry Cronchey for extra services. This bill is reported by the unanimous direction of the committee, and as it is a small matter, I hope it will be put upon its passage now.

The bill was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to allow to Henry Cronchey the sum of $1,000, in full compensation for extra services performed in the office of the United States legation at London, while the office of secretary of legation was vacant, between December, 1852, and August, 1853.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Cronchey performed all the clerical duties of secretary of legation for nearly six months while that office was vacant. The subject having been referred to Congress from the Department, and laid before the Committee on Foreign Relations, the committee thought it was but fair he should have this compensation, which is at the rate of the salary of a secretary of legation. He was obliged to take home the work in extra hours—the writing that devolved on him as clerk in copying the dispatches and other official notes—and he probably labored twice the number of hours that he would otherwise have been called upon to do. The salary of clerk was but $500 a year. This will give him $1,000 for performing all the clerical duties of the office for six months. The service was very acceptably and faithfully performed; and the Committee on Foreign Relations thought he was well entitled to this small amount.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

On the motion of Mr. EVERETT, the report was ordered to be printed.

FRANÇOIS COUSIN.

The bill for the relief of François Cousin was read a second time; and, on motion by Mr. SELLE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

It proposes to confirm François Cousin in his title to all those parts of sections twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty-five, and thirty-six, in township eight south, of range twelve east, which are included within the limits of his original claim, filed before the commissioner to adjust private land claims in Louisiana; and all that parcel of land described as section forty, in township eight south, of range twelve east, and section thirty-seven, in township eight south, of range thirteen east, in the parish of St. Tammany, Louisiana; and a patent is to be issued for them.

François Cousin, Sen., the father of the petitioner, about the year 1770, settled upon and cultivated a tract of land in Louisiana; in 1785, as appears by the affidavit of the late surveyor general of the Province, he presented four decrees of grants, which were recorded, but were destroyed by fire in 1788. He continued to reside upon and cultivate the lands until the time of his death. His son, since his death, has always resided upon and cultivated them. The claim of the elder Cousin was filed with the commissioner to adjust private land claims in the Territory of Louisiana; who, in his report, classed the claims among the anonymous claims, as number twenty-one, and which was not confirmed by the commissioner, and recommended for the consideration of Congress.

The Committee on Private Land Claims are of opinion that the antiquity of the settlement, and the cultivation of the land claimed, together with the circumstances of the case, warrant Congress in confirming the title.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

NATIONAL HOTEL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PRATT. I ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill "to incorporate the National Hotel Company, of Washington city," which was some time since reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia. It is designed by this company to build a hotel worthy of the metropolis of the nation. It will be an extensive enterprise, and will require a larger capital than individuals separately could appropriate to such an object. It will lead to no discussion, I presume.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that George H. Calvert, Charles B. Calvert, Roger C. Weightman, Philip Otterback, John Withers, Richard H. Stuart, and Joseph Bryan, and those who may hereafter become members of the company, and their successors, be created a body-politic and corporate, by the name and style of the National Hotel Company, Washington city. The company is empowered to hold, in fee-simple, lots situated in the city of Washington, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and parts of lots 7 and 14, in square 491, on the plat of that city, upon which are now erected the house or buildings and appurtenances known and denominated as the National Hotel; and also any additional lots or parts of lots, adjoining that said property, which may be hereafter acquired. The capital stock of the company is to be $500,000 to be divided into five thousand shares of $100 each.

The affairs of the company are to be conducted by a president and six directors, to be elected by the stockholders, and they may exercise all the power and privileges of a corporation necessary or proper to promote its objects.

There being no amendment, the bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House insisted on their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending 30th of June, 1855; insisted on their amendment to the third amendment of the Senate to that bill; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses; and had appointed Messrs. GEORGE W. JONES, of Tennessee, WILLIAM H. BISSELL, of Illinois, and JOHN G. DAVIS, of Indiana, as managers on their part.

RECONSIDERATION OF A BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senate on Tuesday passed a bill to amend an act, entitled "an act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers and settlers on the Maison Rouge Grant, in the event of the final adjudication of the title in favor of the United States." It was discovered this morning that there is a defect in the bill as passed, in consequence of which the wrong act is proposed to be extended by that bill. That mistake should be corrected; and I wish to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed in order that the necessary correction may be made. This is the last day on which, by our rules, the reconsideration can be moved. The bill is now, however, on the Speaker's table in the other House; and I wish to have it brought back to the Senate. Unless it be sent back to-day, before the House adjourns, I cannot move to reconsider. I move, therefore, now, that the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

A message was subsequently received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, returning the bill mentioned, in accordance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the vote on the passage of the bill be reconsidered, and I ask that the motion be entered on the journal.

The PRESIDENT. It will be so entered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next amendment which I have to offer from the Committee on Indian Affairs, is to insert under the "miscellaneous" heading, the following:

For surveying and marking the boundary lines of such tract or tracts of land as may be provided under the stipulations of the amendments of the Senate to the treaties of the 23d of July and 5th of August, 1851, with the Sioux Indians, $1,200;

For expenses of negotiating the treaties of the 10th of September, 1853, with the Rogue River Indians, and of the 19th of September, 1853, with the Cow Creek band of Umpqua Indians, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have another amendment from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to come in at the end of the second section. That section provides that no existing provisions of law, prescribing the manner in which payment shall be made to Indians, shall be construed to repeal or contravene the seventeenth section of the Indian intercourse act. The amendment of the committee is to add to this provision the following:

Or to prohibit the payment of any claim or claims, other than those of agents or attorneys, for bona fide services rendered to any Indian tribe, in cases where the President may adjudicate such services necessary, and the claim or claims, therefore, just and reasonable.

Mr. WALKER. With the acquiescence of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I wish to have a slight verbal alteration made in the amendment, in order more fully to carry out its design. I move to amend it by inserting after the word "attorneys" the words "for claims."

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I agree to the propriety of that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have another amendment from the Committee on Indian Affairs, as an additional section:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President be authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a superintendent of Indian affairs for the Territory of Utah, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,000, and whose duty it shall be to exercise a general superintendence over the Indian tribes in Utah, and to exercise and perform all the powers and duties assigned by law to other superintendents of Indian affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next amendment is to add an additional section:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act to establish the territorial government of Utah, approved 9th September, 1850, as requires the Governor of said Territory to perform the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs, and authorizes him to receive a salary therefor, in addition to the salary allowed for his services as Governor, be repealed, and that the Governor of said Territory shall hereafter receive an annual salary of $2,500.

The object of this provision, Mr. President, is merely to separate the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs, from the office of Governor in the Territory of Utah. It is unnecessary, probably, to explain the considerations which have induced the committee to report this amendment. They are obvious in their character, and such as will suggest themselves to the Senate at a glance. We also propose to make provision for increasing the salary of the Governor, in consequence of the separation of the duties of superintendent from his office, and to make his salary equal to that which we now allow to the Governors of Washington and Oregon, who, in their relations to our country, are situated about as remotely and inaccessible, and the expenses of living in each are about the same. We thought it just, therefore, to allow the Executive of Utah the same salary as the Governors of those other Territories. The main object was to separate the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs, from those of the Executive of that Territory.

Mr. CHASE. I doubt the expediency of increasing the salary of the Governor of Utah. I have heard no special reason why it should be increased by this amendment. The office which has heretofore been paid $2,500 as Governor and as superintendent, is to be divided into two, and one is to be paid $2,500 and the other $2,000, making $4,500 for these services. Unless the chairman of the committee can assign some good reason for it, I think the amendment ought to be rejected.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The Senator, I imagine, is mistaken slightly in his facts. The object is only to give to the Governor of Utah, as Governor, a salary of $2,500, in consequence of the separation of these duties. He now receives a salary of $1,500 as Governor, and $1,500 as superintendent. This amendment creates a separate superintendent, and to that extent it does enlarge, of course, the salary of one of the offices. But it will be recollected that the Senate yesterday, in providing for the salary of the Executive of Minnesota, in just such a contingency as this, allowed a salary of $2,500. In the Kansas and Nebraska bill, lately passed by this body, the same salary was allowed to the Governors of those two Territories, and in those cases the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs were separated from those of the Executive. We allow to the Governor of Oregon, whose duties are separated from those of Indian superintendent, the same salary, $2,500. By this amendment, therefore, we but preserve the same analogy in reference to the salary of this officer, which has already been established as to the salaries of four other territorial Governors where the office of superintendent is not connected with the office of Governor. It simply allows him, in this case, a similar salary as is allowed in the others.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The Committee on Indian Affairs have instructed me to offer the following, as an additional section:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to cause to be fulfilled the stipulations of the ninth and tenth articles of the treaty with the Sacs and Foxes, and other tribes of Indians, concluded on the 15th of July, 1830, by causing said reserved tracts to be surveyed and allotted to the persons properly entitled to the same, in fee simple, in such manner, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and, to defray the expenses of the same, there be, and is hereby, appropriated the sum of $10,922 29.

The object of this amendment, Mr. President, is simply to carry into effect the stipulations of the ninth and tenth articles of the treaty of 1830, made with some five or six different bands of Indians, which have never yet been fulfilled. The purport of those articles requires the setting apart, by the United States, of reserves, one upon the Missouri, and the other upon the Mississippi river, in the ordinary form of Indian reservations, for the use of their nations. It was stipulated that the President, at any future time, might survey off the country, and allot in severalty to the half breeds, reservations not exceeding six hundred and forty acres each. Circumstances have heretofore prevented the carrying into effect of that stipulation. In the mean time the land which was regarded as fixed for the reservation, has been settled upon by large numbers of white settlers from the States, who are occupying the best lands, and all the most valuable sites, commercial and otherwise, in the Territory, until the Indians themselves have become alarmed, and justly alarmed, at the prospect that the absorption, by settlement, of the lands by the white population, will soon leave them nothing out of which the treaty stipulations can be performed.

The period of the fulfillment of this treaty has been postponed until the very last moment, and the Indians now allege, and I think with very great justice, that the treaty stipulations should be performed. If we concur in the amendment of the committee, it will be the duty of the President to survey the country, and allot off the reservations according to the stipulations of the treaty, and dispose of the residue of the land according to existing laws. The estimate of the amount necessary for this purpose has been made, upon a basis suggested by the Land Office, and is in strict accordance with the views of the Indian department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, is to add the following two additional sections:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint two Indian agents for the Indians east of the Rocky Mountains, in addition to the eleven provided for by the fourth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department," &c., approved February 27, 1851; one Indian agent for the Indians in the Territory of New Mexico, in addition to the four provided for by the fifth section of the same act; and such number of Indian agents not exceeding three, as he may deem expedient, for the Indian tribes in the Territory of Washington.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the agents appointed under the provisions of the first section of this act shall, before entering on the duties of their respective offices, give bond in such penalties, and with such conditions and security, as the President or the Secretary of the Interior may require. They shall hold their offices respectively for the term of four years, and shall receive an annual salary of $1,500 each.

I will explain to the Senate the necessities of the services which require the appointments of these different agents. There are six asked for by the Department, three of which, in the first place, are for the Territory of Washington. This is simply to supply the omission in the act establishing the territorial government of Washington, in consequence of which there was no provision made for the appointment of Indian agents for that Territory at all. Usually it is the case, that the Indian agents are provided for as often as we create territorial governments for our distant possessions. For what reason the omission took place, I am unable to say. There are, however, provided at this time, three Indian agents for the Territory of Oregon, containing a little more population, and about the same area as the Territory of Washington, while there are none for the latter Territory. In addition to this, the Territory of Oregon is furnished with a superintendent separated from the office of Governor, while in Washington the office of superintendent and that of Governor are lodged in the same person. To this extent it disqualifies even the superintendent, who is the only Indian officer provided for that Territory, from performing the duties.

It will be remembered by those who are familiar with the geography of Washington Territory, that it is separated into three great natural divisions, and there are supposed to be some fifteen or twenty thousand Indians within its limits. The Indians in these three geographical divisions have entirely different habits, and necessarily require an agent to attend particularly to the wants of each. I can see great reason therefore for establishing three Indian agents in Washington Territory, because it only puts that on a footing with our other Territories.

The additional agent for the Territory of New Mexico is asked for, in order to have him assigned to the Pueblo Indians, an extensive class, with whom our relations at this time are very interesting. It is doubted whether they belong to that class of Indians, with whom we are enabled to treat as independent nations. The present bill however contains several generous provisions for presenting them agricultural implements, and such other articles as are suited for their advance to civilization, and giving them fixed agricultural habits. If it is thought proper to establish and maintain friendly relations with these Indians at all, it is no doubt necessary that we should establish an agency for them.

The other two Indian agents proposed to be appointed are asked for by the Department, to be located in the vast territory lying between the Red river upon the south, the British possessions upon the north, the great chain of the Stony Mountains upon the west, and the States bordering upon the Mississippi river on the east. Any one who will think for a minute of the vast extent of that country, the great numbers of Indian tribes who wander over it, and then will consider the fact that we have but two Indian agents, who traverse that immense range of country, to maintain friendly relations with all these Indians, and disburse payments of provisions and money under the different treaties with them, will see that the task imposed on these two agents is one which it is absolutely physically impossible for them to perform. One agent will be required upon the Arkansas river alone, and another upon the Platte, and it will take at least two to discharge the duties of agents with the immense number of tribes extending from Minnesota Territory to the dividing ridge between Washington Territory and the plains lying east of it.

The Department is not without ample and sufficient information in making this recommendation. Last year, when Mr. Fitzpatrick was required to go out and pay the Indian annuities which had been provided under the treaty of Fort Laramie, it required a journey of several months from the head waters of the Arkansas up to the head waters of the Missouri, to visit the different tribes with whom we had treaty relations, and to whom he had to make disbursements. It does appear to me that, considering the number of Indians in that region, and the vast extent of country over which our Indian agents have to travel, and our diversified relations with these Indians, it is utterly impossible that two agents can perform that service. I am more certain that this portion of the amendment ought to be adopted than either of its other provisions, but I am pretty well convinced that all of these agents have become necessary for the service.

Mr. BELL. I desire to ask my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, a question in relation to his statement as to the necessity of appointing three new agents for the Territory of Washington. As I understood him, he intimated that there was some propriety in having an equal number in Washington and Oregon. There have been three heretofore appointed in Oregon, and I ask the honorable Senator if one of those there is not agent for the tribes that are now said to be located in the Territory of Washington, west of the Cascade range; and whether that would not make some difference in the necessity of appointing three? The honorable Senator stated that, inasmuch as there were three for the Territory of Oregon, there would be some propriety in giving the same number to Washington. There are some twenty thousand Indians in Washington Territory, I believe, and most of them roam over the eastern part of it, between the Rocky Mountains and the Cascade range.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I can answer the honorable Senator. The three Indian agents now in Oregon are all under the jurisdiction of the superintendent of Indian affairs for Oregon, and their operations are confined entirely to that Territory.

Mr. BELL. That was not the question.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. There are none in Washington, except some agents who have been employed by the superintendent of Indian affairs for Washington, taking upon himself the responsibility of employing them under the special necessities of the case, and for whom provision is made in this bill; but, by law, there are none at all in Washington.

Mr. BELL. I know that that is so by the terms of the law technically; but, when these agents were appointed, was not one of them for the tribes, or remnants, or fragments of tribes, around Puget's Sound? When we had settlements forming there in Washington Territory, it was thought necessary to have an Indian agent. Now, as to the jurisdiction of the superintendent in Oregon, I presume that can be remedied by extending the superintendency to Washington. That is answered by the suggestion that the Governor of Washington has the superintendency of Indian affairs. Then, there could be an agent for Washington Territory taken from those who were appointed for Oregon Territory, while Washington formed a part of Oregon Territory; and the proper amendment would be to transfer the jurisdiction of that agency to the Governor of Washington.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I imagine there is ample use for all the Indian agents who are already in Oregon. They have made several treaties in Oregon, but none have been made in Washington at all. In Washington, the personnel of the Indian department consists of the superintendent without any agent or sub-agents. There is no agent or sub-agent now on Puget's Sound. Governor Stevens says it is an unexplored country.

Mr. BELL. Settlements south of Puget's Sound. I really do not know how far our settlements extend.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I will say to the Senator, that in my opinion there is ample necessity for the appointment of three agents at this time.

Mr. BELL. Well.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The Department asked for the appointment of a number not exceeding three. I presume that at this time one agent would be sufficient for the country between the Pacific and the Cascade range; and another among the Flatheads along the eastern range of mountains would be sufficient. There are no wandering tribes in Oregon except those near the mountains; the others are stationary, having their fixed dwellings or lodges.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I offer the following amendment:

For defraying the expenses of witnesses, marshal, attorney, notary, interpreters, and stationery, and for copying evidence in the investigation of the official conduct of Alexander Ramsay, of Minnesota, $720.

That item, and several which will follow, are the same as the amendment which was under discussion yesterday, with the exception that they leave out the item embracing the compensation for Governor Gorman, and provide only for the necessary expenses, the fees of witnesses, the expenses of interpreters, and of marshals for the service of processes, &c. They are estimated for by the Department, and are recommended. The item which was exceptionable was separated from these which are estimated for, and are now recommended by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next item is the following:

For the services of Robert A. Matthews, for copying the proceedings and evidence in said investigation, and for the employment of Richard M. Young, one of the commissioners, $250.

This item is not embraced in the last estimate, but an additional estimate is sent from the Secretary of the Interior. At the time that the proceedings of that commission were settled, the papers in regard to this claim were for some time mislaid, and it was not paid. We have them now upon hand, and the amendment is offered to meet the claim. On the return of Judge Young, one of the commissioners, to this place, and after he had ceased to draw pay as commissioner, he employed a clerk to copy all the evidence, to transcribe it, and prepare it in due form. It was a service which I think was well worth the money which is asked for it.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire simply to remark that I hope we shall get through with this, and that we will not again repeat the experiment upon which the expenditure is founded. Last year the Senate undertook to request the President, without the concurrence of the other House, to enter into the investigation which led to all this expense. The Department of the Interior seemed to think that, as it was done by order of the Senate, it should be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and I believe a portion of the expenses—Judge Young's compensation—was so paid. This all shows the anomalous sort of legislation into which we have been led. It seems to me that, except for the expenses of the Senate itself, this body and the President together have no right to incur liabilities for the United States. We have authorized this to be done. We had better pay this gentleman, and repeat the precedent no more.

Mr. CHASE. I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if this is not a private claim? and if it be such, I suggest that it is not competent for it to be offered as an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I apprehend that it is not more a private claim than the payment of witnesses, marshals, and others who were engaged in this examination. We have agreed to pay the expenses of other persons engaged in the execution of this commission. This claim ought to have been, and would have been, paid by the Department, if the funds had been sufficient; and we are now supplying the deficiency. It is for services rendered in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate; and I may say that this is a reasonable and necessary expenditure, and the expenditures incurred by the commission do not amount to anything very alarming. The fact that I have been compelled to present these items in detail, on account of the objection yesterday, has made them appear much larger than they otherwise would. I do not think that the claims of every kind, and every expense attendant upon the investigation, exceed $2,000. It is certainly a very small amount, compared with the expense of some investigations which have been entered into.

Mr. CHASE. I submit the question to the Chair, whether this is not a private claim? I do not understand the statement of the honorable Senator from Arkansas to be, that the claim is in consequence of any special appropriation made heretofore. There was a resolution directing the President to cause a certain investigation to be made, and this is one of the items of the claim made in consequence of that resolution. But there has been no appropriation made for the purpose of carrying out the resolution; hence I submit the question to the Chair.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that this arises out of the anomalous nature of the proceedings attendant upon this investigation. The Senate had no right to authorize the President to cause the investigation to be made, unless it meant to pay for the expenses out of the contingent fund. The question has arisen in regard to that; and it seems to me that the best way would be to dispose of it, settle the claim in this bill, and, as I said before, repeat the experiment no more. I think that probably we did depart from our powers in authorizing any such expenditure to be incurred, unless it was something that came properly within the range of the appropriation for the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CHASE. My desire was to adhere to the rules of the Senate in our legislation. By unanimous consent these rules can be dispensed with, and I certainly have no wish to interpose any objection to this.

Mr. HUNTER. I am very anxious to preserve that rule, but I merely suggest that this arises out of the anomalous nature of the proceeding which authorizes the payment out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CHASE. I acquiesce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRYANT in the chair.) The Chair is under the impression that the expenditure arose under a resolution of the Senate. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The next item is:

For paying the expenses and fees of witnesses summoned in said investigation by the United States, at the instance of Alexander Ramsay, $350.

That is also one of the items of expenses attendant on this investigation. It is for the expenses of witnesses who were summoned by the United States, at the instance of the respondent, Governor Ramsay, in this investigation; and I suppose that the Government incurs precisely the same obligation to pay them as it does to pay those who were summoned in behalf of the United States.

This investigation did not take the form of a suit or indictment, making the party a defendant, but the whole object was to ascertain the circumstances in regard to the conduct of Governor Ramsay; and I presume it is as much the duty of the United States to pay the expenses of the persons whom Governor Ramsay called for the purpose of eliciting truth on his side, as to pay those who were summoned directly by the persons employed to investigate the transaction. The object of the commissioners was to ascertain whether there was palpable misconduct on the part of the officer; and it was their duty to ascertain his innocence, if he was innocent; and it was, therefore, due to him to summon his witnesses. I can see no difference at all in the obligation to pay each set of witnesses, and for that reason, at the suggestion of Governor Ramsay, we have offered the amendment.

Mr. STUART. I will inquire of the chairman of the committee whether this is recommended?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. No, sir; it is not recommended.

Mr. STUART. If I understand, then, it is not offered by direction of the Department. I voted yesterday against another part of this proceeding, for the simple reason that the whole question was turned over by the Senate to the Executive department for investigation. I will vote to pay just as much money as the Executive department will recommend, and not one dollar more. We are now taking upon ourselves precisely what was the worst part of the subject which we turned over to the President. He has made the investigation, and reported it; but refuses to recommend the payment of certain claims. The Senate are now asked voluntarily to pay them. I cannot agree to it.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I desire to correct the Senator in a very important part of his statement. The Executive did not refuse to entertain these claims. He recommended the payment of every one which had been presented to him. The commissioner recommended, and did certify to certain expenses; but they left out the expenses of witnesses for the respondent, or defendant, in the case, and the consequence was, that there was nothing before the Department upon which it could act, and the matter has never been before it. It was introduced to the committee, and we have thought proper to make provision for the appropriation of $350 to cover the expenses of witnesses summoned on behalf of Governor Ramsay. The amount was considered to be amply sufficient, and the committee think that it ought to be paid. I think it better, in this matter, that we should follow the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia. This is the last of the items of expenditure arising from that investigation. We had better make the appropriation; and I concur with the Senator most heartily that we should hereafter refuse any more such investigations by the Senate; but I think, as we have ordered this investigation, and it has been had in good faith; as just and necessary expenses have been incurred, it is best not to insist upon too close an adherence to the rules of the Senate, which would have the effect of excluding one class of witnesses and paying all the others.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. There is one other amendment which I have to offer under the direction of the committee, but I wish, before doing so, to obtain some information from the Department in regard to it. I shall not, therefore, offer any more at present, as chairman of the committee. There are some other members who have amendments, which they will offer on the authority of the committee.

Mr. TOOMBS. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following amendment:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $350,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to pay to persons entitled to receive the same, the sums ascertained by agents appointed by the authority of the second section of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, approved March 2, 1837, to be due the individuals, their heirs and assigns, and whose names are set forth in the report of said commissioners, transmitted to Congress on the 27th of January, 1838, for spoiliations of the Creek Indians, excepting those whose claims have been heretofore paid by the United States.

Mr. HUNTER. At the last session of Congress this was decided to be a private claim. It is an old claim for spoiliations by the Creeks in 1836 and 1837.

Mr. TOOMBS. I do not know anything of the decision referred to, but I think I can show, upon the Senator's own principles, if such a decision was made, that it was wrong. It is necessary to state the class of cases in the amendment, that the Senate may see whether it comes within their rules. I submit to the Senate that the amendment comes within the rule for two reasons. In the first place, it is certainly within the principle of the words of the intercourse act of 1834, by which the United States guaranteed to pay claimants who had been injured by Indian spoiliations, and to ultimately indemnify them against all such losses. In the second place, the Congress of 1836 passed an act directing the President to appoint commissioners to send to the country to take testimony of the amount of the claim, which they did, and subsequently that report came to Congress. Now, the Committee on Finance, unless they have the exclusive right of violating the rules of the Senate, have put in the bill an amendment meeting a case beyond this principle, and most assuredly covering it. On their recommendation, the following amendment was made to the bill:

"For payment of balance found due the Creek Indians for losses sustained during the war with Great Britain, by that portion of the tribe who were friendly to, and co-operated with, the United States, in addition to the appropriation of the 30th of August, 1852, $258 10."

Now, unless the Senator can show that the friendly Indians in the war of 1812 are entitled to better privileges under the order of this Government than those of our fellow-citizens who were guaranteed payment for losses on account of Indian depredations, certainly he is estopped from objecting to this amendment, because, in his opinion, it violates a rule of the Senate. The clause which I have read, is an amendment of the Committee on Finance. They have made three or four of the same sort, but that is conclusive and direct upon the point, without any law, and without the accounts having been adjusted by authority of the Government. That amendment, which the Senate has put on this bill, on the recommendation of the Committee on Finance, covers all this ground, and more besides.

But I say, that it being within the intercourse act of 1834, it has been the uniform rule of the Government to make annual appropriations whenever they were necessary for the purpose of paying for those spoiliations. If you object to it because it is a private claim, on the ground that money will be paid to individuals, the same objections may be made to the appropriations in your civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. They are paid to somebody; but under this general law of 1834—and that was but one of a class commencing in 1790, to pay for spoiliations committed on the settlements by the Indians—Congress has made annual appropriations wherever a case has been brought to its notice by the President of the United States, where there was money due under that act, which was entitled "An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve peace on the frontiers." To settle this point of order, I will read the seventeenth section of the act:

"Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That if any Indian or Indians, belonging to any tribe in amity with the United States, shall, within the Indian country, take or destroy the property of any person lawfully within such country, or shall pass from the Indian country into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States, and there take, steal, or destroy any horse, horses, or other property, belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States, such citizen or inhabitant, his representative, attorney, or agent may make application to the proper superintendent, agent, or sub agent, who, upon being furnished with the necessary documents and proofs, shall, under the direction of the President, make application to the nation or tribe to which said Indian or Indians shall belong for satisfaction; and if such nation or tribe shall neglect or refuse to make satisfaction in a reasonable time, not exceeding twelve months, it shall be the duty of such superintendent, agent, or sub-agent to make return of his doings to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that such further steps may be taken as shall be proper, in the opinion of the President, to obtain satisfaction for the injury."

The President brought this subject before Congress; and upon his recommendation they authorized him to appoint three commissioners to ascertain the damages, in a more formal way, really, than ordinarily. Then the act goes on:

"And, in the mean time, in respect to the property so taken, stolen, or destroyed, the United States guaranty to the party so injured, an eventual indemnification."

Under this act of 1834—and it is but one of a class amendatory of various acts to the same purpose, commencing in 1790—Congress uniformly, whenever these spoiliations existed, have put in the regular appropriation bills, appropriations for their payment; therefore, I say, this is distinguishable from any class of private claims. It is to carry out an existing law, and it is to appropriate a sum specified and ascertained under the law. Commissioners were appointed by the President, under the provisions of that act of 1834, expressly for the purpose of investigating the claims. The claims have been passed by the Senate once—before I became a member of it, as some of my seniors here will recollect—and most certainly the Senator from Virginia is estopped, by the amendment to which I have referred, from objecting to this, unless he can show that the friendly Indians, who were injured by the hostile Indians, and to compensate whom we were bound by no law, but under the general principles of equity, they having appealed to the United States for payment, are to be a more favored class in the legislative halls than our own fellow-citizens, who were robbed and plundered by these same Indians.

I refrain, for the present, from going into the justice of the claim; but in regard to the point of order, this amendment is certainly more proper than one for paying Indians which has not the same sanction of law as this. I suppose that other committees have as much right in the Senate as the Committee on Finance, and that what is out of order with the others is out of order with them. I do not know any prescriptive right which the Committee on Finance have to violate the rules of the Senate, which is not possessed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, whose organ I am.

Mr. HUNTER. The question happens to have been decided by the Senate. It does not rest upon the Senator from Georgia or myself. On this precise amendment the question was raised; and upon the question: "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"—the Chair deciding the amendment to be out of order under this rule in relation to private claims—the vote was—yeas 19, nays 22; so that it was ruled out of order at the last session.

Mr. BELL. What is the date of that?

Mr. HUNTER. March 3, 1853. That is sufficient for me.

Mr. TOOMBS. Read the names.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Was it not previously decided otherwise?

Mr. HUNTER. I find it stated otherwise in the Globe. I find that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] stated that it had been decided otherwise; but when the vote was referred to, it was found that twenty were for ruling it out of order, and sixteen in favor of it. On the debate afterwards, it was suggested by some gentlemen that it rested upon the question whether a member of the committee had the right to offer it without instructions from the committee, or whether it must come from the committee itself. I have not examined that decision, in order to see how it stood; the Senator, however, who referred to it, said that the vote was upon the question of order; but it is enough for me that the subject was before us in 1852, on this distinct question, and that the Senate decided, by a vote of 22 to 19, that it was out of order. So far as the action of the Committee on Finance is concerned, I submit to the Senator, that if that committee made a mistake in regard to the rule, that is not to estop the Senate from applying it. The Senate is not to be governed by them in regard to that; and I will also suggest to him that he is somewhat too technical in talking about being estopped by this or that amendment. If he will look to the amendment to which he has referred, he will find that it is the result of an appropriation last year. It is only making up for an omission of two names in the appropriation of last year. It has been discovered since the appropriation of 31st August, 1852, for this purpose was made, that the name of John Stedham was omitted in such claims by mistake. Here is a clerical error in carrying out the appropriation made in the law of 1852; but suppose the Committee on Finance should have made a mistake, or that I had made a mistake, that does not bind the Senate. It is not bound by my mistake. The question is, what is the rule, and here is the decision of the Senate upon it.

Mr. BELL. I would like to inquire of the honorable Senator from Virginia, whether he considers the decision of the Senate as a precedent and binding as parliamentary law?

Mr. HUNTER. I need not say to the Senator from Tennessee—he is certainly familiar with a question of that sort—that decisions upon points of order are always regarded as precedents, and they have a persuasive force. I will not say that they are irrevocable; that they cannot be changed; that they are like the laws of the Medes and Persians.

Mr. BELL. That is the answer which I expected from the honorable Senator. From the reports of the proceedings of the Senate, it appears that this claim of citizens, who were wronged by their property being taken by the Indians, was brought forward in the Senate, on the 3d of March, 1853, the last day of the session; and I suspect it will be ascertained that it was towards the close of the proceedings of that day, which terminated the session of Congress, when no friend of the claim thought it was proper to urge it. They saw that if it was debated and any exception was taken to it, it was likely that it would be killed for the purpose of getting it out of the way. I think I have an impression myself that I advised the friends of the proposition not to urge it upon such an occasion, when it was possible and most likely that it would be voted down merely to get it out of the way of business of more importance. They acquiesced in it, and the question was made, and the decision as to the point of order was arrived at, upon very little debate.

But, Mr. President, I ask the attention of the honorable Senator from Virginia to the fact which I now state, that this question was settled after great deliberation—perhaps after an entire day's debate—at the preceding session, or one or two sessions preceding, when we had ample time to consider it, when there was no hurry of the business before Congress, when it was not at the close of the session, and the debate, if the honorable Senator will refer to it, will be found to have been very full upon the whole question. The Senate, then, deliberately decided that it was not excluded by the rule which is relied upon now to reject the claim. Now, ought a precedent, established at the very heel of a session, on the last day, and very probably within the last two or three hours of the session, when no friend of the bill would think seriously of debating the question, or insisting upon it at such an hour, be considered as overruling the deliberate, solemn expression of the sense of the Senate at the preceding session?

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that, on referring to the Globe, he will find that there was a debate upon it at the last session.

Mr. BELL. But I say it was a very slight debate. The Senator will find, however, that there was a more full and elaborate discussion upon it on a former occasion. I have the impression on my mind, that I advised the friends of it not to press it at the last session.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It was proposed at ten o'clock at night.

Mr. BELL. The honorable Senator from Alabama says that it was proposed at ten o'clock at night; and how many appropriation bills had yet to be acted upon? The most of them, and the most important of them. I would have regarded it as imprudent to have pressed such a claim at such an hour.

But what I mean by pressing the consideration of the fact, that there was a deliberate, solemn vote of the Senate settling this much controverted question at a former session, is to show that it was decided not to be excluded by the rule which is relied upon by the Senator from Virginia. In that former debate, when the Senate took it up seriatim, and all the considerations which seemed to be due to it on both sides were presented, the intercourse law, relied upon by the Senator from Georgia, will be found to have been relied upon; but more strenuously the act or joint resolution of 1837, was relied upon. What was that but an existing law of the country which had never been complied with? By a joint resolution or act passed by the two Houses, the President was authorized and required to appoint commissioners to go into the country, where they could have access to the witnesses, where they could be on the spot, where they would be able to eviscerate the truth connected with the infliction of Indian depredations upon settlers in that country. I believe there were three commissioners, and they went there, and after a most laborious investigation of the facts on which each one separately was founded, they reported a balance. I do not remember what that balance was. If my recollection is right upon the subject, there was a large amount of claims struck out altogether.

Mr. TOOMBS. Seven hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BELL. Nearly $700,000. I mean that of the claims set up for damages, $600,000 or $700,000 were stricken out. I had an idea that they were greatly beyond the present amount. Will any gentleman say that that is not an existing law of the land? Congress, in 1837, felt the sense of obligation imposed by the intercourse act of 1834; and the only question was, how Congress could ever be satisfied that the amount ought really to be allowed to the claimants. They resorted to the method of appointing commissioners to go into the territory, and see what really could be honestly claimed by the claimants. They reported, after a most thorough investigation. They reduced the amount which was claimed; and the sole act left on the part of Congress to fulfill the obligation under which the Government lay in respect to the claims was to make the appropriation.

The claims were recognized by the Executive authority. The report was transmitted by the Executive, in compliance with the resolution or act of 1837. It was submitted to Congress—for what? For an appropriation to pay the amount found due by the Commissioners. Was not that an existing obligation and law, as complete as any other? It is not a vague and indefinite claim upon the Government. It is a claim settled by the Government officers—by the commissioners, who stood in the place of the Auditor of the Treasury. They were special auditors. They went into that country to audit the claims, and they reported them to Congress, for the fulfillment of the obligation of the Government for their payment. I say that it is an obligation on the part of Congress. The claims were audited, and the balance was struck and presented. A large amount of claims, which were regularly presented, were stricken out; and a balance was presented, which they say is a fair, and honest, and settled account under an existing law. Independently of the decision which took place, at a former session, upon a deliberate consideration of the whole question, I think we might adjudicate now in favor of the amendment. We have a decision saying that it comes within the rule, and we have another decision going against that opinion. But to come back to the original ground on which the claim stands: it is based on an existing law and obligation on the part of the Government. As to the precedent set at ten o'clock at night, on the last day of the session, I am satisfied, from my own recollection, as well as the statements of other gentlemen, that decision was arrived at because the friends of the claim did not think proper to press it.

Mr. CHASE. I know something of the history of this claim, because it is one which attracted my attention when it was first presented. The Senator from Tennessee is right in saying that an elaborate discussion was had upon it when it was first moved by him, from the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was discussed fully; and was then, after a full discussion, rejected by the Senate upon its merits. It was next presented as an amendment to one of the appropriation bills by the Senator from Alabama, who is not now a member of the Senate, [Mr. Clemens.] It was then objected to as a private claim. The Chair—the late venerated Vice President, [Mr. King]—submitted that question to the Senate, and the Senate decided that it was a private claim. The Chair did not decide, one way or the other, on that occasion.

Subsequently, at the last session of Congress, it was again moved from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and then the decision took place which has been referred to by the Senator from Virginia. There was a discussion upon the question, whether or not it was a private claim. It was insisted, I think, by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Dawson,] that it was decided not to be in order on the previous occasion, because it was moved by a gentleman not a member of a standing committee. It was urged, however, by others, in debate, that it was a private claim, whether so moved or not on the previous occasion; and now, although moved by a member of a standing committee, the Committee on Indian Affairs, it fell within the rule of the Senate, and must, therefore, be adjudged to be out of order, because it is a private claim.

The Senator then temporarily occupying the chair, the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Foot,] expressed the opinion that it was not within the rule. An appeal was taken by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Bayard] from that decision; and upon that appeal the Senate decided the claim not to be in order.

That is the history of this affair, so far as the votes of the Senate go; and it is strictly correct, as I believe. I do not know that any discussion upon the merits of the amendment is now in order. I suppose it is not. Indeed, I suppose this whole discussion is out of order, because I take it, as the question has been submitted to the Chair, it ought to be decided by him without debate; and after that, discussion may arise upon an appeal.

Mr. BELL. Does the Senator from Ohio say that there was not a decision in its favor?

Mr. CHASE. Not that I am aware of. My recollection is—and I think it will be confirmed by the proceedings in the Globe—that when it was originally presented by the Senator from Tennessee, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, the question was not raised. No objection was made to it. But a discussion arose, which was protracted to great length, and which resulted in a decision upon the merits.

Mr. BELL. It may be necessary, before the Chair is called upon to make a decision, to recur to the original decision. My memory is not very good; but I think the Senator from Ohio is greatly mistaken.

Mr. CHASE. I am confident I am right.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I had not the honor of voting upon this question in 1852; I was, however, here at the close of the last session, and I concur with all that is said by the Senator from Tennessee in relation to the hour at which this claim was brought forward, and the unfavorable auspices under which it came before the Senate. As far as the merits of the question are concerned—as the Senator from Ohio has alluded to them—I will not undertake to discuss them; but I shall be excused for saying that, at the proper time, I will demonstrate to the Senate that the case is a meritorious one; and that, when thoroughly investigated, it will commend itself to the favorable consideration of the Senate. I recollect the hour when it was brought before the Senate at the last session; and I know it was late at night, after the Senate had had a very protracted sitting; and I know the impatience and restlessness which were incident to the introduction of the matter when it was presented to the consideration of the Senate. If this question had received the deliberate attention of the Senate, and the rule had been determined in conformity with the decisions at the close of the last session, I am the last man upon this floor to undertake to say anything against a rule as settled by the deliberate act of the body; but my recollection is distinct that that rule was discussed hurriedly, and did not receive that attention which the merits of the case under consideration demanded. Perhaps the rule was referred to. Perhaps something was incidentally said about the decision on the previous occasion; but it was not listened to with that attention which it ought to receive in the mind of every Senator. I must be excused for saying that it was not debated at any length, as every Senator who was then here can testify. The rule under which the point of order is raised is this:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate."

Look at the language of this rule. It says, that "no amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law." Refer to the history of this case; and I ask you if it is not brought before the Senate under an existing law? After the outbreak of Indian hostilities in 1836, this matter attracted the attention of Congress, which authorized the President to appoint three commissioners to visit the seat of war, and to ascertain the extent of the damages and depredations committed upon the individuals inhabiting that portion of the country. The commissioners went there, and made an elaborate report, setting forth the extent of the depredations. When they returned, it was submitted to the President of the United States, and then communicated to Congress. If this be the fact, it seems to me that the amendment is legitimately within the provision of the first portion of the rule. It is to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

But, sir, suppose that that portion of the rule does not meet the case; yet another branch of the rules says that it shall not be entertained, unless it is in pursuance of an estimate from the head of one of the Departments. I presume that, although the rule specifies that it must be estimated by the head of one of the Departments, if it is recommended by the President of the United States, it will come within the spirit and within the intent of the rule. Well, what were the proceedings when that report was made by the three commissioners? General Jackson, in his message to Congress in 1836, used the following language:

"On the unexpected breaking out of hostilities in Florida, Alabama, and Georgia, it became necessary, in some cases, to take the property of individuals for public use. Provision should be made by law for indemnifying the owners; and I would also respectfully suggest whether some provision may not be made, consistently with the principles of our Government, for the relief of the sufferers by Indian depredations, or by the operations of our own troops."

It seems to me that this, being in pursuance of an established law, and under the recommendation of the President of the United States, is clearly and emphatically brought within the meaning of the rule, and I think it is strictly in order under it.

Mr. TOOMBS. I have a word to say upon the point of order. The Senator from Virginia, instead of offering an argument, brings in another precedent, and says that the amendment to which I alluded as having been made on the recommendation of the Committee on Finance, was put in the bill by some mistake, probably of the committee, and is introduced here to supply an omission, because the balance of the claims were provided for last year except these two.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator is mistaken. I did not say that it was through any mistake of the committee. It was the mistake of the commissioner in giving the list of the claims.

Mr. TOOMBS. But it was a mistake in the point of order. I supposed that the chairman of the Committee on Finance would not deliberately violate the rules of the Senate, and therefore said that it was a mistake in the point of order in proposing the amendment. It seems that the last Congress passed a law under which the claims were paid, with the exception of two, and the committee recommend the present Congress to pass these two. I say, that far from that being an argument against me, it is another precedent.

Mr. HUNTER. It was passed against the opinion of the Committee on Finance. We resisted it.

Mr. TOOMBS. Then it was the precedent of the Senate, and this is the precedent of the committee; so that I have both. Both the Senate and the Senator from Virginia sustained me. The Senator seems to get into a worse and worse difficulty in his explanations; therefore I say that I have the vote of the Senate at a previous session. Then I have the action of his committee, at this time, confirming the action of the Senate; so that in both events what he says is no answer to my argument. The amendment which his committee has introduced, provides for the payment of the Indians who suffered depredations from hostiles during the last war with Great Britain, there being no law, no intercourse act under which they could ask for the payment; for the intercourse act provided only for the payment of the damages sustained by depredations between the white men and the Indians. That amendment provides for the payment of friendly Indians for damages sustained by attacks from hostiles, although there was no general law in operation; so that, unless the Committee on Finance have the exclusive right of violating the rules of the Senate, their action is a precedent for this amendment. It is a matter of some concern with other committees whether that committee is to absorb the whole of the right of the Senate in offering amendments.

Now, Mr. President, we have two decisions before us, one each way. What were the circumstances of the decision of the 3d of March, 1853? The Presiding Officer decided the amendment to be in order. Some gentlemen say that it was three o'clock in the morning. Certainly it was on the 3d of March; but what did the Senator from Ohio, who now speaks of that decision of the Senate as being worthy of great consideration, say at that time. Let us hear him:

"Mr. President, it is very obvious that the Senate is hardly in a condition to decide upon the merits of any claim at this time of the evening."

That was an argument on the point of order. The Senate was hardly in a condition to decide upon it. I do not know what the condition was. Various accounts are given of the condition of the Senate under different circumstances; but there was something in the condition of the Senate which the honorable Senator from Ohio thought disqualified them from deciding upon the merits of the claim; and that was the class of argument used against it. He continued:

"I think, if the Senator from Texas would yield, as the Senator from Wisconsin has yielded, upon a claim as meritorious as this in any aspect of it, to an appeal to withdraw it, and present it in a single bill, where it would receive the fair consideration of the Senate, I should be very glad."

He first appealed to have it withdrawn. The Senator from Texas said that he, having offered it under an order of the committee, could not withdraw it. The question was taken—the Chair decided that it was in order—and by a vote of 19 to 22, the Senator from Virginia says, it was ruled otherwise, having been determined at a previous time to be in order; so that we have a decision both ways; and then we have the decision of yesterday, the action of the Committee on Finance, and the action of the Senate upon a case which is not so strong as this.

But there is one great and guiding rule. It is insisted by the Committee on Indian Affairs unanimously, that this amendment comes within the provisions of the act of 1834. If it does, the first duty of every committee of this body, which the Senate has no right to make out of order, is to provide an appropriation of money for all the purposes demanded by the laws. The Finance Committee must take up the laws, and see what appropriations are necessary. The time for which some appropriations run are limited by the Constitution in some respects; and if all are not limited, they ought to be. Our first duty is to inquire what sums of money are necessary to carry on the Government under existing laws. That is your duty by the rule. It is the great and paramount duty. It is the special duty of the Committee on Finance. Here is the old policy of the Government; here is the statute-book full of intercourse laws, from 1790 to this hour, providing that if the whites commit depredations upon the Indians, the Government shall pay the Indians; and that if the Indians commit depredations upon the whites, and the whites cannot get indemnity out of the Indians, the Government shall pay them. It stands pledged to indemnify the injured parties. In this case the President asked for authority to send a commission to audit these claims, as the Senator from Tennessee properly states. He appointed a commission to go to the country, which scaled them down to the lowest point. The proper time, though, to enter into this will be when we get to the merits of the case, and then, after a statement of them, it will be for the Senate to agree to or reject the claims; but upon the question of order, I say that the amendment is to carry out two or three existing laws of the land; and, as I again repeat, the Senator from Virginia has failed to answer what I said.

The Indian appropriation bills from 1790 until now have always provided for carrying out the act of 1834, or those acts of a similar character—cognate acts—which existed on the statute-book before that time. How are you to pay for these depredations? Look all along the frontier—Oregon, California, west of the Mississippi. There is no adequate fund, if there is an outbreak with the Indians and settlers. They have to go and redress themselves as a body, the doing of which in Georgia before these intercourse acts passed led to continual war and constant hostilities. The Government thought it was a wise policy to tell them, if you do not go and redress your own wrongs, we have a law upon our statute-book under which, if the Indians do not pay you in twelve months, you can come here and be indemnified. The moment the information was given to the President of the United States, and the fact was established in regard to the depredations, this class of claims, coming under a general law, was distinguishable from the ordinary private claims; and they come under annual appropriations as much as any single law connected with the Indian department. In this bill, among other items, there are the following appropriations:

"For payment of balance due for transportation of presents, goods, and provisions to the Camanche, Kioways, and other Indians on the Arkansas river, $1,200."

This is due. To whom? To the people who carried them. You made an appropriation for carrying the supplies; the appropriation was not sufficient, and now you come here to pay steamboat agents, or other agents, who transported the goods.

Again:

"To pay for certain goods borrowed by late agent, J. S. Watrous, to fulfill treaty stipulations with the Chippewas, to be replaced out of annuity goods, but which, with the agency building, were consumed by fire in May, 1853, $4,136 03."

He borrowed goods, and they were burnt up. Is not that a private claim? The amount is going to an individual for a private loss; but the loss having been incurred in public business, he ought to be paid for it. So that we can scarcely select from the whole appropriation bill a single item that stands as firmly on existing laws as the amendment which I have now offered under the direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Our committees could not work if the rule was enforced as contended for by the chairman of the Committee on Finance. Every member of a committee who goes to the committee rooms examines the laws. He sees there what the Indian department does, and what the other Departments do; and the committees are bound to report to the Senate whatever appropriations they think should be made; and they are derelict to their duty if they permit one dollar, which is necessary to carry out existing laws, not to be appropriated for the purpose.

Mr. WALKER. I find that, when the decision was made by the Chair, at the last session of Congress, upon an appeal from that decision, I voted to overrule the decision. The decision was, that the proposition was in order. At that time I had never been upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, and had no opportunity to investigate the claim. I am now satisfied that I voted wrong, and, upon reflection, I have come to the conclusion that, if a vote shall be again taken, I shall reverse my position. I do not believe it is a private claim. There were spoliation claims committed in these two States by the Indians in 1836 and 1837. Why was not indemnity made for those spoliations under the general law? It was by reason of a mere technicality. They were not technically committed upon and within Indian territory. If they had been there, so far from being considered a private interest, the general laws of the country would have already taken cognizance of them, and there would have been indemnity given, under the general intercourse laws of the United States; but when the application was made for indemnity for the spoliations, this technicality prevented their payment.

Now, certain steps had to be taken. They were taken. A commission was appointed to investigate the claims, ascertain their amount, and to whom due. The commissioners went to that section of the country. They examined into the matter of the claims. They made a full and elaborate report; but still the same difficulty occurred. In its effect and operation the proposition now is simply to do away with that technicality. If that technicality did not exist, the parties would apply to the proper Department and get their money now. That being the effect and operation of the amendment, I cannot see, for my life, how it can be viewed in the nature of a private claim; and I am only surprised that I did vote to consider it so before. It certainly resulted from my lack of information in reference to the matter. Hence, viewing it in the light that I now do, that it is in the nature of a general law, to obviate a mere technicality, which prevents a portion of our citizens from obtaining their proper indemnity, I shall reverse my vote, and vote that this is not a private claim, excluded by the rule.

Mr. COOPER. It does seem to me that the amendment falls within the spirit of the rule, and is not excluded by it. I do not think it was the intention of the rule to exclude claims of the character of the one provided for by the amendment. The object of the rule was to keep out of the Senate, during the pendency of the appropriation bills, the adjudication of private claims. We all know, sir, that contested claims cannot be considered—the proof pro and con cannot be weighed with the deliberation that is requisite in the midst of a debate on an appropriation bill. It is the province of the committee to examine and report upon these claims.

One word in relation to the circumstances under which this claim was rejected at the last session of Congress. I presume you remember, sir, that it was late at night, in the hurry of the closing hours of the session, when there was a great deal of business still to be done; when there was an apprehension existing in the minds of Senators—and a well-founded apprehension, too—that all of the important appropriation bills would be lost, if the time of the Senate should be taken up in disputing controverted points. This was the reason, I apprehend, why the majority of the Senate voted to overrule the decision of the Chair. We know that such considerations weigh upon the minds of Senators; and that, under such circumstances, on the question before the Senate for its determination, much weight cannot be attached to the vote of so small a majority as that by which the decision of the Chair was overruled.

I remember, at the same time, that another amendment was put upon the bill, much more in the nature of a private claim than the one in question—that was the claim of Andrew Taylor. I believe it was during the same day that was admitted, although there was some contest about it. It was debated, and was only lost in committee of conference at last, if I recollect aright; and if I am wrong, my friend from Arkansas, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, will put me right. That stood upon a similar policy, but savored more of the character of a private claim than this. I need not recapitulate the reasons advanced now by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. TOOMBS;] but it seems to me that they are surely sufficient to satisfy the Senate that this is not a private claim in the contemplation of the rule; that it is providing for a claim public in its character, to carry out the provisions of an existing law, and the policy which has existed from the foundation of the Government. I cannot doubt at all that the amendment is legitimate, and that it is not excluded by the rule.

Mr. CHASE. It is quite true that when this question was before the Senate, at the last session, I appealed to the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] who then moved it, to withdraw it; and that I referred to the condition in which the Senate was as a reason for his yielding to the appeal. He was inclined to do so; but said, that, being the organ of the committee, he did not feel at liberty to yield to his own personal inclinations. In referring to the condition of the Senate, I, of course, referred only to the fatigue incident to the late discussion during a night session. The vote by which this class of claims was decided to be a private claim was, however, not the less an understood vote upon the part of the Senate. I recollect perfectly well the argument that was urged by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. Bayard,] He said that he was interested in providing for the payment of claimants for French spoliations, and a bill had actually passed the Senate sanctioning the payment of those claims; and yet he said he was not at liberty to move an amendment to the civil and diplomatic bill providing for them. Although they arose under a law of the land, they were private claims. They arose under a treaty, the supreme law of the land; but still, being a large class of private claims, they could not be entertained by the Senate as an amendment to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

I have before me the report which was made at the session of 1838, upon these claims, when they were very fully considered and investigated. It was made by the present Comptroller of the Treasury, Mr. Whittlesey, then a member of the House of Representatives, whose habits of investigation and clearness in judgment are well known to every member of the Senate. In speaking of this class of claims, he says:

"The third class. Under this head, commencing at page 7, Executive document 127, is a list of claims to the number of 1003 for depredations committed by the Creek Indians upon the citizens of Georgia and Alabama."

He then showed the mode in which these claims had been reported. It seems that out of the three commissioners but two acted, and that no report of the evidence on which they acted was ever furnished to the Departments; but they stated, as the gross amount necessary to satisfy the claims, the sum of $356,167 92.

Mr. TOOMBS. I do not wish the Senator to go into that now. Both those statements are not so. My object now is only to show the impropriety of the point of order. I am, however, prepared with the documents to show that those statements are not correct, but that the three commissioners acted upon the greater part of the claims; though the third one resigned before the time of the commission expired. These are the facts of the case.

Mr. CHASE. I know it is improper to go into the merits of the claims upon a point of order; and yet we have had those merits urged upon the Senate as a reason why the decision should be that they are not private claims. I refer to this report for the purpose of showing that when they were referred to the Committee on Claims in the House of Representatives, they were reported as a list of claims—a list of claims of private individuals on the Government. Then they are private claims. It is impossible to question it, unless no claim is regarded as a private claim which arises under the provisions of any general law whatever.

If there is any law upon the statute-book, in consequence of which, remotely or approximately, any claim arises upon the Government on behalf of a private individual, then if these claims are not private claims, that claim is not a private claim, and such a rule becomes worthless. Whether or not these claims fall within the principle of the intercourse law, whether they fall within the provisions of that law, is another question; but I think I can show, as I endeavored to show on a former occasion, when that question was before the Senate, if it ever should come before us in a separate bill, or if the Senate entertain it now, that this claim does not fall within the principle of the Indian intercourse law, or within the terms of the law.

I will not, however, go into that now. My object in rising was simply to show that the committee which reported upon them heretofore, regarded them as private claims; and that they have been so regarded by the Senate heretofore; that there has been no decision of the Senate upon any occasion when they were not so held; and that if all these considerations are not sufficient to bring them within the rule, and to show that they ought to be excluded by it, it seems to me useless to have the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The Senator from Virginia objects to the consideration of the amendment, on the ground that it is excluded by the 30th rule. The individual opinion of the Chair is very clear upon that head: that it does come within the exception, and is excluded by the rule. But independent of his own opinion, the fact that the Senate, at the last session of Congress, overruled a decision sustaining the amendment as in order, would make it respectful for the Chair to decide that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. TOOMBS. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. CHASE. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BELL. I have a strong impression, with some other gentlemen who voted on this matter in 1852, when it was up, that the question of order was then raised, and decided favorably to the entertainment of the proposition. I have sent for the debates of that year to see if we cannot find some evidence of it there. Before I receive that volume, and before the question is taken, I wish to refer the Senate to a question of order which was raised on a somewhat similar case in that year. I find, by reference to the Journal of the Senate of August 10, 1852:

"The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill (H. R. 43) making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1853."

A motion was made by myself to amend the bill by inserting:

"For supplying a deficiency in the appropriations heretofore made for the removal of the Choctaw Indians from Mississippi, as estimated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $37,412."

"And the same being objected to as against the 30th rule, The PRESIDENT pro tempore submitted the question for the decision of the Senate, whether the said amendment was in order; and

"It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 30, nays 14."

This was at the same session, and upon the Indian appropriation bill. The Senator from Virginia must remember that decision. It was in regard to the claim of William B. Hart and others, who represented the contractors for removing the Choctaw Indians to the west of the Mississippi, under a contract made with the Government. The only specification in the existing law at the time was that the Executive should be authorized to make a contract for the removal of those Indians, and perhaps it made an appropriation for that purpose, but I am not certain whether that was so or not. Probably there was an appropriation in the bill. The contractors, in the execution of the contract, were detained a great length of time, unnecessarily, as they alleged, by the default of the Government in not sending one half the amount of scrip claimed by the emigrant Choctaw Indians in due time. They alleged that they had assembled a large proportion of the Indians in as short a time after they entered upon the execution of the contract as was practicable. The Indians were poor, and came with their families, perhaps one thousand or two thousand of them, and the contractors had to subsist the Indians out of their own funds. Their contract was, in terms, that they should remove the Indians for so much a head, or for a certain sum in gross, according to the number removed. The question arose whether they were not entitled to indemnity from the Government, in consequence of the default of the officers of the Government in not transmitting earlier to the Choctaw Indians the scrip which was to be handed over to them before they started on their journey to the west of the Mississippi. The claim was for the supplies, clothing, and provisions furnished while they were encamped.

An amendment to provide for this claim was moved to the Indian appropriation bill, and the question was raised whether it was not a mere private claim? The amendment was to provide for contractors who had stipulated for a particular amount to remove the Choctaws west of the Mississippi river, and after they had been paid the amount specified in the contract; the claim was for indemnity for extra supplies furnished them, upon the allegation that there had been neglect on the part of the Government. Upon that ground, the exception was taken by the Senator from Ohio, in that case as in the other, that it was excluded by the 30th rule. The question was debated pretty fully, and the Senate decided, by a vote of thirty to fourteen, that it was not a private claim coming within the 30th rule. Upon what ground? Because here was an existing act of Congress authorizing the President to contract for the transportation of those Indians west of the Mississippi, according to the terms of the contract, (probably it could have been executed for the specific amount mentioned in it;) and there was a further stipulation in it that they should make no claim for extra supplies. Nevertheless, the Government, by its negligence in waiting a month, or perhaps two months, before sending the scrip which was to be delivered to the Choctaws before their removal, caused the contractors to be subjected to the expense of supplying the Indians encamped in the mean time. Although the contractors received the entire amount specified in their contract with the Government for the removal, yet they claimed remuneration for extra expenses and charges incurred by the negligence of the Government.

The argument was, that it justly belonged to that class of private claims meant to be included under the act of 1830. The reply was, that here was an act of Congress authorizing this removal; here was an existing obligation on the part of the Government. It was a claim which was set up under an existing act which had not been fulfilled in good faith to the contractors. That was the state of that case; and the amendment was ruled to be in order.

In addition to that, I cannot help thinking that after the question upon the proposition now before us had been debated—whether it arose in 1852 or not for the first time I do not know—so clear was the expression of opinion in regard to it, that the amendment was ruled to be in order, after full consideration, when objection was taken that it did not properly come within the 30th rule. If I can refer to the debates on that point, I shall do so, and see whether I am not correct. I think it will be found that this question was settled at the very first session when the claim was presented in the Senate. But it may have been that in the decision alluded to by the Senator from Ohio, the exception was taken and sustained, when it was offered as an amendment to the deficiency bill by a member on his individual responsibility, and not by order of a standing committee of the Senate. The debates upon the question will show how that was. I do not myself remember the facts; and though I presented the amendment, I cannot say whether it was by order of the committee or not. I know it was amply discussed. I think the question of order was discussed. Whether the opinion of the Senate was taken upon the question or not, I am hardly able to say. It may be that my recollection is founded upon the objections stated in the argument; or it may be, as is suggested to me by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Geyer,] that many Senators declared their intention to vote against it, as an amendment to the deficiency bill, because it was not appropriate to that bill.

Mr. CHASE. I have before me, in the Congressional Globe, the debate to which the Senator from Tennessee refers, which took place in 1852, when he first introduced this provision.

Mr. BELL. Was that the first year when it was proposed?

Mr. CHASE. That is the first time it was presented when discussion arose. The Senator from Tennessee then proposed the following amendment to the deficiency bill of that year:

"For payment to the citizens of Alabama, Georgia, and Florida, for depredations committed by Creek Indians upon their property, and for other property taken by the troops of the United States and friendly Creeks, in the year 1836, $355,797."

And then he immediately proceeded to say:

"I offer this by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I would not have presumed to offer it upon my own responsibility," &c.

Then a debate followed upon the merits of the claim, showing clearly that there was no question of order made at that time.

The question on sustaining the decision of the Chair being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Butler, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Hamlin, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Pettit, Silldell, Stuart, Sumner, Toucey, Wade, Welles, and Wright—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Clay, Dawson, Everett, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Toombs, and Walker—15.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained, and the amendment was ruled out of order.

Mr. RUSK. I am authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following amendment:

That to such Cherokees as were omitted in the census taken by D. W. Siler, but who were included and paid under the act of July, 1843, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be authorized to pay them the same per capita allowance that was paid the other Indians under that distribution: Provided, The commission shall be satisfied that they ought to be included in said per capita distribution; and that the sum of $5,000 be appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the Senator from Texas if this applies to a band, or to individuals?

Mr. RUSK. I do not know exactly the amount, nor could the Commissioner of Indian Affairs himself estimate the amount, necessary to carry out this provision; but $5,000 is sufficient, and will, perhaps, more than cover it.

Mr. HUNTER. Is it a private claim?

Mr. RUSK. No, sir; but I will state how it arises. By the treaty with these Indians, they were to have so much per capita out of a certain fund. There was a census of them taken, in what year I do not remember, by D. W. Siler. It was alleged by the Indians that he did not take the entire census; that there were some who lived at a distance from where he was, whom he did not enumerate. An examination was made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and it was found that all the Indians were not included. From the report of the agent, it was ascertained that the Indians proposed to be provided for by this amendment were not included in Siler's census. They were just as much entitled to be paid under the treaty as were the others. The others were paid simply because they were included by Mr. Siler. This proposes to pay those who were not included, provided the commissioner shall ascertain that they are entitled. It is but an act of justice.

Mr. PRATT. I wish to have the decision of the Chair, whether this is a private claim or not.

Mr. RUSK. It is to carry out an existing law.

Mr. PRATT. I cannot see the distinction between this case and the one which has just been decided. The claim which has just been decided not to be in order, was a claim growing out of the act of 1834.

Mr. HUNTER. Not at all.

Mr. PRATT. If there is a claim at all in that case, it is a claim existing under the provisions of the act of 1834. Now, the Senator from Texas supposes that his amendment does not come within the rule which forbids private claims to be offered as amendments to an appropriation bill, because, he says, it is a claim growing out of some public law. That is the only ground upon which he can put it; because, by the very terms of the amendment itself, a claim of so much money to be paid per capita to certain Indians. It is, therefore, a private claim on the part of those Indians, to receive per capita a certain amount of money.

The Senator from Texas says this is not a private claim, within the view of the thirtieth rule, because it is a claim growing out of a treaty or public law. I think the Senator is right; but if he is right now, the Senate were wrong in the decision which they have just given. A decision in favor of this claim now, by the Senate, would involve, in order to preserve consistency, as a necessary result, the reconsideration of the vote which has just been given. If the inhabitants of Alabama and Georgia are entitled to receive anything for the depredations committed upon them, it is only because, under the provisions of the act of 1834, they are entitled to the money which was proposed to be appropriated by the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia. It is a provision, therefore, made by a public law; and it is a provision in relation to individuals. Here is an amendment which gives a per capita amount to Indians; and the only reason, according to the argument of the Senator from Texas, why it is not a private claim, is because these individual Indians are entitled to it under some public law. I desire only, for the sake of consistency, that the Chair shall decide this question.

Mr. RUSK. The rule is very clear:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law."

Now here is clearly an existing law; here is a treaty with these Indians, which is the law of the land, providing for the payment of a per capita allowance to them. It is clear, then, that this amendment is to carry out a general law of the land. But the rule proceeds:

"or some act or resolution, previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate."

This is simply carrying out a law, an obligation, which would have been discharged before but for a defect in the census which was taken, and which was discovered and rectified by the act of 1848. It is just as clearly not a private claim, within the meaning of the rule, as is a provision to pay the salary of an officer. The salary of the officers of the Government is ascertained by the law of the land; and the amount to be paid to these Indians must be ascertained by reference to the treaty, which is the law of the land.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to read the first clause of the seventeenth section of the act of 1834, on which the claim presented by the honorable Senator from Georgia is predicated. It is in these words:

"That if any Indian or Indians, belonging to any tribe in amity with the United States, shall, within the Indian country, take or destroy the property of any person lawfully within such country, or shall pass from the Indian country into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States, and there take, steal, or destroy, any horse, horses, or other property, belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States, such citizen or inhabitant, his representative, attorney, or agent, may make application to the proper superintendent, agent, or sub agent, who, upon being furnished with the necessary documents and proofs, shall, under the direction of the President, make application to the nation or tribe to which said Indian or Indians shall belong, for satisfaction," &c.

Then it provides, that if the nation to which the Indian or Indians depredating may belong does not indemnify the individuals suffering, the United States shall do it.

Mr. RUSK. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. PRATT. Certainly.

Mr. RUSK. I voted with the Senator from Maryland in regard to the amendment moved by the Senator from Georgia. I thought it ought to be included, and I think so still. I have voted for that half a dozen times. But the Senator will observe this clear distinction: that the law of 1834 is not applicable to the States of Alabama and Georgia, and therefore the claims of citizens of those States for the depredations referred to have not been paid.

Mr. PRATT. I desire only to make myself understood. I find that I voted, at the last session, that the claim, presented by the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, was a private claim; but I apprehend very many Senators so voted because they did not think that the citizens of Georgia and Alabama came within the provisions of the law of 1834. Whether they are entitled to the money or not is one question. They claim to be entitled to it under that law. You refused to permit that question to be decided by the Senate, by saying that it is a private claim, although it may exist as a claim under that law. Now, I say that the decision which has been made by the Senate should not have been made; but the whole question should be presented to the Senate, whether, under the seventeenth section of the act of 1834, the inhabitants of Alabama and Georgia were entitled to be paid for those depredations. Now, the Senator from Texas concedes that if they were entitled to be paid under the act of 1834, that amendment stands in the same position with the one which he has now offered.

Mr. RUSK. Certainly.

Mr. PRATT. If the inhabitants of Alabama and Georgia have no claim under the act of 1834, it is not pretended, on the part of the honorable Senator from Georgia, or any one else, that they have any claim at all. Therefore, being presented from a committee, as a claim under an existing law, the Senate should not have decided against the amendment upon a question of order, as to whether the claim ought to be considered or not. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported that as an amendment, upon the ground that it was a just claim under the act of 1834.

Mr. RUSK. Under the principles of the act of 1834.

Mr. PRATT. Under the act of 1834.

Mr. RUSK. Oh, no!

Mr. PRATT. That is to say, Indians in amity with the United States proceeded from their territory within the limits of Alabama, and destroyed the property of citizens of the United States; and that should be paid for under the act of 1834. Commissioners were appointed, who have adjudicated the amount, and that amount has been recommended to be paid. That is the claim, as I understand it to be, presented by the honorable Senator from Georgia. Now, I say it is manifestly unjust that that amendment should have been set aside, on the ground that it was a private claim, and that this claim should be admitted, when the Senator who presents this admits that if the other comes within the act of 1834, it is not a private claim, and should not have been ruled out of order.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Maryland was mistaken in regard to the intercourse act. It only applies to Indians within the territories of the United States, and not to Indians within the States. If the Indians within the territories come into the States, and make spoiliations, it covers their case, and it covers the case of spoiliations within the territories; but it does not apply at all to Indians within a State; and there is the mistake of the Senator. Nor was the claim set up heretofore—I do not know what reasons may be urged for it now—on the ground that it comes within that act; but it was said to come within the equity of the act. It was said that if the policy and principle upon which that act was founded, were correct, then, in equity, the persons upon whom spoiliations were committed in Georgia and Alabama were entitled to indemnity, but it never was asserted that the claim came within the act of 1834.

Mr. PRATT. The act provides that if Indians "shall pass from the Indian country into any State or Territory inhabited by the citizens of the United States, and there take" &c., indemnity shall be made. Did not those Indians pass from the Indian country?

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator will look at the first section of that act, he will find that it defines what the Indian country is.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator from Virginia is mistaken.

Mr. HUNTER. We shall see.

Mr. TOOMBS. The first section of the act is not, I think, subject to the construction which the Senator from Virginia would put upon it.

Mr. RUSK. I rise to a point of order. The question which gentlemen are debating cannot be reached without a reconsideration.

Mr. PRATT. It is claimed that this amendment is out of order.

Mr. RUSK. I submit that question to the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT.) The question presented is, whether the amendment moved by the Senator from Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, comes within the rule. It is very difficult to apply the thirtieth rule to all the different cases which arise here suddenly; but the Chair is of the impression that this amendment is excluded as a private claim.

Mr. RUSK. I appeal from the decision of the Chair; and I desire to say a word upon the question, as the argument has taken a very extensive range. If any payment ever be made under the appropriation made by this amendment of mine, it will be made under a treaty, which is the law of the land. The amendment does not select out the individuals to whom the money is to be paid; it does not ascertain them; it does not fix the amount. The amount is fixed by law. This is altogether different from the case which has just been ruled to be a private claim, and excluded as such, because the Indian intercourse law of 1834 does not extend over Alabama and Georgia. If it did, there would be no application of that sort, because the law provides that the claims shall be paid out of the Treasury. Every one familiar with the history of that claim, (and it has been before Congress for several years past,) knows that it does not come within the law of 1834. I believe upon two occasions, certainly upon one, a bill passed the Senate, but was defeated in the House, to extend the provisions of the intercourse law of 1834 to Alabama and Georgia. I believe that it is not pretended—I do not think the honorable Senator from Georgia pretended—that it came within the provisions of that law. He said it came within the principles of the law, and ought to have been paid according to them; but the law does not extend there; and twice, I think, certainly once, when a bill passed this body to extend it over the States of Georgia, Alabama, Florida, and Texas, it was defeated in the House of Representatives.

Mr. TOOMBS. I am satisfied that the decision of the Chair is wrong; and I will, therefore, vote with the Senator from Texas. I am satisfied that the amendment of that Senator is to carry out an existing law. So was the amendment which I introduced by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and so were some of the amendments of the Committee on Finance. The Senate acquiesced in the amendments of the Finance Committee, decided against mine, and will probably decide for this, showing the certainty of these matters.

But, sir, I wish to put the Senator from Virginia right on another point. I stated that the case which I presented was clearly within the principle, and, in my judgment, within the letter of the intercourse law of 1834. He has referred to the first section of that law, as showing that it does not embrace Alabama and Georgia. That first section is a very singular one, and, according to its wording, the gentleman contends that the States of Alabama and Georgia are not included within its letter. I will read it, to show that he is wrong in point of fact. It defines the Indian country thus:

"All that part of the United States west of the Mississippi, and not within the States of Missouri and Louisiana or the Territory of Arkansas"

That does not include us, of course; but it goes on:

"—and also that part of the United States east of the Mississippi river, and not within any State, to which the Indian title has not been extinguished."

This includes the Creek country then within Alabama and Georgia. It was not within a State to which the Indian title had not been extinguished, but within States to which the Indian title had been extinguished. The territory mentioned, it was declared, should "for the purposes of this act be taken and deemed to be the Indian country." The act does not mention territories east of the Mississippi; it does not mention Florida, then a Territory, as the Senator seems to suppose. It applies to "that part of the United States east of the Mississippi river, and not within any State to which the Indian title has not been extinguished." This Indian country was "east of the Mississippi river, and not within any State to which the Indian title has not been extinguished," but within States to which the Indian title had been extinguished.

Mr. PETTIT. What is the date of the act?

Mr. TOOMBS. June 30, 1834.

Mr. PETTIT. That was before Wisconsin and Michigan were admitted, and those were the Territories alluded to "east of the Mississippi, and not within any State."

Mr. TOOMBS. The words are: "not within any State to which the Indian title has not been extinguished." That is the designation. It does not say "any State," but "any State to which the Indian title has not been extinguished."

Mr. PETTIT. It refers to lands to which the Indian title has not been extinguished.

Mr. TOOMBS. It says "that part of the United States east of the Mississippi river, and not within any State to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, for the purposes of this act, be taken and deemed to be Indian country."

Mr. FISH. What Indian title was there to extinguish in Georgia and Alabama?

Mr. PETTIT. What is the punctuation of that clause? Is there a comma after "State?"

Mr. TOOMBS. That makes no difference.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator will observe the section closely, he will see that I was strictly accurate. First it applies to all Territories west of the Mississippi river, excepting by name the States there, and the Territory of Arkansas. Next it applies east of the Mississippi, except to States in which the Indian title has not been extinguished. It does not apply, it cannot apply, to States in which the Indian title has been extinguished, because there is there no Indian territory to which it can apply; but it was designed to apply to the Territories of Wisconsin and Florida, which were not then States, and in which there was Indian territory east of the Mississippi. If the Senator from Georgia will look at the debates—for there have been extended debates upon this claim—he will find that it was admitted, by those who advocated the claim, that the intercourse act did not apply to it. If it applied, the claimants might have gone to the Department without coming here for payment. He will find that that admission was made two years ago by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL,] by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLEMENS,] who introduced it, and by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] who discussed it. It was never claimed before that that law covered it.

Mr. STUART. I wish to ascertain from the Senator from Texas one or two facts in reference to this question before I vote upon it. I understand him to say, that there was originally a treaty with these Indians, by which certain sums of money were to be paid; that then it was claimed that some of them were left out in an enumeration taken, and that the object of this amendment is to supply that defect, and to carry out the provisions of the treaty, as well as of a subsequent law.

Mr. RUSK. That is precisely the case.

Mr. STUART. A word or two will explain the reason for my vote upon this question. I voted to sustain the decision of the Chair in the other case, from a very clear impression that he was right. But, sir, under our Government, a treaty with an Indian tribe occupies precisely the same relation that a treaty with Great Britain does. If we were to enter into a treaty with Great Britain to pay certain claims, an amendment to carry out the provisions of that treaty would clearly be in order, and could not be objected to as providing for a private claim. Here is a case arising under a treaty with an Indian tribe. It is the duty of the Executive department of this Government to carry out that treaty. There has been a defect, in virtue of which the provisions of the treaty have not been carried out. The object of this amendment is to cure that defect, and to carry out the original intention.

Now, sir, such a proposition is clearly not a private claim. The law, for certain wise purposes, has said that payments to Indians shall be made per capita, in order to prevent frauds; but that does not individualize the claims at all. If you are to carry out the distinction contended for on the other side, there would be nothing but a private claim under the Government. The salaries of your officers would become private claims.

The question has been alluded to as to contractors—individuals who contract to carry out treaty provisions with Indians, by furnishing goods, &c. That is all within the authority of the Executive department, and is a public transaction; but the moment you step beyond that contract, and find that your contractor asks for extra pay, it becomes a private claim, and is excluded under the rule.

I cannot consent, of course, to take up the time of the Senate in attempting to elucidate this question. I only wished to call out these facts from the Senator from Texas, by which it appears that this amendment is clearly to carry out a treaty, a public law, and not to indemnify individuals. The difficulty in the other case was, that the amendment was to pay private individuals for individual claims that they had for spoiliations, which is as much a private claim as any which can be presented.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The Senator from Michigan has said, and well said, exactly what I had wished to say in regard to this case. It will be remembered that it was the constant practice of the late Vice President King, when presiding officer of this body, in ascertaining the distinction between what were and were not private claims, to inquire whether they were in fulfillment of an existing law or treaty, or not. If they were, he never excluded them, although the benefit of the proposed appropriation might inure to one individual, or to a class of individuals.

The treaty under which this claim arises is the treaty of 1835-'6, with the Cherokees. An appropriation was made in the year 1851 to carry out that treaty. In the administration, however, of that fund, the mere division of it, it was requisite, for the purpose of ascertaining who were the true beneficiaries of it, to make an enrollment of the Indians. An agent was sent out by the Department for that purpose. In making that enrollment, unavoidably, from the absence of the claimants and from different causes, he was unable to make a complete enrollment of all the persons entitled. Hence, some who were clearly entitled under the law, and under the treaty, did not receive their per capita. I will call the attention of the Chair, and of the Senate also, to the case of Andrew Taylor, who was embraced by a vote of the Senate in the last Indian appropriation bill, arising under the very same treaty, but under a different clause. That, by a vote of the Senate, was decided not to be a private claim. That occurred on the discussion of the last Indian appropriation bill in this body.

Mr. TOUCEY. I voted to sustain the decision of the Chair in the case last decided, and I voted so upon the ground that there was no existing legislation that would authorize the payment. I think so still. If there had been existing legislation which would authorize the payment, so that the Executive officers of the Government could make that payment, if they had funds applicable to the purpose, it would be a case for the admission of the proposition under the rule; and then I should have voted differently from what I did. In this case, there is a law under which it is the duty of the officers of the Government to make this payment, if they have the means of doing so. The object of this appropriation is not to change the law, it is not to add a new law, it is merely to provide ways and means from which the officers at the other end of the avenue may make the payment.

Now, if the Senator from Georgia was right in his supposition, that the claim which he presented was a debt due within the law of 1834, and only wanted an appropriation of money, I voted wrong; but, thinking that he needed some further legislation, and that the propriety of that legislation must be brought under discussion before we reached the point of appropriation, I voted in opposition to his views. But now in this case, we need no new law. We need no extension of law. Indeed, we need no legislation, properly so called. We need merely the appropriation of the money; and the existing law applies it to this object. If I understand it, there is a treaty by which these individuals are entitled to this money—just as much entitled to it as any officer under this Government is entitled to the amount which the law has fixed for his salary.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe it has been ruled by those who have held the Chair, that those claims which come in under a treaty are not precluded by the rule of the Senate. The Senator from Texas states that there is a treaty stipulation in this case. No doubt there is. I have not adverted to it. There is a clear distinction, which has been stated by the Senator from Connecticut, between the case of a man who comes in under a treaty and one who comes in merely under some supposed equity of a law.

Mr. RUSK called for the yeas and nays upon the question of sustaining the decision of the Chair; and they were ordered, and taken with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fish, Jones of Iowa, Norris, Pettit, Shidell, Sumner, Wade, and Williams—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Everett, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Stuart, Tombs, Toucey, Walker, Weller, and Wright—19.

So the decision of the Chair was overruled, and the amendment of Mr. Rusk was decided to be in order.

The amendment was then adopted.

Mr. COOPER. I move the following amendment, by instruction of the Committee on Indian Affairs:

To pay Andrew Taylor for his reservation of six hundred and forty acres of land at Sitico Old Town, on the waters of the Tennessee river, $14,720, with interest from the 23d of August, 1843.

Mr. HUNTER. That seems to me to be a private claim. The Senator from Arkansas tells me that the decision of the Senate has been had upon it, and that they have decided that it is not a private claim. If that is the case, I make no opposition to it.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. This is the very claim to which I alluded a few minutes ago, which was ruled into the Indian appropriation bill last year, and passed by the Senate, but was lost by the committee of conference. It was decided then, by the vote of the Senate, not to be a private claim.

Mr. STUART. What are the facts?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It arises under a different clause of the same treaty.

Mr. COOPER. I will state, in a few words, the nature of the case. This claim arises under the treaty of 1817, made between the United States and the Cherokee Indians. Andrew Taylor was married to a Cherokee woman, by whom he had children; and under the provisions of the treaty, therefore, became entitled to a section of land. This section of land was situated at Sitico Old Town, on the waters of the Tennessee river. Some time subsequently to the ratification of the treaty, the Legislature of Tennessee passed a law, by which the reservations made under the treaty were condemned and ordered to be sold. By the provisions of that act a sale was made, and the reservation was purchased by a white man, who ejected Andrew Taylor; and Taylor, by this process, lost his land.

In 1835 a subsequent treaty was made, and it contained a provision for the indemnification of the reserves under the treaty of 1817. By the seventeenth article of the same treaty, provision was made for ascertaining the value of the reservations; and the mode of assessment was fixed by the article. President Jackson appointed two gentlemen, Messrs. Upton and Summy, to make the valuation. They were to fix the value of the land in its natural state at the time the valuation should take place. They proceeded to value the land, and fixed it at the sum named in the amendment—$14,720. Their commission expired before the report of their proceedings was filed. Subsequently, however, the estimates for reserves, under the treaty of 1817, were returned to the office, and I believe nearly all of them have been paid. Interest is fixed from the time when the valuation was returned to the Department and became final—the 2d of August, 1843.

These are the facts; and I presume there will be no difficulty on the part of the Senate in passing the amendment. I will not go into a statement of the hardships that this man has undergone. It is not necessary. The amendment was discussed at the last session of Congress, and adopted by the Senate, and was only lost, as the chairman of the committee has informed the Senate, in the committee of conference, it having been given up for the purpose, as I have learned from him, of securing matters which were regarded as of greater public moment. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CHASE. I think that the Senate is very much in the habit of deciding claims to be private claims against which there is a majority of the Senate, and reversing the rule as to claims which meet the favor of a majority. I think that was so in regard to this claim at the last session of Congress. I recollect an appeal was then made to the Senate, which the Senator from Pennsylvania now has not made, in regard to the peculiar hardship of the case, and the Senate decided it to be not a private claim, although it had previously decided the whole of the class of claims which has been presented by the Senator from Georgia to be private claims.

Now, sir, I wish to call the attention of the Senate, for a moment, to the thirtieth rule, and ascertain what its real construction is; for, in my judgment, this is a private claim, and falls within the rule, and I desire to be consistent in my votes. The rule is in these words:

"No amendment, proposing additional appropriations, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received, whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate."

Now, sir, this rule establishes a general regulation applicable in its first clause to all amendments, of every description, proposing additional appropriations. It, however, admits of certain exceptions. The first of these exceptions is, "unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law." That applies to all amendments proposing additional appropriations. The next exception is, "or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments." If an amendment falls within either of these exceptions it may be presented. "And no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim." If it stopped there, it would exclude the whole of the amendments which fall within these previous exceptions clearly, and it would not be in order to offer an amendment providing for a private claim, although it might be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law; although it might be made to carry out the provisions of some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate; although it might be moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some one of the Departments. I say that if the rule stopped there, no amendment proposing to provide for a private claim would be in order, although it fell within either one of these exceptions. The rule, however, does not stop there, but it goes further, and the whole of this clause, as it stands, is in these words:

"No amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate."

Now, sir, this exception of private claims is universal, and the clause, "although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate," is applicable to only one of this class of exceptions, which control all amendments whatever. It would follow, then, that no amendment can be received whose object is to provide for a private claim in any case. It cannot be received, although it may be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, if it comes strictly under the head of private claims. An example may be found very easily. Suppose a claim to arise under the provisions of a general law, as in the settlement of a post office account, or as to the compensation of some contractor under a contract made with the Government, and suppose that claim has been presented to the proper Department, and there rejected, and then comes here to the Senate. Then it is a private claim; yet it may be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, but still I think it is excluded by this rule.

Now, I admit that, according to the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania, this claim does arise in consequence of a treaty which provided for the payment of the value of this reservation to the reservee, and the amount appears to have been ascertained. What has prevented its being paid by the proper Department I do not know; but it seems to me to be one of those cases which are constantly coming here, constantly referred to the Committee on Claims, but which are excluded by the rule from being proposed as amendments to general appropriation bills. If it be not excluded by the rule, then it would follow that any amendment which provides for a private claim may be received in every case whatsoever, provided for by the exceptions to the general rule in relation to all claims whatsoever.

Mr. COOPER. I think if strict attention had been given to the statement which I made, the objection would not have been raised by the Senator from Ohio. It seems to me very clear that this claim is admissible under the rule. I said, in some remarks which I submitted on another claim before the Senate, during the course of the morning, that the object of that rule was to exclude private claims from being considered during the pendency of the general appropriation bills, because it was not supposed that the Senate, in full session, would be very competent to form an estimate of the amount that should be paid. That, no doubt, was the substantial reason for the adoption of the rule. But here, sir, in pursuance of the treaty of 1835, a claim arises, the amount of which has been already fixed, and fixed by the provisions of the treaty itself. The sum was ascertained as far back as 1843, and all that is necessary to be done is to authorize the Department to pay it, with such interest as may have accrued in the mean time. What would be the object of sending this claim to the Committee on Claims? The amount is fixed. The committee would not gainsay the report of the commissioners, because there is no evidence, beyond their report, of what was the value of the reserved section of land. They were appointed under the provisions of the treaty to estimate, or to value, to speak more properly, the section of which this reservee had been deprived by the act of the Legislature of Tennessee. The manner, the time at which the valuation was to be fixed, and all the other preliminaries were arranged and provided for by the treaty, and in pursuance of it commissioners were appointed, whose report is on file in the Department, and that fixed the sum. It is in pursuance of a treaty which is the law of the land. The amount is fixed; nothing is left to be ascertained, all that is to be done is to authorize the proper Department of the Government to pay it to the party entitled. It seems to me that there is nothing clearer than that it falls within the principles of the rule, which has been passed upon by the Senate during the session of to-day. I hope there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is under the impression that the amendment is excluded by the rule.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to make a remark, and then submit a motion to the Senate. I think my friend from Virginia must have seen, by this time, that the rule about excluding these private claims is of no practical value to the Senate, and that the exposition of it has occupied more time and given us more trouble than would be involved in the determination of the merits of all the private claims which have been proposed to be put upon appropriation bills since the rule was adopted; and I wish he would consider the propriety of introducing a proposition to rescind that rule, so far as it excludes private claims recommended by the standing committees of this body. Having said this, I desire to seize this favorable occasion to submit a motion, that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. SLIDELL. I hope that course will not be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a question before the Senate undisposed of, and therefore the motion of the Senator from North Carolina is not in order, except by the unanimous consent of the Senate. By unanimous consent the motion can be received and disposed of.

Mr. SLIDELL. If the Senate adjourn over regularly from Thursday to Monday, I consider it equivalent to the rejection of every private bill to which a single member of the Senate may object during the present session of Congress.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I wish to remind the Senator from Louisiana, that to-morrow has been set apart for the consideration of adverse reports.

Mr. SLIDELL. The reason for disposing of them is equally strong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the motion to be objected to.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator from Louisiana opposes the motion, but he does not object to its consideration now.

Mr. SLIDELL. I do not object to entertaining the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. Do I understand the Chair to decide that the amendment which I have offered from the Committee on Indian Affairs is not in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so decides.

Mr. COOPER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I feel bound to do it.

Mr. FISH. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF REPORTS.

Mr. FISH submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing: Resolved, That eight thousand copies of the report of an expedition down the Zuni and Colorado rivers, by Captain Sigreaves, and the like number of the report of Captain R. B. Marcy, of his exploration of the waters of the Red river, in addition to the number of these reports heretofore ordered, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 27, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

Before calling the House to order,

The SPEAKER laid before the body a communication from J. Lawrence Smith, Secretary of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, inviting the members of the House to attend the meetings of that Association, now in session at the Smithsonian Institution.

The Journal of yesterday was then read and approved.

The SPEAKER stated that the question before the House was on recommitting to the Committee on the Public Lands a bill "granting lands to the several States to aid in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes," and that upon that question the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] was entitled to the floor.

COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Senate have returned to this House the Military Academy appropriation bill, insisting upon their amendments non-concurred in by the House, and asking for a committee of conference. I move for the appointment of a committee of conference on the part of the House to meet the committee which has been appointed on the part of the Senate.

There being no objection, it was so ordered; and

The SPEAKER thereupon appointed Messrs. JONES, of Tennessee, BISSELL, and DAVIS, of Indiana, as said committee on the part of the House.

DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. DISNEY, after some preliminary remarks, said that the public domain was vast in amount. He doubted exceedingly whether any man now living could justly appreciate the value of that domain in regard to the future, looking upon it as the most solid basis of credit in time of peace, and one of the most effective sinews in time of war, and considering the teeming millions of people who were to inhabit it.

For the last sixty years the public domain had been preserved intact; and now it remained for this Congress to signalize itself by an abrupt and violent departure from the principles of the Government, and the destruction of this invaluable treasure of the Federal Government.

He knew and could appreciate the attempt by gentlemen to secure an ephemeral popularity by wresting and tearing a portion of it as plunder from the Government; but the people of the United States are intelligent, and would sooner or later ascertain and understand that they were also the proprietors and masters of the funds of the General Government, as well as of the funds of their own respective State governments; and when Representatives shall go home and boast of the amount taken from one pocket to be put into the other, they will find that the process will not pay, after the substantial interests of the country have been sacrificed by the operation.

While he confessed he had little hope of arresting the progress of the House in wasting the public lands, he should feel all the better in the consciousness of the fact that he had discharged his duty on this subject. By the graduation bill, should it become a law, the value of the public domain now in market would be stricken down in value to the extent of fifty millions of dollars.

As to the report adverse to granting lands for the benefit of the indigent insane, he should stand upon it. By the passage of that bill, a new era had been inaugurated in the violation of the principles heretofore applicable to the public domain; an act which, in his opinion, was not only unconstitutional, but impolitic.

The bill now under consideration, introduced by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT], proposed to give lands to the old States of the Union, in common with the new, for internal improvement and educational purposes. The principles on which it was advocated by that gentleman were fully set forth in his report upon the subject; and with this report it was his [Mr. DISNEY's] purpose to deal. Of all remarkable documents which had ever fallen under his eye, during his legislative experience, he had never before seen one which would compare with this. There was in it not one fact proven. He [Mr. DISNEY] had said, yesterday, that he would to-day gibbet the report, and now commenced that operation; and after he was done, he doubted whether the gentleman from New York would put his hand upon the carcass to take it up.

He examined, at length, the statements in Mr. Bennett's report, and said, in the course of his remarks, that the General Government has never, except in the cases of grants of lands to the deaf and dumb asylums of Connecticut and Kentucky, made a naked gift to the States until this House of Representatives set the example the other day.

[The speech will be found in the Appendix.] Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. After the very able speech of the gentleman from Ohio, I move, to enable the House to have the full advantage of it, that this question be postponed until Tuesday next. To-morrow will be private bill day and Monday will be resolution day, and both those days will, therefore, be fully occupied. I hope the House will postpone this subject till Tuesday.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to ask the gentleman from Louisiana to withdraw that motion. I desire to submit some remarks to the House upon this bill, and I fear that I shall not be able to be in the House on Tuesday next, or probably for some days to come. I will renew the motion to postpone.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like very much to oblige the gentleman from North Carolina, but perhaps it will answer his purpose to speak on some subsequent day. There are several gentlemen upon this side of the House who desire to speak early upon this bill, but have yielded to what they believe to be the proprieties of the occasion.

Mr. ROGERS. Well, as I understand the morning hour has nearly expired, I will withdraw my request.

Mr. HOUSTON obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER. The motion to postpone to a day certain is not debatable.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not going to debate it. I want to know whether, if this bill be postponed till Tuesday next, it will be competent for the Chair to go on with the call of the committees for reports during the morning hour? There is an immense amount of business blocked up in the committees.

The SPEAKER. It will be competent for the Chair to do so; but the call will be confined, on that day, to territorial business, the whole of that week having been set apart for the consideration of territorial business. If there are no reports touching the subject of the Territories to be made during the morning hour, the Chair supposes that the committees might be called for reports during that week.

Mr. CUTTING. I rise to a point of order, involving, perhaps, more the answer to a question for information. Did I not understand that the Committee on Territories had made all their reports, and that the report now under consideration was postponed until a future day to accommodate the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT], and that in the mean time other committees were called upon and made reports? If the effect of that postponement is to keep the Committee on Territories still before the House in order to make reports—

The SPEAKER. Not the Committee on Territories. Next week is set apart for territorial business, and that alone of a local character.

Mr. CUTTING. Under that special order merely?

The SPEAKER. Yes, under the special order alone.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to withdraw the application I made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] seems to be laboring under the impression that other reports from other committees would, in some way, be cut off by the special order. That is not the case. Next week has been set apart for the consideration of territorial business of a local character alone.

Mr. CUTTING. Territorial business reported?

The SPEAKER. Such as is already reported, and which may be specially reported, of a local character. Upon that day, it will be in order to make reports of territorial business of a local character merely.

Mr. CUTTING. Coming within the purview of that special order?

The SPEAKER. It would cut out the Nebraska bill. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAPP] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PERKINS] submits the motion that the consideration of this bill be postponed until the next Tuesday. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio takes precedence.

The question was then taken upon Mr. SAPP's motion; and it was agreed to.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN stated that when the committee last rose, the pending question was on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH,] and that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, rose to address the committee on the subject of the Nebraska-Kansas bill. He rejoiced from the bottom of his heart that there was some indication to repair a great wrong which had been perpetrated on the South; and expressed his surprise and astonishment that gentlemen from that section of the country were to be found in opposition to this measure.

After reviewing the origin of slavery, he proceeded to prove the unconstitutionality of the Missouri compromise, which he denied had brought peace to the country. On the contrary, from the period of its enactment up to the present time, there had been no repose. The prohibition of 1820 did not originate in a love of humanity and justice, but in an ambitious desire for political power. This was the motive of its originators.

He then adverted to the Journals to show that a majority of the southern members of the House voted against the restriction of 36° 30'; and desired to know, in view of this fact, how gentlemen could say that the South imposed this restrictive feature on the North?

Mr. S., in his remarks, (which have been withheld for revision,) alluded, in terms of censure, to the course of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS.]

[His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BARRY said he came hither entertaining the opinion that we live under a constitutional Government, but he had been told that we have compromises equally obligatory and binding upon us as the Constitution itself. He repudiated the idea that this is a Government of compromises; it is a Government of the Constitution; and that portion of the country which receives less, or asks more than the Constitution guarantees, is faithless to the trust under which it lives, or to the Constitution itself. He then argued the unconstitutionality of the Missouri act of 1820, insisting that it had been violated over and over again.

Mr. B. having concluded, (a report of whose speech will be found in the Appendix,)

Several MEMBERS claimed the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. OLIVER] has the floor.

Mr. OLIVER. If it be the pleasure of the committee—as I do not myself particularly desire to speak this evening—I would wish that my friend from New York [Mr. HUGHES] may be permitted to make his speech now. If so, I will yield him the floor for that purpose, with the understanding that I am to get it to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from New York is at liberty to proceed.

Mr. HUGHES took the floor.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I wish to appeal to the gentleman from New York to yield me the floor for the purpose of making a personal explanation in reply to some remarks made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH.]

Mr. HUGHES. I am certainly willing to yield when the request is put in this way, as a matter of personal explanation. But I trust the time that may be consumed by the gentleman from Ohio will not be taken out of my hour.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Oh, no. I trust not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is now at liberty to make his personal explanation.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Mr. Chairman, any personal explanation from me comes with pain on all occasions—

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to make a suggestion.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I have the floor myself only for a few minutes.

Mr. BAYLY. I merely wish to make this suggestion, and I trust the gentleman from Ohio will not deem it discourteous in me to do so. My colleague who spoke this morning, and to whom the gentleman from Ohio wishes to respond, is not now in the House. I hope therefore he will postpone his explanation till to-morrow.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Very well; be it so. I should certainly wish the gentleman from Virginia to be present, and I supposed he was here. I will take occasion, however, to say to the committee that I did not intend to reply to the remarks of that gentleman, nor would I but for his personal attack on me. I will not occupy more than eight or ten minutes in the morning at furthest; and I hope the committee will extend me that time to-morrow.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes; certainly.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUGHES] has the floor, and only yielded it to the gentleman from Ohio for a personal explanation.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Then I ask that gentleman to yield me the floor that I may make a motion for the committee to rise.

Mr. HUGHES. I got the floor on the understanding that I was to go on now.

Mr. WENTWORTH. But you can have it to-morrow.

Several MEMBERS. No, no; let him go on now.

Mr. HUGHES then addressed the committee during his hour in opposition to the Nebraska bill.

[His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. SAPP obtained the floor, and moved that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman, [Mr. CHANDLER,] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 271, "to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854," and the amendments of the Senate to said bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

[Here a message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, requesting that the House would return to that body Senate bill No. 352, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers and settlers on the Maison Rouge Grant, in the event of the final adjudication of the title in favor of the United States,'" approved July 27, 1852.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I hope by unanimous consent the Clerk will be directed to return the bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and the Clerk was ordered to return the bill to the Senate.]

Mr. FLORENCE moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And thereupon, at five minutes past four o'clock, p. m., the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 28, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the War Department, in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of 2d December last, "that the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the House of Representatives, as soon as practicable, with a copy of the report, estimates, and maps of the survey of the road from Mendota to the Big Sioux river," submitting the report of the Colonel of Topographical Engineers, inclosing the papers called for; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ORR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report a bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed. It is territorial business, and it is necessary that it should be printed at once, as it will come up for action next week.

There being no objection, the bill was received, read a first and second time by its title, as follows, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

A bill to authorize the President to cause to be surveyed the tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota, belonging to the half-breeds or mixed bloods of the Dacotah or Sioux nation of Indians, and for other purposes.

DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The SPEAKER. This is private bill day, but there being no private bills upon the table, and in the absence of a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House, the following bill is under consideration: "A bill granting lands equally to the several States to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the support of schools." The immediate question before the House with regard to it is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. PERKINS,] that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Tuesday next.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana to withdraw his motion, in order that I may have an opportunity of addressing the House to-day.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I will withdraw the motion to gratify the gentleman from North Carolina; but I give notice that I shall insist, as far as I can, on the postponement of this bill until the return of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DISNEY. I feel no disposition to trespass upon the patience of the gentleman from North Carolina, or of the House; but I desire to have an opportunity to finish the very incomplete remarks which I submitted yesterday, and which I was prevented from finishing then by the expiration of my hour. I feel sure that I have a great many facts and arguments to present, which I am satisfied would save the House and the country a great deal of labor in the investigation of this subject.

Mr. ROGERS. I must decline, under the circumstances, to yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio. I have my reasons for desiring to address the House to-day.

Mr. EDGERTON. I should like to inquire if the debate upon this bill is confined to the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ROGERS spoke during the morning hour in support of the bill, believing that the old States had suffered great injustice by the unequal distribution of the public domain. He believed that a distribution to all the States equally, such as was proposed by the bill under consideration, would promote justice and constitutional equality. [The speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. HAMILTON next obtained the floor.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would inquire of the Chair how long before the morning hour expires?

The SPEAKER. About twelve minutes.

Mr. EDGERTON. If the gentleman from Maryland will yield for that purpose, I will move that the House go into committee.

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield for that motion.

Mr. EDGERTON. Then I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would ask the Chair if this is objection day?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ORR. I give notice that if the motion of the gentleman from Ohio does not prevail, I will move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I understand this is objection day, and we shall accomplish but little by going into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANDLER. This is objection day, and there are no bills of any consequence upon the Private Calendar to object to. Next Friday is also objection day; so that nothing will be lost by passing over the Private Calendar until next week.

Mr. HOUSTON. Debate upon the deficiency bill terminates, by the order of the House, on Tuesday next; but virtually it terminates to-morrow; for the consideration of a special order commences on Monday, and will override the deficiency bill. If the committee determine to go on with the general debate upon that bill, I hope they will go into committee, and do so now, as I shall object, on Monday, to the postponement of the special order. Unless the House shall sit to-morrow, this is the only remaining day for such debate.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. ELLISON. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 75, nays 64; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Bell, Bissell, Brooks, Colquitt, Corwin, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dickinson, Disney, Eastman, Eddy, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Goodrich, Green, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Henn, Hiester, Hillyer, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Latham, Lilly, McCulloch, Mace, Meacham, Smith Miller, Murray, Noble, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, John Perkins, Phillips, Pratt, Pringle, Ready, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rogers, Sabin, Seward, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Hestor L. Stevens, Thurston, Upham, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Daniel B. Wright—75.

NAYS.—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Boyce, Carpenter, Chandler, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Cox, John G. Davis, Dunbar, Edgerton, Edmunds, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Giddings, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Houston, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Letcher, Lindsey, Lindsley, McNair, Maxwell, Mayall, Middletown, John G. Miller, Milson, Morgan, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Sapp, Shaw, Shower, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Wells, Wheeler, and Zollicoffer—64.

So the motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EDGERTON,] that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDGERTON. I call for tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHURCHWELL and VAIL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 54.

The SPEAKER announced that less than a quorum having voted in the affirmative, the motion was lost.

Mr. EDGERTON. I ask that the other side may be counted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the demand comes too late.

Mr. EDGERTON. Then I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that that demand also comes too late.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Do I understand the Chair to decide that it is too late to have the yeas and nays upon the motion to go into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is too late, the result of the vote having been announced.

Mr. JONES. Only one side had been counted.

Mr. ORR. But the Chair had announced the vote, and entertained another motion. It is evidently too late.

Mr. JONES. The Constitution secures the yeas and nays upon any proposition when they are demanded by one fifth of the members present, and I think they are entitled to have them upon this motion.

The SPEAKER. The result of the vote had been announced, and the Chair was about to put the question upon another motion, when the demand for the yeas and nays was made. If the demand had been made before the result was announced, it would have been entertained; but, under the existing circumstances, the Chair decides that the demand comes too late.

Mr. EDGERTON. I ask for the yeas and nays then, upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I ask the Chair, if a quorum voted upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Only fifty-four members voted in the affirmative, which was less than a majority of a quorum. A quorum was present, and therefore the motion was lost.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Does the Chair know officially that a quorum was present? I insist upon my point of order. I have seen the question tried again and again in this House, and I want to know what the rule is?

Mr. HAMILTON. I rise to a question of order. I want to know if the Chair has not already decided that question. I ask that the vote may be taken upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair will say that the House had just voted upon the yeas and nays, when there appeared 75 in the affirmative and 64 in the negative, which shows officially that a quorum was present.

Mr. WENTWORTH. How does the Chair know that members kept their seats for the purpose of leaving the House without a quorum?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that a quorum was present, and overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WENTWORTH. It very often happens that members refuse to vote, for the purpose of leaving the House without a quorum, and I submit that both sides should have been counted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The House was divided on the demand for the yeas and nays, and only nineteen voted in the affirmative; not one fifth of a quorum.

Mr. EDGERTON. I demand tellers on the question.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. EDGERTON. I demand tellers on the motion that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, and WALKER, were appointed.

The question was put, and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 30; no quorum.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion. That will settle the question as to whether there is a quorum present or not.

Mr. GROW. Let us have a recount.

Mr. WALSH. There are several members around me who have not voted.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. GROW. I call for tellers.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Oh, no; let us have a recount.

Mr. GROW. Well, I withdraw the call for tellers, if we can have a recount.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. There is evidently a quorum in the House. I call for a recount.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia must remember that a motion is now pending that there be a call of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS. I hope that motion will be withdrawn.

Mr. EDGERTON. I decline to withdraw it.

Mr. COBB. I call for tellers on the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DAVIS, of Indiana, and CLINGMAN, were appointed.

Mr. LETCHER. Now I hope the gentleman who made the motion will vote.

Mr. EDGERTON. I voted before.

The question was then put on Mr. EDGERTON's motion; and the tellers reported—ayes 13, noes 105.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the adoption of the motion submitted by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Upon that question tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and EDMUNDSON were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 28.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN stated that when the committee last rose, the pending question was on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH,] and that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. OLIVER] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. OLIVER] will now allow me to make the personal explanation to which I referred yesterday.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection, provided it does not come out of my time.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. GIDDINGS. Mr. Chairman, previously to the rising of the committee yesterday evening, there was a general consent given that I should occupy the floor for a few minutes this morning, for a personal explanation. But the unanimous consent of the committee was given to me on the understanding that the explanation should be in regard to myself. There is, however, one thing which I wish to propose to the committee now, and that is, that I may occupy a few minutes of the time allowed me, to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] yesterday, so far as they regard a distinguished and venerated friend, who is now no more, and whose memory has been violently attacked; I refer to the Hon. John Quincy Adams.

A general assent was expressed by the committee.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, in regard to the memory of that great and good man, would have given me infinitely more pain than anything he could have said in regard to myself, provided, I had believed the attack of the member from Virginia could, in any degree, affect the world-wide fame of that distinguished statesman.

Sir, he served long upon this floor, and stood as the leader of this House in all the great moral and political questions that agitated the nation during the last decade of his life. Emphatically, sir, he stood as the leader, the standard bearer of the cause of freedom, of truth, of righteousness.

Mr. Chairman, an attempt has been made to represent that statesman as a blood-thirsty man—a man of violence, a man of blood. Nothing could have been more unworthy of any statesman than such a representation. But in order that I may be fully understood, I will read an extract from the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia:

"Did they not all know that a distinguished man, John Quincy Adams, had stepped down from the Chief Magistracy, and asserted this question, saying that sooner than stop agitation, he would see five millions of southern hearths drenched in blood?"

Mr. Chairman, let me say that I have no explanation to give to this remark. It is, emphatically, an unmitigated misrepresentation. That is the whole of it, in all its length and breadth, in all its depth and height. It was coined from the fertile brain of an opponent, who opposed him while living, and who attempts to raise his puny arm to assail his fame now that he is departed. Who, Mr. Chairman, has read the speeches of Mr. Adams, that does not know that on all occasions he sought peace; that he was at all times opposed to bloodshed; that he was at all times opposed to violence; that he sought the moral regeneration of this country and nation, and of the world by the force of reason, intelligence, and example?

Sir, I suppose we all know the history (for it is familiar to us all) which gave rise to the attack of the member from Virginia. I think it was in the year 1841, that the venerable man to whom I have alluded, was in the city of Pittsburg, and, by request, delivered an address to the colored people of that city. In the remarks which he made upon that occasion, he told them that the time would come when justice would be done to them. In the emphatic manner in which he was accustomed to speak, he told them that their redemption would come; and as he rose with the majesty of his subject and the occasion, he repeated that it would come. He knew not when. Some were apprehensive that it would come in blood; "but, sir," said he, "let it come—let justice be done." I quote from memory, but am substantially correct. Some months afterwards, a member of this body from Alabama [Mr. DILLET] was making a speech in this Hall, and, referring to this subject, represented Mr. Adams as having said that "he hoped the redemption of the colored race would come, even if it came in blood." "Yes," said Mr. Adams—he was sitting at my right hand, near me—"I now say, let it come."

"Yes," said the gentleman from Alabama, "if it come in the blood of the white man." The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Adams] said, "let it come." "Yes," said that venerable man, with an emphasis which often characterized his remarks, "I now say, let it come." "Yes," said the gentleman from Alabama, "though it comes in the blood of thousands of white men, let it come." "Yes," said the venerable statesman, "though it comes in the blood of millions of white men, let it come—let justice be done though the heavens fall." He spoke of justice to the colored man. That he desired at all times, and above all other objects.

I stand here to make no apology for that venerable statesman. Every man is familiar with his history. He died in this Hall. He died where the honorable gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MEACHAM] now sits. He lived a life of unusual devotion to his country, to the world, and his fame is beyond the reach of the puny efforts at detraction, put forth by the member from Virginia.

Mr. Chairman, personal conflicts are at all times painful to me. They constitute no part of the object for which I was sent to this body. They are opposed to all the feelings of my nature. But, sir, we owe duties to ourselves, as well as to the public. I have no right to permit false charges, uttered against me in this body, to pass unnoticed. In such case silence is often taken as an admission of their truth.

Yesterday the member from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] took occasion to make the following most extraordinary assertion:

"Who does not know that the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS], when I was in Congress some years ago, offered resolutions declaring that it was lawful, in effect, for negroes to slay the wife and children of their masters?"

When I heard this I respectfully endeavored to correct him, by assuring him that I had presented no such resolutions, to which he replied:

"No, of course not directly; that would have been too provoking, too insufferable. But for his act, the gentleman received the benefit of a resolution or resolutions of this body that made him retire from the proceedings of Congress that he might go home and get Congress rebuked by the people. They sent him back by a majority diminished by two thousand, and he was afraid to continue the experiment."

Now, sir, in regard to the character of the resolutions which I offered, I will merely say, that in 1842, the President, John Tyler—for whom my Whig friends and I voted, God forgive us!—through our Secretary of State, instructed our Minister at London to demand a compensation of the British Government for the people who gained their liberty on board the Creole, a slave ship from Richmond, Virginia, while on her way to New Orleans. The history of that transaction must be within the recollection of every member, and I therefore merely refer to it.

The demand carried with it an implied acknowledgment that it was our duty to protect the slave dealers. This I felt to be an insult to the people of the free States. I was unwilling to see the people of Ohio and the other free States involved in such disgrace; and offered to this body the declaration of my sentiments, in the following resolutions, which I now send to the Clerk's table to be read.

They were read, as follows:

"Resolved, That prior to the adoption of our Federal Constitution, each of the several States composing this Union, exercised full and exclusive jurisdiction over the subject of slavery within its own territory, and possessed full power to continue or abolish it at pleasure.

"Resolved, That by adopting the Constitution, no part of the aforesaid powers was delegated to the Federal Government, but was reserved by, and still pertain to, each of the several States.

"Resolved, That by the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, each of the several States surrendered to the Federal Government all jurisdiction over the subjects of commerce and navigation upon the high seas.

"Resolved, That slavery, being an abridgment of the natural rights of man, can exist only by force of positive municipal law, and is necessarily confined to the jurisdiction of the power creating it.

"Resolved, That when a ship belonging to the citizens of any State of this Union leaves the waters and territory of such State, and enters upon the high seas, the persons on board cease to be subject to the slave laws of such State, and thenceforth are governed in their relations to each other by, and are amenable to, the laws of the United States.

"Resolved, That when the brig Creole, on her late passage to New Orleans, left the territorial jurisdiction of Virginia, the slave laws of that State ceased to have jurisdiction over the persons on board said brig, and they became amenable only to the laws of the United States.

"Resolved, That the persons on board said ship, in resuming their natural rights of personal liberty, violated no law of the United States, incurred no legal penalty, and are justly liable to no punishment.

"Resolved, That all attempts to reenslave said persons are unauthorized by the Constitution, or the laws of the United States, and are incompatible with our national honor.

"Resolved, That all attempts to exert our national influence in favor of the coast-wise slave trade, or to place this nation in the attitude of maintaining a commerce in human beings, are subversive of the rights and injurious to the feelings and interests of the free States, are unauthorized by the Constitution, and prejudicial to our national character."

Mr. GIDDINGS resumed. Every member will see there is not the most distant reference, nor the remotest intimation of the right of those negroes to slay the wives and children of their masters. It merely asserts their right to freedom, and that in resuming that right, they violated no law. The misrepresentation of the member from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] is so palpable, so obvious, that I will leave it to the consideration of this body and of the country, to judge of the principles and feelings of a member who thus falsely and wantonly assails a fellow-member with fabrications so unfounded and destitute of truth.

But, sir, for the presentation of those views, a member from Virginia [Mr. BORRS] offered resolutions censuring me for daring thus to express my opinions. No one denied their truth, but the censure was for uttering the opinions. He, however, being out of order, handed them over to a servile member from my own State, who offered them, and called for the previous question to cut me off from any defense.

Sir, this body took it upon themselves to pass a vote of censure upon me for thus avowing my opinions, and the member from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] voted for my censure. He now appears to think I should have bowed in silence like the slaves on his own plantation, that I should have received his rebuke with humility, and plied myself to the task of legislation under his surveillance. I could not recognize him as my master, nor this body as having authority to control me in the expression of my constitutional views. I hurled from me the petty despotism which they attempted to exercise over me. I did not remain in my seat one minute after the vote was declared. The liberties of my country had been purchased in part by the blood of both my paternal and maternal ancestors. At a more recent period I had myself borne arms in the war of 1812; and had I remained in my seat here, submitting to such tyranny, I should have disgraced my name and the Constitution of my country.

On reaching the first county in my district, on my way home, I was hailed by a people who appreciated my motives, and responded heartily to the course I had pursued. A meeting was called at the seat of justice; a distinguished lawyer of the Democratic party moved a resolution requesting me to stand as a nominee for reelection, without the formalities of a regular convention. To this I consented; and, until the day before election, it was supposed, in that part of the district in which I lived, there would be no competitor. But, as was then said, an opposition was raised, in pursuance of advice sent from this city; yet, as I stated yesterday, I was reflected by a larger proportion of the votes given than on any former or any subsequent occasion. Many of the Democratic party voted for me, and have since continued to vote for me. My majority was more than thirty-five hundred; but then the member from Virginia says it was diminished to two thousand, intending to represent my constituents as dissatisfied with my course. Why, sir, at one of the largest conventions ever met in that district, I was specially instructed to maintain the position I had assumed, without reference to the miserable efforts put forth in this body to control my thoughts and my action. I have intended to obey those instructions. Of that, however, my constituents are my judges; and they have given me some evidence of their approbation—for they have continued to send me here, to the present time.

Where are those who then assumed the unconstitutional power to censure me? And echo answers, Where? Why, sir, of the two hundred and twenty members then composing this body, one, and only one monument of the people's mercy, beside myself, has continued to hold a seat here. They have departed. Several generations, like the member from Virginia, have since appeared here, and taken their departure also to the shades of political life.

The member from Virginia, at the close of that Congress, disappeared, and sunk out of view, into the tide of political forgetfulness, from whence he was again cast up in the political storm of 1852—a striking instance of political resurrection. But he comes back apparently bringing with him the same views of dictation and "overseerism" which he possessed when he left us ten years since. He seems unconscious of the progress which has been made in this body during the period of his confinement in political purgatory.

It is said of Dean Swift, that while relating an anecdote to a friend they became separated. After the lapse of ten years they again met, when the Dean, without a bow or other salutation, resumed his story with the simple introduction of "as I was saying." So the member from Virginia, on again finding himself in this Hall, without a bow or salutation, introduces himself by a flourish of the whip, and in full livery proclaims himself the "whipper-in" of this Administration, and in merciless style he plies the lash to all who get off the track.

In the course of his remarks, the member said I was afraid to continue the experiment I had tried in presenting my resolutions. In other words, he charges me with submission to the usurpations of this House, of surrendering the freedom of speech. Sir, it gives me pleasure to say that this is the first time, in a service of nearly twenty years, that I have ever been subjected to the charge of being a doughface, not daring to speak my views. I was aware that, judging from his speeches, the member must have regarded all who differ from him as poltroons; but I had not supposed he would take occasion openly and in definite words, to charge any member with being afraid to speak his sentiments.

Well, sir, I am afraid to do wrong. I am afraid of giving just offense to any human being. But, sir, I would speak truth fearlessly. Among these truths, I would lay it down as an axiom, that none but "cowards" ever doubt the courage of their fellow-members. But should the member from Virginia think I treat him with less severity than he deserves, I hope he will attribute it to my unusual good nature, and not to cowardice.

But the gentleman assures the country that I was afraid to continue the experiment. I think it was on the 5th of May I resumed my seat in this Hall, and on the 3d of June I made a speech, in which, to the extent of my humble abilities, I vindicated the doctrine embraced in the resolutions for which I was censured. For the House will observe that the offensive part of my resolutions was the assertion that the negroes, when taken beyond the jurisdiction of the slave laws of Virginia, were restored to their natural right of self-defense. This was the substance, the gist of the resolutions for which I was censured. No member of this House, from that day to this, has had the boldness to deny their accuracy. They assert mere legal principles known to lawyers of science.

Yesterday, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] asserted that I presented "resolutions declaring that it was lawful for negroes to slay the wives and children of their owners." The assertion which I did make was, that when slaves were taken without the jurisdiction of slave laws they became free under the common law and the laws of nature, and that they had a right to assert that freedom. And I am glad that there is before me a Representative of Louisiana, [Mr. HUNT] a State which led off in the declaration of this principle. There is not a slave State, nor is there a free State, in the Union which has not proclaimed it through their courts. It has been announced from the tribunals of the Louisiana State Court.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. With the gentleman's permission, as Louisiana has been alluded to, I will make a single remark. Does the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GIDDINGS. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. PERKINS. Such was the decision under the Louisiana law, and such, practically, was the law until after the Abolition excitement at the North, when the Legislature passed a law directing the reverse in consequence of that agitation.

Mr. GIDDINGS. That does not change the common law, nor any law outside of that State. If the Legislature has passed a statute to reenslave the people who have become free, that statute itself has no effect outside the State. I refer, however, to the decision of the courts of Louisiana, under the civil law, which guided her courts in former times. It is the same, also, as common law wherever it is in force. It was so decided in 1782, by Lord Mansfield, after an unprecedented struggle in behalf of oppression. It was repeated in 1821, in the great case of Forbes vs. Cochran, decided in the Common Pleas of England. It has been repeated again and again, in all the courts of civilized nations of the earth. I go back more than one hundred years, on the continent of Europe, and show that a slave leaving the jurisdiction which held him in bondage became free. Why, sir, every heart would respond that he would be free, and the member from Virginia recorded his vote on that occasion to censure me for daring to utter a legal principle known and understood by every tyro in the profession.

Mr. PERKINS. I regret to have to interrupt the gentleman again. I am told that I did not hear correctly his position. The decision of the Louisiana court was not to the effect of his resolution, but to this extent only: that where a slave was voluntarily carried by his owner beyond the jurisdiction of slave law into a free State, the owner lost his power over him on his return to Louisiana.

Mr. GIDDINGS. The gentleman is mistaken. I understand the decision to which I referred. The case decided in his State was not that of a slave taken into a free State, but of a lady who took her slave to France, across the high seas.

Mr. PERKINS. That is a free State, as I understand it.

Mr. GIDDINGS. No, sir; it is an Empire, not a State. [Laughter.] The decision of the court of Louisiana was, that the very moment when the slave was taken beyond the jurisdiction of Louisiana, that moment she was clothed in the attributes of freedom, and humanity stood forth vindicated in her person.

In the speech to which I referred, as made on the 3d June, I said:

"The persons on board the Creole, when taken beyond the jurisdiction of Virginia, were absolutely free—they were free in the consideration of all law, human and Divine—possessing all the rights incident to American liberty. From that moment they possessed the full, just, and indisputable right of self-defense—the right to defend their persons and liberty with all the means and all the force within their power."

Again, sir, I declared that:

"Had I been in the situation in which they were placed, with the same alternative before me, a cowardly submission to a slave dealer, with slavery and degradation to myself and posterity on one hand, or heroic effort, with freedom to myself and offspring on the other, I could not have hesitated to defend the liberty which God had bestowed upon me to the extent of every means within my control."

Why did not the member from Virginia meet this doctrine in open debate like a man—like a statesman? Sir, he sat in silence. I endeavored to use language that should admit of no misinterpretation. It was addressed to those who had dared to pass a vote of censure upon a Representative in this Hall. And I greatly desired to provoke some one of them to meet me before the country. They had sealed my lips while on trial, and under the previous question they had condemned me and my doctrine. I intended in that speech to defy their tyranny, to hold them up to the country as a set of men who, through ignorance or malice, had trampled upon the Constitution, upon the rights of the people, upon the privileges of the members of this House. The member from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] had voted for my censure; I had appealed to the people; had returned to this Hall indorsed by the sovereign power, and I challenged him to the forum. There he sat in mute silence.

A prophet, in Bible times, is said to have kicked an ass into speech; but I could not do it. I endeavored to follow Balaam's example, but failed in the effort. And now, after ten years' absence, the member's galled sides have become healed. He has found his way back to this body, but appears to have forgotten

"Whether the boot was made of neat or Spanish leather;" and now he charges me with not daring to maintain my position.

But I pass to another, and the last point. Speaking of myself, he proceeded to say:

"At any rate, he did not get the resolutions repealed; (referring to the resolutions censuring me;) he came back here, and had the grace actually to ask Congress to repeal the resolution."

Astonished at the utterance of such an unmitigated fabrication, I asked to set him right. I, sir, disbelieved that any man could have obtained an election to this Hall who would thus openly, and in bold defiance of all truth and honor, state, as matters of fact, transactions which never had the shadow of existence. The circumstances flowing from that resolution of censure constituted an important era in my life. I scorned the attempt to control my action. I held it in unutterable contempt. I bade defiance to it, and to all who sustained it. The thought of asking its repeal never entered my mind, never flitted through my imagination, until the astounding falsehood was put forth by the member on yesterday. Had such resolution been presented, he could show it from the record. That he cannot do. It does not exist. It never did exist. Why, sir, my resolutions had gone forth to the country. They had been sanctioned by the whole people of the North. They had gone over the waters, had reached the eye of British ministers and British statesmen. That apology for an administration, John Tyler, who then controlled the Executive power, had backed out of the demand on England; and so far as I or the public have any knowledge, the demand has never been renewed, and, I venture to say, never will be renewed. My effort had a greater effect upon the action of this Government, and upon the sentiment of the country, than I had expected.

My position was adverse to that entertained by the Senate, by the Executive, and by this House. In opposition to these branches of the Federal power, the country acknowledged the correctness of my doctrine. And I now look upon that as the proudest era of my life. My triumph was complete. I was willing that the resolution of censure, and those who voted for it, should go down and receive the approval or the condemnation of posterity. I neither asked nor desired its repeal; nor did I ever hear its repeal spoken of until the member charged me, on yesterday, with asking "this House to repeal it;" and, as if intending to place himself beyond the pale of charity, he made up for the occasion, and proclaimed the additional fabrication that "the proposition was received with a loud laugh, and that was the end of it."

Astonished at the fool-hardiness of the member, from my seat I declared that I never made such a proposition. And here came the last effort of the member's ingenuity and facility in the manufacture of hypothetical facts, which never had any foundation, which are made up entirely of falsehood. He then at once abandoned his previous assertion, tacitly acknowledging its falsity, but saying:

"The gentleman from Ohio did not make the proposition, but one of his colleagues did, I presume with his consent."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee to make any comments on this last subterfuge, these additional statements destitute of truth. They are false in the general and in their detail. I can only say that I never heard of such an application by any colleague. My friend on my left, [Mr. WADE,] at that time a constituent, and intimate friend, assures me he never heard of any such application. I have searched the Journal and the Congressional Globe, and I find no trace of any such application. And I declare this last declaration to be equally groundless with the others—equally false, malicious, and disgraceful.

Now, sir, this accumulation of untruths, this concatenation of falsehoods, put forth in rapid succession by a member of this body, cannot be properly characterized by any language becoming the dignity of an American Congress. He may have deemed the course he has pursued as necessary to support the cause he advocates, and as due to the Executive whose organ he professes to be. But whatever may be his motive, he has gone beyond the reach of parliamentary language. I leave him to the judgment of the House and the country.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order.

Several MEMBERS. "Oh, let him go on."

Mr. TAYLOR. I merely wish, with the consent of the gentleman, to make a single remark in reference to the point of order. I wish to ask a question of the Chair. I believe in the freedom of speech, but I have been taught to believe that the proceedings of a deliberative body like this should be governed by rules of decorum.

[Renewed cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, sir, I will not insist upon my point of order.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I have nothing further to say. I might stand here and talk from now till to-morrow, and not be able to find language sufficiently strong to reach the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. OLIVER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SMITH. I ask the gentleman to yield me the floor to make an explanation.

[Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!" "Go on with your explanation!"]

Mr. OLIVER. I ask the gentleman how much of my time he wishes?

Mr. SMITH. I suppose what I have to say will not come out of the gentleman's hour.

The CHAIRMAN. That arrangement can be made by unanimous consent.

A general assent was expressed.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, we have, indeed, had an interesting display, characterized by those manners which we should naturally expect from the gentleman from whom it comes. We have seen a gentleman here aspiring to be sarcastic. We have seen him rising here and assailing members of this House with a display of coarseness and vulgarity which he alone understands how to use; just the sort of defamation and scandal which would find no place in the association of gentlemen; nay, such only as could have been taught and learned by an association with free negroes.

Sir, it is within the recollection of this committee that, on yesterday, when I was replying to the extraordinary position which had been taken here by those who had preceded me, that the Missouri compromise, as it was called—that the act of 1820 had given peace and quiet to the country. I say, when I was replying to that most extraordinary position, and confronting it with the truth of history, I referred, by way of illustration, to a distinguished man, supreme in his eminent ability, who had previously occupied the highest official position in the country, and who descended from that high position into this arena; for the purpose of creating agitation upon the subject of slavery. I stated that as an illustration. I stated that he forgot the high dignities with which he had been honored, the distinguished offices which he had filled, the mighty part he had played as a national man; and that he came here to agitate for the wild, disorganizing purposes of anti-slavery. That was an illustration; and I referred on that occasion to sentiments which he uttered on this floor, and which I would make good. Indeed they are substantially admitted by the gentleman who has just addressed the House.

I referred to him, [Mr. GIDDINGS,] also, as an illustration. I had no occasion to misrepresent him. I alluded to him as one of those who had been continued here by constituents, no doubt worthy of him, and whose chief office, instead of being to minister peace and good will unto all men, had been to agitate the great country of which he is a most unworthy member, and to seek to distract, and divide, and ruin the Union of this Republic—in the perpetuation of which the destinies of the world are at once and forever bound. Is not that true? Speaking from memory, I did not perhaps specify in exact and literal verbiage the sense which had been communicated; but I am here with the record, prepared, substantially, to sustain the position which I took. The member—and according to polite parliamentary parlance the honorable member—and I suppose that we are all honorable men—the honorable member has thought fit, his own job not being sufficient, and being ambitious of that unity which he sought to establish, when the distinguished man, to whom I previously referred, had a living place on this floor—he has thought fit to get some grace and strength for his position, by a union with one who had genius and intellect to redeem the errors of his principles, and to commend him to the interest, at least, if not to the affections of the country.

He sought to acquire some distinction by that association. Not content to rest himself here on his own defense, he undertakes to vindicate that man, superseding the duty of some gentleman from the State of Massachusetts. The member—the honorable member—really conceded the strength of my remarks. In vindicating Mr. Adams, he actually acknowledges the ascription which I made. But I might be relieved from the duty of meeting this question, if I chose to remind the gentleman that he has been guilty of a very great defect in memory, if not of a gross misstatement.

Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee, let me call your attention to an incident which occurred the 22d of February, 1844, a day pregnant with the dearest associations, as connected with the name of one who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." On that day, Mr. Dillet, of Alabama, a distinguished Whig member—I say Whig member, because at that day political ligaments were stronger than local subordination or independence. I speak from the record. In referring to the remarks of Mr. Adams on the question of slavery, without going much into the quotation, and which I had hastily collected, not expecting to be called on from the source which I have, to justify my remarks, Mr. Dillet, in addressing this House on the 22d of February, 1844, said:

"And whence came this language: 'That slavery will be abolished in this country, and throughout the world, I firmly believe; whether it will be done peaceably or by blood, God only knows. But that it shall be accomplished, I have not a doubt; and by whatever means, I say let it come. Yes, by whatever means, I say, let it come.' That was the prayer offered in transitu to the Throne of Mercy. By blood, or otherwise, let it come."

"Mr. ADAMS. Let it come.
"Mr. DILLET. Yes, sir, these were the prayers of this man, [Mr. Adams,] who, if he had retired from the Presidency to the shades of private life, which he would so much have dignified and adorned, would have gone down to the tomb with the united admiration and applause of a mighty nation. This man comes here upon this floor, and says: 'Let it come; let it come, by blood or otherwise; let it come.'"

Mr. Adams here threw in the words: "Let it come."

"Mr. DILLET. Yes, let it come, no matter what havoc shall ensue amongst the five millions of men, women, and children of the South; let them all be served up to satiate the Moloch of those assemblages of the Constitution; and for the purpose of offering up sweet incense to the holy, thrice holy Abolitionists," &c.

Well, sir, Mr. Dillet went on a good deal in that strain, and then Mr. Adams proclaims, not let it come even at the expense of the blood of five millions, as I stated, and as my memory enabled me to speak of it after the lapse of years, but he even goes further and says, without restriction as to numbers: "Let it come." Yes, sir, even if it cause the blood of the entire slaveholding section of this Union to flow.

But, sir, Mr. Dillet goes on to say:

"He was one among those who, in 1824, preferred the civil qualifications of the gentleman to those of a military character, in the selection of a Chief Magistrate of the Union. He need not ask to be pardoned by the gentleman, but he did ask the forgiveness of his country."

Yes, sir, so shocking, so horrid to every humane and gentle affection were the sentiments of this man—this Mr. Adams, who had come here to agitate upon this question that he had proclaimed: Let it come, though at the peril of the entire South. And Mr. Dillet, a political and personal friend, in the agony of his heart, said "I was one of those who, in 1824, preferred the civil qualifications of the gentleman to a military chieftain, and gave him my support. I now say here, in the face of this House, in the face of the assembled country, that I ask pardon of my countrymen for so doing." And yet this act, this sacrilege, this outrage upon every sentiment of humanity, this treason—I use the word—this moral treason to the Constitution of our Republic, finds vindication upon this floor. But no other man has dared to vindicate it but such a man as that from Ohio. Sir, have I not made good my reference? Can I not stand up here proudly and say that my case is made out? Sir, although the member wishes to be tacked to the illustrious name of Adams, let me tell him that he is but the tail; and long, long must it be, if there is any connection between the two. [Laughter.]

But, sir, I now come to the honorable member himself. That honorable member gives us to understand that his ancestors rendered important services in the war of the Revolution, but his modesty will not permit him to speak of the services which he himself rendered in the war of 1812. I wish he had delighted us by recounting them here, for I believe his military achievements have not yet been sung in song or told in story. But the gentleman, on account of his capital good nature, forbears to say what otherwise he might say, in reference to myself; but what can we think of the supreme gentleness of disposition of the man who can get up here and perform such a part as he has done to-day?

The display which the gentleman made upon this floor was the malignity of a fiend—a coward fiend. I was a member of this House when the particular incident took place which has brought out this difficulty. After the honorable member from Ohio resigned his seat, he went around the Hall bidding good-bye to his friends. I was sitting very near the place where I am now standing; and when he came to me, offering his hand, I did not pretend to be very busy, as some southern members did, who turned their backs upon him, but I said to him, "I do not shake hands with you." "Just as you please," replied the gentleman from Ohio; and that is the way in which I treated his conduct, and that was the way he deserved to be treated by all.

The gentleman has been pleased to refer to my political history, and my retirement from these Halls. I will state to this House that, for eighteen years I was an active party man, before I ever sought a seat in legislative halls. My time, money, and such humble talents as God has blessed me with, were freely dedicated to the propagation of the great principles of the Democratic party, in season and out of season. Until 1836, when the muttering thunder which was heard in the distance was about to burst upon the country, I did not attempt to go into public life; but at that time, being called upon to be a candidate for the State Senate, I, under protest, yielded to the call, after having once declined a nomination. I then ran for Congress, and had the honor of succeeding against a Democrat and a Whig, with only about six hundred majority, and the Democrat the then incumbent in office, which is, with us, almost conclusive in favor of a reelection. When I retired from these Halls, I was a candidate for reelection, under a peculiar state of things—for it so happened that the district was reorganized, and a Federal district was formed. I allowed my name to be used, and I reduced a Whig majority of twelve hundred to some two hundred and sixty-five. I then resumed the duties of private life, but not in retirement, as the mendacious speaker says—for I was elected Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, without ever having written a letter or expressed a wish for the office. I ask if any man can furnish a prouder and higher memorial of the estimation of his fellow-citizens than that—elected to the Chief Magistracy of the Old Dominion without an expressed wish for the proud distinction?

When I returned from California, where I had gone to mend my fortunes, I had scarcely reached home before my friends began to talk of returning me to Congress. Circumstances, not my wishes, made me a candidate, and I was elected without ever organizing a county; without ever treating a voter; without ever holding a private conversation but with two worthy, but plain and unambitious persons, to affect their votes before my election. I proudly stood up and relied upon my character and principles, and upon the liberal sentiments of the noble people whose suffrage I expected; and I am here.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the member from Ohio has read the resolutions for which the House condemned him. I shall not pause to comment upon them, but I will bring you to the result. The first item—for there is a good deal here on the subject—the first item to which I call the attention of the committee, is the remark of Mr. Everett—Mr. Everett, of Vermont; from the green hills; a cold hard man—I hope that no one will pitch into me for this. But yet I shall beg the attention of the committee to the remarks of Mr. Everett on the subject, because I am one of those who never speak lightly, and when I take a position, I am proud to believe that I can maintain it. I read from the Journal.

Mr. Everett rose and begged to be excused from voting. He assigned his reasons:

"And he wished also on this occasion to express his utter abhorrence of the firebrand course of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS.]"

Yes, sir, Mr. Everett asked to be excused from voting; and he did it because he wanted an opportunity of expressing his deep abhorrence—I repeat—his deep abhorrence of the fire-brand course of the gentleman from Ohio. Well, now, when that man could act in such a way in these Halls as to provoke such a fierce denunciation from a party associate, from a man who was engaged in a common cause, and animated by a common feeling, what, sir, what must have been the deep damnation of the act?

There are various other references on this subject. I shall not dwell upon them. But such was the howling storm of indignation in this entire Hall, such was the deep abhorrence of the vile and atrocious conduct of that member, that he, in view of that storm, and shrinking from it, asked if he had the power to withdraw his resolutions. The Chair pronounced that he had, against the positions taken to the contrary. But I will read a line or two from the record:

"Mr. GIDDINGS said, that when he had risen to offer his resolutions, he had stated that they were important, and that he merely laid them before the House."

"Cries of 'Order!' 'Order!'"

"The SPEAKER. The gentleman will either withdraw his resolutions or not."

"Mr. GIDDINGS. I was merely saying that I was about to reply—"

"The SPEAKER. Do you withdraw the resolutions or not?"

"Mr. GIDDINGS withdrew his resolutions."

Yes, sir, that man who boasts that he has uttered nothing in the world but proper and correct sentiments; who said that his resolutions were important, and that he merely laid them on the table for consideration, when he saw the howling blast of indignation against him which raged around the Hall, skulked from its fury, and, in the face of such a howling tempest, sought to shelter himself by withdrawing his resolutions.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the member from Ohio resigned. He resigned to go home, to get the rebuke of his people upon this House, it may be: perhaps to pocket his mileage, for the question was raised whether he intended to charge double mileage or not; and that question was not answered. So, I suppose, he got it. Of course he got it—of course. No moral sentiment could have restrained him, no feeling of personal honor.

Well, sir, I say he resigned. I cannot undertake to give you chapter and verse for the common talk of this Hall. But it was said that he resigned and went home, to get the rebuke of his people upon the action of this Hall.

I stated yesterday, and I repeat it now, that it was bruited around this Hall that it was the common understanding that he went home, relying upon that people whom he represents, of whom he appears so proud, and with whom he so cordially sympathizes. Yes, sir, I say it was so understood, and I am going to give some sort of proof of it. It was understood that he would come back here and renew his resolutions, until those resolutions of censure were repealed.

But here is the record, and I ought not to omit it. The resolution of censure brought out by the honorable member's atrocious resolutions, denounced him for offering resolutions which embodied rapine and murder. Yes, sir, that embodied rapine and murder! After the resolutions were withdrawn, the House was not satisfied with his retreat—with his cowardly retreat—with his skulking from the storm which he had raised. I say the House was not satisfied, and a resolution of the character of which I have spoken was offered. He had offended the House and the country, and though his resolutions were withdrawn, it was felt in this Hall that they still left an offense which must be avenged, and Mr. Botts, of Virginia, offered resolutions which, not being in order, were offered by his noble colleague, Mr. Weller, in which the resolutions of the gentleman were denounced for justifying rapine and murder. This House passed them by a vote of nearly two to one, after nearly every parliamentary effort had been resorted to to prevent their adoption. The judgment of this House, not upon party grounds, the judgment of the American Congress, by nearly two thirds out of nearly two hundred votes, solemnly pronounced that the resolutions of the gentleman legalized and justified rapine and murder, and that he deserved not only the censure of the country, but of this House in particular.

For that he resigned and went home; and I say now, that during his absence, the understanding was that he was to come back here by the election of his people, and that he was to renew those resolutions, and was to press them until the resolutions of censure were revoked. Did he ever renew them? Never! never!

I find, in the resolutions offered by Mr. Goode, of Ohio, the following:

"Resolved, That the Hon. J. R. GIDDINGS, on his return to Congress, be, and is hereby, instructed, at the first moment after it shall be in order, to offer the identical resolutions over again which he before offered, and insist that the House of Representatives act upon them by a direct vote."

Instructed by his beloved constituents! Did he obey that instruction? No, sir; his white-livered heart skulked from it. He even disregarded the instructions of his dear and much loved people, who sent him here, with instructions to carry out his original purpose. Big, sir, with pride and consequence, and offended feeling, he left this Hall with a determination to do or die. He was backed up by his people at home—better men than himself, I have no doubt; yet when he came into the presence of the majesty of the Representatives of the American people, he quailed; yes, sir, he quailed before it, and did not obey his instructions, or carry out his original purpose.

But, sir, having adverted to the facts connected with this period sufficiently, and having vindicated, from the record, the truth of my former assertions, I pass on. The gentleman from Ohio came back to this House on the 5th of May, I think it was, and was qualified by being sworn. But what are oaths to those who believe not in their value? But I was proceeding to say, he came back here, and on the 5th of May was sworn to observe the Constitution, and to respect all its compromises. He took his seat.

Well, sir, I said this member from Ohio offered a resolution to rescind the former vote of censure. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who never disregard or refuse to recognize the act of an agent. I am one of those who regard what is done by my agent as having been done by myself; and if it is necessary I could give you law and Latin to show that it is an established legal principle. I am not here to draw nice distinctions. I do not split hairs—not I. But the member from Ohio says he did not offer this resolution. Well, sir, he did not, but his colleague did; and I suppose his colleague would not have done anything of this sort without his concurrence. I appeal to this committee to decide whether it is likely that he would have permitted one of his colleagues—one who sympathized with him in his original determination, who prevented him from undertaking to defend himself on that occasion, although the opportunity was again and again tendered to him; who seemed to be his friend, associate, and counselor—does the member himself suppose he shall be able to make this House believe that this colleague of his would have taken this step without his knowledge and consent? And therefore it is that I say the member from Ohio draws nice distinctions, and disproves at most the letter, but not the spirit of my charge.

Well, sir, I have shown what was the resolution which was offered by the counselor and adviser of the member from Ohio, and I leave it to the intelligent judgment of every member of this House to decide whether he is responsible for the resolution—that is all.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will the gentleman read the resolution?

Mr. SMITH. You may read it if you wish.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Either read it or back out.

Mr. SMITH. I have the resolution before me, and I will not back out.

Mr. GIDDINGS. There is no such resolution.

Mr. SMITH. No, sir; there is no such resolution in express terms, but it was designed indirectly to accomplish the purpose I have stated; for if received by the House, that would revoke the censure, and that will explain what follows hereafter.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Read it.

Mr. SMITH. I will not read it. Mr. Chairman, how did it get in here? I recollect the circumstances distinctly; and I have no doubt the committee understand them. I have refused to read the resolution because the whole debate to which it gave rise would have to be read, to make it intelligible. I would not be guilty of such a foul transaction as to refuse to read a resolution for the purpose of misrepresenting it. I have the resolution before me, and the whole proceedings in connection with it. Every member has them in his possession. I wish the member from Ohio to understand that I do not consider it necessary to resort to any such means to strengthen my exposition of such a case as his.

And how did it come into the House? I recollect when the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Goode,] against whose character I know nothing, other than is found on this record, and I am happy to so express myself—I recollect when he got up and offered the resolutions, there was one general laugh throughout the House; and I believe, and it was the general belief, as the record shows, that that was the end of them. But no. He took the laugh; said not a word; but marched up to the Clerk's desk, and under pretense of their being of the character of a petition, filed them with the Clerk for the purpose of entry on the Journal. There is honesty and fair dealing for you! And the member knew nothing about it! Of course, he did not! He was as innocent of the matter as the unborn child. He was perfectly good natured, and could not inquire into anything of the sort.

When the Journal was read next morning a statement of the facts was made. It appeared, from the Journal, that the resolutions were presented and received. Mr. Botts immediately rose in his place, and moved that they be stricken out. He did not like to say expunged; but he moved that the entire paragraph—and I have the whole of it here—that the paragraph in reference to the resolutions, one of which I have read, and one of which led the member to repeat his own resolutions, be stricken out. Considerable debate resulted. A great deal of excuse was offered. A strong impression of a fraudulent movement was declared. Mr. Goode obtained the floor, and announced to the House that he had had no fraudulent purpose whatsoever. Such was the loathsome, vile, miserable, contemptible character of the proceeding, that the House struck out the paragraph with the implied imputation of fraud. Yes, sir, these resolutions, which had for their end the deeming of the member from Ohio from the deep damnation of his conduct in advocating mutiny and murder, were expunged from the record. They were stricken from the Journal, and now they have no place except in the papers of the day.

This, then, being the condition of things, I would ask wherein I have misstated? The gentleman says that I stated that he was elected by a diminished majority. I will advert to that now, though a little out of the regular course. Of course, I spoke on the subject from memory, and I really ask the member for information. When facts are involved, however, I do not rest satisfied until I am fully convinced. Had not the gentleman Whig and Democratic opposition? Was he not elected by a plurality, and not a majority? This I distinctly know: that the impression was, that the operation of another resignation was considered too dangerous for another trial by the member. I know the understanding was, that if the Democrats had not been so foolish in that district—where Democracy, perhaps, cannot live for lack of necessary congeniality of elements and respiration—had it not been that they brought out a candidate, it is believed that the gentleman would have gone to the tomb of all the capulets. His race would have terminated against his will. Why, sir, it was believed that a genteel Whig—such was the language of the day—would have filled the place which the member has so much dishonored.

These are my views. I have presented the record. I have shown the course of Mr. Adams. I have shown the course of the member from Ohio; and to show that he is still in character, he is compelled to misrepresent the laws of a southern State to this committee. He has directly, and in face of the explanation of the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. PERKINS,] distorted and misstated them: that decision being, that when a slave went into territory where freedom was established—God save the mark!—he was free. He partakes of the character of the country in which he is placed. That is the effect of the decision which the member has chosen to mystify and distort.

But, sir, Othello's occupation is not gone so long as the member has a place here. Even during the present session of Congress, he has uttered the same damnable and abhorrent sentiments. Sir, look at the record of a previous debate during the present session. He says:

"Sir, I would intimidate no one; but I tell you there is a spirit in the North which will set at defiance all the low and unworthy machinations of this Executive, and of the minions of its power. When the contest shall come; when the thunder shall roll and the lightning flash; when the slaves shall rise in the South; when, in imitation of the Cuban bondmen, the southern slaves of the South shall feel that they are men; when they feel the stirring emotions of immortality, and recognize the stirring truth that they are men, and entitled to the rights which God has bestowed upon them; when the slaves shall feel that, and when masters shall turn pale and tremble when their dwellings shall smoke, and dismay sit on each countenance, then, sir, I do not say 'we will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh,' but I do say, when that time shall come, the lovers of our race will stand forth, and exert the legitimate powers of this Government for freedom. We shall then have constitutional power to act for the good of our country, and do justice to the slave. Then will we strike off the shackles from the limbs of the slaves. That will be a period when this Government will have power to act between slavery and freedom, and when it can make peace by giving freedom to the slaves. And let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that time hastens. It is rolling forward. The President is exerting a power that will hasten it, though not intended by him. I hail it as I do the approaching dawn of that political and moral millennium which I am well assured will come upon the world."

Yes, sir, that period when our slaves shall rise; that period when our houses shall smoke; that period when "fear cometh upon the hearts of the masters;" that period when rapine, and bloodshed, and desolation shall stalk o'er the land, the member will hail as the dawning day preceding the approach of the millennium! "Oh shame, where is thy blush!" Yes, he gets up here, in the presence of this assembly of American freemen, the Representatives of millions, a large portion of them from the southern States, and he tells them here to their faces, that he hails this day which is to desolate the whole South with fire and bloodshed, as he would the dawn antecedent to the millennium. Sir, I ask you if it is not fully made out by what I have previously read, and by this very speech itself, that he would rejoice, as he would rejoice at the dawning of that day preceding the millennium, to see our slaves rise, and sacrifice the wives and daughters of their masters?

I would remark that this question of slavery is one in which I am deeply interested. Gentlemen will be held to a strict accountability by their constituents for sitting quietly here, day after day, and submitting to insults, such as have been inflicted upon them in days past.

The gentleman from Ohio says that I did not answer him on certain occasions. Does he imagine, for a single moment, that when he speaks, and there is no response, it is because he is unanswered? From whence, in the name of God, did there spring such a conceit! When he speaks—as never man spake before, for he is really without a parallel—and gentlemen are silent, has he never imagined it was because of their pity and contempt for him and his sentiments?

I know I am wearying this House, but I plead as my excuse the deep interest I feel in this subject. I believe that the institution of slavery is a noble one; that it is necessary for the good, the well-being of the negro race. Looking to history, I go further, and I say, in the presence of this assembly, and under all the imposing circumstances surrounding me, that I believe it is God's institution. Yes, sir, if there is anything in the action of the great Author of us all; if there is anything in the conduct of His chosen people; if there is anything in the conduct of Christ himself, who came upon this earth, and yielded up his life as a sacrifice, that all through his death might live; if there is anything in the conduct of his Apostles, who inculcated obedience upon the part of slaves towards their masters as a Christian duty, then we must believe that the institution is from God.

Has there ever been a nation that so preëminently distinguished itself as a nation of masters? Go to Judea. Go to Greece, where there was four hundred slaves to ninety freemen. Go to Rome, where, in the pride of her imperial power, you found some thirty to forty millions of slaves; and come to our own favored land, and what do you see? Where is any evidence of inferiority between the North and South? We see in the South those "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of their countrymen;" not one alone, but many, always distinguishing themselves upon every crisis, and in every place where their services were needed in behalf of their country. Go into your halls of legislation; go into the battle-fields, and, I ask, where is the evidence of that inferiority which gentlemen attempt to establish between those who own and those who do not own slaves? The owners of slaves are no better than their fellows, it is true; but they will not suffer in the comparison.

I ask, then, how does the institution of slavery operate upon the black race? It operates like a charm. We have slaves among us eminently worthy of respect and confidence. We have female servants that, in point of manners, morals, and principles, far surpass many white servants. But free them, and they are valueless; they are valueless the moment you knock their shackles off. I appeal to those around me in support of the position I take. I contrast the slave of the South, the genteel, well raised, obedient slave of the South, with the free negro of the North. It is a principle universally understood, known, and conceded as a fact, that if you take the best raised, best cultivated slave, break off his shackles and send him a freeman, to the North especially, or even if you free him at home, the chances are nine out of ten, that he becomes a degraded man and a worthless vagabond.

I advert to these things now, sir, not in reproach or anger. I can only say to the House, in the name of God, spare us from the polished and elegant language of the member from Ohio. [Laughter.] Let this Hall be no longer desecrated or degraded by such unbecoming, unworthy, unfraternal displays as we have had here to-day. Let us cultivate a refined, and delicate form of speech, so that we may utter no word of unkindness or reproach calculated to disturb the relations which should animate us. Let us alone, gentlemen of the North. I repent, in the name of God and the country, let us alone. Give us our equal rights. Convert us, if you can, but give us our equal rights; and we will never utter a word to compromise harmony and amity.

I thank the committee, and I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the patience with which my remarks have been listened to. I have, I trust.

"Nothing extenuated, nor ought set down in malice."

[A message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that they had passed Senate bills of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (No. 178) to incorporate the National Hotel Company, of Washington city;

An act (No. 334) for the relief of François Cousin; and

An act (No. 358) to make compensation to Henry Crouchey for extra services.]

Mr. KERR. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. OLIVER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. OLIVER took the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will yield me the floor that I may make a suggestion to the committee.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. The House closes the debate on the deficiency bill on Tuesday of next week. Monday commences the territorial business. The House has adjourned over to-day until Monday; and if this committee do now rise, and the House adjourn, the gentlemen who have obtained the floor to speak upon this bill in Committee of the Whole will not have an opportunity to make their speeches upon it, because, when it is again taken up, it will be under the five-minute rule, and members can then only speak to amendments. I think, myself, that it would be as well for the committee to rise, and let the House reconsider the vote agreeing to the proposition to adjourn over, so that we may resume our session to-morrow, and allow gentlemen who desire so to do to make their speeches. I am not in a condition to move for the reconsideration myself; if I were, I would make the motion.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. OLIVER] permit me to make a remark?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. BAYLY. It is true there is a special order for next week; but that special order has already been once postponed—

Several MEMBERS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. BAYLY. Well, it can be postponed at any rate.

[Cries of "No, it cannot!"

Mr. BAYLY. The gentleman from Missouri

[Mr. OLIVER] has acted with unusual courtesy on this occasion. He is now unwell; too much so to go on with his speech this evening. I therefore do think that the committee ought to rise.

Mr. COX. I understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAPP] is ready to go on with his speech to-day, if it would be the pleasure of the committee; and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. OLIVER] would not lose his right to the floor whenever the committee shall sit again.

Mr. COBB. I hope that suggestion will be agreed to.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"

Mr. PECKHAM. Is it in order to move that the committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not, unless by the permission of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAPP] who has the floor.

Mr. PECKHAM. I thought I had the floor for the purpose of the motion, before the gentleman obtained it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. OLIVER] had the floor, and yielded it to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAPP] who is now entitled to it.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. SAPP then took the floor, and addressed the committee on the Nebraska question. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. MAXWELL obtained the floor, and said: I propose to address the committee on the subject which has been under discussion, but the evening is too far advanced for me to go on now.

Mr. BOYCE. With the permission of the gentleman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 271, "to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854," and the amendments of the Senate to said bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. There is a communication on the table from the President of the United States, which the Chair will present to the House, if the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. KNOX. I withdraw it for that purpose.

PROTECTION OF IMMIGRANTS.

The SPEAKER then laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit to Congress a copy of a correspondence between the Secretary of State and her Britannic Majesty's Minister accredited to this Government, and between the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the expediency of further measures for the safety, health, and comfort of immigrants to the United States by sea; and as it is probable that further legislation may be necessary for the purpose of securing those desirable objects, I commend the subject to the consideration of Congress.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

On motion by Mr. PHELPS, the message was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KNOX. I now renew my motion to adjourn, and the call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. LETCHER. Cannot we reconsider the vote by which the House determined to adjourn over till Monday?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Virginia voted in the affirmative, he can submit a motion to reconsider.

Mr. LETCHER. I want to make a speech against the deficiency bill, if I can get a chance to do so.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 25, nays 19.

So the motion was agreed to.

And thereupon (at ten minutes past four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 1, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Thursday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report from the Postmaster General, in further compliance with a resolution of the Senate, calling for information in relation to the annulment of a contract with J. W. Kelly; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented an act passed by the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, by which they reverse and annul the judgment of the supreme court of that State for treason, rendered against Thomas W. Dorr, June 25, 1844. It was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Also, a memorial of clerks employed in the United States armory at Harper's Ferry, praying an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHASE. I ask leave to present a petition of citizens of Morrow county, Ohio, who seem to have become very thorough converts to the principle of non-intervention, for they pray the repeal of the whole Missouri compromise, for the repeal of all laws enacted by Congress in reference to the subject of slavery in the District of Columbia, and in the Territories, and for the repeal of the fugitive slave act. I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, presented a petition of inhabitants of Burlington, New Jersey, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of Horatio Gates Cook, praying to be allowed the half pay to which his father, David Cook, was entitled for services in the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, a petition of inhabitants of the Plantation of Bancroft and vicinity, in Aroostook county, Maine, praying the establishment of a mail route from Haynesville, through Bancroft Plantation, to Weston; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. TOUCHEY presented two petitions of tobaccoists residing in West Suffield, Connecticut, praying that a specific duty of forty cents per pound may be levied on all cigars imported into the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a memorial of citizens of New Haven, Connecticut, praying that measures may be taken to secure to American citizens residing or traveling in foreign countries the right of religious liberty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a petition of inhabitants of Meriden, Connecticut, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of New York, remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, a petition of inhabitants of Milford, Massachusetts, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MORTON presented a document in favor of the establishment of a mail route, by steamboats, between Chattanooga and Columbus; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. COOPER presented the memorial of George W. Harris, praying that Congress may pass an act to vest in him the copyright to the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth volumes of the Pennsylvania State Reports; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of John Garvin, praying for indemnity for expenses incurred in taking care of and supporting Thomas Garvin, who became an invalid in consequence of exposure during the last war with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a memorial of the Pittsburg and Connells-ville Railroad Company, praying a donation of land, and credit on rails imported for the use of that railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BUTLER presented a petition of citizens of Chester district, South Carolina, praying the establishment of a mail route from Chester Court House to Cedar Shoal; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented a petition of citizens of the United States, professing the Jewish religion, praying that measures may be taken to procure for citizens of the United States, of every creed, a just degree of civil and religious liberty, while residing or traveling in foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of steamboat officers and engineers at Cincinnati, praying that measures be taken to make "Evans's safety guard," against the explosion of boilers, free to the public, by the purchase of his patent right or otherwise; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPER WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. MORTON, it was Ordered, That the memorial of J. M. Hernandez, in behalf of the claimants to the indemnity under the ninth article of the treaty with Spain, of February 22, 1819, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. HAMLIN. As I am about to be absent from the city for some time, I desire to ask the Senate to excuse me from serving any longer on the Committee on Printing. It is a committee which requires almost daily attention. As I am on two other working committees, and am compelled to be absent for a few weeks, I hope the Senate will excuse me from serving on that committee.

The motion to excuse the Senator was agreed to. Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the President pro tempore be authorized to fill the vacancy.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and Mr. JOHNSON was appointed.

Mr. SMITH. I ask the Senate to excuse me from serving on any of the standing committees for the residue of the brief period during which I am to remain a member of the body. I am a member of the Committee on Printing, and of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I am under the necessity of leaving the city for the purpose of conducting my family to Connecticut, and I hope, therefore, that the Senate will accord me this favor.

The Senator was excused; and the President pro tempore was authorized to fill the vacancies thus created.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. FESSENDEN to supply the vacancy in the Committee on Printing, and Mr. SEWARD to supply the vacancy in the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SUSPENSION OF THE NEUTRALITY LAWS.

Mr. SLIDELL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be requested to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the President of the United States, during any future recess of Congress, to suspend by proclamation, either wholly or partially, the operation of the act "in addition to an act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States," approved the 20th of April, 1818; and also of the act supplementary thereto, approved 10th of March, 1838; should, in his opinion, the public interests require such total or partial suspension; such suspension not to exceed the period of twelve months; and the causes which shall have induced the President to proclaim it to be communicated to Congress immediately on its first meeting thereafter.

Mr. SLIDELL. Although the resolution which has just been read is, on its face, simply one of inquiry, I think it proper to state, at this time, the motives that have induced me to present it. I consider it one of great importance; it is not brought forward as a mere formality, but as the basis of substantive, direct, and, as I hope, prompt legislative action. I am quite conscious of the gravity of the responsibility assumed by a Senator taking the initiative in such a matter; but, with the firm conviction I entertain of its necessity, I should feel that I was recreant to my duty to the nation, and especially to the State that sent me here, were I to shrink from it. The duty, moreover, is distinctly imposed upon me by the action of the Legislature of Louisiana. On the 16th of March last, joint resolutions on the subject of Cuba were unanimously adopted. I have since been in the daily expectation of receiving official notice of them; but from neglect to forward a copy, or from some irregularity of the mail, they have not yet reached the delegation in an authentic form. I have a copy which I believe to be correct, but do not feel at liberty to present it formally, as I am advised that it would not be in conformity with the usage of the Senate to do so.*

Some months since, Mr. President, I was as skeptical as any one on this floor could be about the existence of any concerted plan to Africanize Cuba. I use the word, not for the reason that it has become fashionable, but because it plainly conveys, to my mind, at least, without periphrasis, the complex ideas of emancipation, confiscation, pillage, murder, devastation, and barbarism. Past experience has led me to be surprised at nothing that England might attempt to prevent the possession of this magnificent island by her great commercial rival, a rival destined to be, in a very few years, if, in fact, she be not already, in that respect, her recognized superior. Still, I could not bring myself to believe that Spain, with all her pride and obstinacy, would prefer the destruction of a flourishing colony, peopled by her own sons, to the prospect of its transfer, at some future, perhaps distant day, by honorable and peaceful negotiation, to a friendly nation, for a price that would extricate her finances from that gulf of seemingly hopeless bankruptcy in which they have been so long plunged.

If the Senate will indulge me, I will state now, as briefly as possible, the reasons that have led me to the full conviction of a well-understood purpose between Spain and England, in which France is certainly a confidant, and probably a participant, for the Africanization of Cuba.

On the 8th of April, 1852, Lord Malmesbury, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, directed his Minister at Washington, in concert with the French Minister, to propose to our Government "a tripartite convention, by which the three nations should bind themselves severally and collectively, to renounce, both now and hereafter, all intention to obtain possession of the Island of Cuba, and to discountenance all attempts to that effect on the part of others." This proposition was made to Mr. Webster, then Secretary of State, but no definite reply was made to it while he remained in office. His successor, however, Mr. Everett, under date of 1st December, 1852, declined the overture in a paper which will be forever remarkable in our diplomatic history, for its high-toned nationality, and a vigor of style corresponding with the importance of the question. Let us now trace the origin of this joint proposition of England and France, on the 20th October, 1851. Lord Palmerston, then British Foreign Secretary, writing to Lord Howden, his Minister at Madrid, says:

"With reference to the passage in M. Miraflores's note, in which he states that the Spanish Government cannot

* Joint Resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana, passed 16th March, 1854.

Be it resolved, That we view with alarm the recent and avowed change that has taken place in the policy of the Spanish Government in Cuba, the manifest tendency and result of which must be the abolition of slavery and the destruction of the white race in that country.

Resolved, That we believe such an event will have a most pernicious effect upon the same institution and interests in these States; that it will destroy the social and political existence of that island; that it will materially affect the natural law of American progress by precluding forever the admission of Cuba into this Union; that it will create in our immediate vicinity, and almost within sight of our own shores, a government administered by an inferior and barbarous African race, under the immediate influence of European interests and ideas, and adverse to the pure American influence which should predominate on this continent and its adjacent islands; that it will menace the security of the outlets of all our southern and southwestern rivers and harbors of the Gulf of Mexico, of the American Mediterranean, of the new great highways of commerce through those seas and across the Isthmus of America; and that it will materially endanger the intercourse between our Atlantic and Pacific States.

Resolved, That we approve of the sentiments expressed in the inaugural message of General Pierce, relative to the extension of our limits and the prevention of the establishment of prejudicial influences around our southern border, and of those laid down by his Excellency Governor Hébert in his late annual message.

Resolved, That we deem the time has arrived when the American people and the Federal Government should take a great and active interest in the proceedings of Spain and other European Powers in Cuba, in order to prevent the establishment of measures and institutions prejudicial to our own safety and welfare.

understand how her Majesty's Government can seriously recommend a measure which would prove very injurious to the natives of Cuba, when they also recommend that the Spanish Government should conciliate the affections of those Cubans, I have to instruct your lordship to observe to M. Miraflores, that the slaves in Cuba form a large portion, and by no means an unimportant one, of the people of Cuba, and that any steps taken to provide for their emancipation would, therefore, as far as the black population is concerned, be quite in unison with the recommendation made by her Majesty's Government, that measures should be adopted for contenting the people of Cuba, with a view to secure the connection between that island and the Spanish Crown; and it must be evident that if the negro population of Cuba were rendered free, that fact would create a most powerful element of resistance to any scheme for annexing Cuba to the United States, where slavery still exists.

"With regard to the bearing which negro emancipation would have on the interests of the white proprietors, it may safely be affirmed that free labor costs less than slave labor; and it is indisputable that a free and contented peasantry are safer neighbors for the wealthy classes above them than ill-treated and resentful slaves."

On the 9th of January, 1852, Lord Howden thus writes from Madrid to Earl Glanville, who had come into the Foreign Office on the resignation of Lord Palmerston:

"By the anxious desire of the Spanish Government, I take the liberty of calling your lordship's attention to the wish, widely entertained here, that, through the friendly interest and influence of England, an abnegatory declaration on the part of France and the United States, and of England, of course, might be made with regard to Cuba."

This invitation of interference from Spain was evidently brought about by the communication of 20th October, and others of a similar character. On the 24th April, 1852, Lord Malmesbury communicates to Mr. Isturitz, Spanish Ambassador at London, copies of the project of a convention to be proposed to the United States by the British and French Ministers at Washington, and the Marquis de Miraflores, on the 30th April, 1852, thanks Lord Howden in the warmest terms for his agency in having brought about this convention, or rather proposition for a convention. Mr. Isturitz, in a memorandum, which has no date, but from the order in which it appears in the parliamentary document from which I quote, must have been addressed to Lord Malmesbury between the 8th and 30th July, 1852, says:

"Her Catholic Majesty desires that, should the Government of the United States not adhere to the declaration respecting the island of Cuba, entrusted to the British and French Representatives at Washington, England and France would declare on their side, that they never will allow any other Power, whether European or American, at any time to possess itself of the Island of Cuba, either by cession, alienation, conquest, or insurrection of the same. Any such declaration made by the two Powers collectively would answer the intention put forward on a former occasion by the United States, never to allow a European Power to possess itself of Cuba. It would, moreover, be in consonance with the idea which, according to information received by Her Catholic Majesty's Government, at present prevails with the French and British Representatives, to whose care the negotiations now pending at Washington have been entrusted."

On the 12th July, 1852, the Marquis de Miraflores, in writing to Mr. Calderon de la Barca, states, very openly, what Mr. Crampton, in writing to Lord Malmesbury, on the same day, had only indirectly alluded to, "the inexpediency of urging too strongly the pending questions, whilst the result of the presidential election remains, as yet, undecided." Mr. Crampton says:

"Two months, however, having elapsed without our having received any further communication from Mr. Webster on this subject, and certain circumstances regarding the internal political state of the country, (these must, of course, have been the presidential nominations,) which M. Sartiges and myself had reason to believe were the cause of the delay, no longer existing, we thought the time had come when it would be well to bring the matter again under the consideration of the United States Government."

This was done on the 8th July, when the presidential nominations had been made. But the illness and lamented death of Mr. Webster prevented his replying. I have already offered my feeble tribute of praise to the able, thoroughly American, and, if he will allow me to pay him, what to some of his admirers may seem an equivocal compliment, Democratic reply of his successor. By the way, if the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, whom I regret not to see in his seat, has no special reason to the contrary, he would greatly gratify my curiosity, and, I doubt not, that of many others, if he would explain the great discrepancy between his letter, as Secretary of State, dated December 1, 1852, and President Fillmore's message, communicated to Congress only five days after; for the objections urged in the latter against the acquisition of Cuba, will apply with equal force in all future time, or at least, until the races that now compose its population shall be exterminated. The African and Spaniard must alike disappear, before Mr. Fillmore could consider its acquisition desirable. If England be allowed to have her way in the matter, this problem will soon be more than half solved. The Spanish race will have ceased to exist; and the African, if left to its own resources, with the enormous disproportion of males to females now, according to the last census, existing in the island, will rapidly melt away. The overtures of France and England having been thus definitively rejected, Lord John Russell, in his dispatch to Mr. Crampton, of February 16, 1853, which was by him communicated to our Government, closed with this very significant remark:

"Finally, while fully admitting the right of the United States to reject the proposal made by Lord Melbourne and M. de Turgot, Great Britain must at once resume her entire liberty, and upon any occasion that may call for it be free to act either singly or in conjunction with other Powers as to her may seem fit."

This implied menace seems, by the declaration of Lord Clarendon on the first night of the present session of Parliament, in the House of Peers, to have been carried out, at least so far as mutual promises between France and England go. Recollect that it is the Secretary for Foreign Affairs who speaks:

"I will further add that the union between the two Governments has not been confined to the Eastern question. The happy accord and good understanding between France and England have been extended beyond Eastern policy to the policy affecting all parts of the world, and I am heartily rejoiced to say that there is no portion of the two hemispheres with regard to which the policy of the two countries, however heretofore antagonistic, is not now in entire harmony. [Cheers.] Thus, then, my lords, at least one great good will have been secured by these transactions—that two great, and hitherto rival, nations have learnt to know and to appreciate each other better, to reject the fallacy that they are each other's natural enemy, and to be ready to act heartily together in any just and righteous cause." [Cheers.]

Now, there is another matter which to many, indeed to most Americans, will appear too trivial for notice here, but which to me seems of very grave import. In the recent duel at Madrid, between our Minister and the French Ambassador, M. de Turgot, Lord Howden, the representative of a Government where duelling is not only a felony at law, but where—what is much more important—public opinion permits the penalties of the law to be enforced, acted as the second of the French Minister; and, although this happened some three or four months since, he has not been recalled, nor have we heard that he has been even reprimanded for his conduct.

That I may not be misunderstood, I would here disclaim any idea of censuring the course of the principals in the duel. Each of them, no doubt, thought that it could not be avoided without the risk of compromising his honor. But, on the part of Lord Howden, there could be no possible obligation to go out with M. de Turgot, and he certainly would not have done so, had he not felt assured, in advance, of the approbation of his government. I have taken some pains to inquire, and learn that there can be nowhere found a parallel case. While on the subject of Lord Howden, I cannot refrain from saying that his very emphatic denial, addressed to an old and valued friend of mine, Mr. F. P. Corbin, of Virginia, of any interference, past or present, actual or intended, with the emancipation of the slaves in Cuba, would have commanded from me more implicit credence, if he had alluded to the letter of Lord Palmerston, of the 20th of October, 1851, and said that he had abstained from acting on it. His reticence respecting so important a fact, having a direct connection with the subject on which he was writing to Mr. Corbin, cannot, without excessive charity, be ascribed to inadvertence or forgetfulness.

To satisfy the Senate that this doubt of the fairness of Lord Howden's denegation is not unwarranted by the facts, I will read that portion of his letter, dated Paris, 14th November last, in which, after denying in the most positive terms, every assertion that England wished to Africanize Cuba, he proceeds to specify "what had been, during the last three years, his negotiations with the Spanish Government respecting Cuba, that it might be seen that there was not the slightest foundation for the rumors that had been circulated in the United States:"

"Firstly, I have been making unceasing representations at the number of slaves annually imported into the island, and complaints of the almost open manner in which the traffic was carried on under the very noses of the Captains-General, always excepting the excellent General Concha. Secondly, I have been making fruitless attempts to get the Spanish Government to declare the abominable traffic in men piracy—that is to say, to follow the example of the United States in this particular. Thirdly, I passed my time in anxious solicitations to obtain the ultimate and complete freedom of those negroes called 'Emancipados,' which have been fraudulently detained in bondage since the year 1817, in disregard of treaties. I rejoice to say that the Spanish Government has listened to the dictates of justice and humanity, and has granted me this boon. Fourthly, I have been endeavoring to procure an abrogation of that intolerant and immoral law, by which foreigners wishing to settle in Cuba are obliged to change their religion, on the somewhat startling principle (not understood elsewhere) that becoming bad men is a satisfactory preliminary to becoming good subjects.

"To these official negotiations I have added, at various times, friendly and officious exhortations to improve the internal system of the island, by facilitating the administration of justice, and by liberalizing the nominations to office and employment among the natives of the island. You will see what I really have done, or rather attempted to do, is very different from what I am said to have done in your papers. When the true state of the case is known, and ignorance or malevolence dispelled, I even reckon upon the good wishes of your countrymen in the success of the measures I ask, so consonant with your own laws and institutions. In all that I have here told you, with entire candor, the United States can only see the natural working of England's declared and unchanging policy in a cause which is dear to her; and Spain herself must feel that, in days like these, unless she executes her engagements and modifies her intolerance, she can never hope to enter again, and as she ought to do, into the hierarchy of nations."

Let us compare these bold, unqualified assertions, that all his negotiations with the Spanish Government respecting Cuba have been fully stated by him, with the record which I hold in my hand, and see how completely they are falsified. His letter to Lord Glenville of 9th January, 1852, I have already read, and have alluded to that of the Marquis of Miraflores, of 30th April, and from which I will now read extracts, and it will be seen that I have qualified Lord Howden's volunteer declaration to Mr. Corbin by the mildest possible term, as a reticence, the "suppressio veri."

"It is highly gratifying for me to be able to offer, in reply to your lordship's note, (conveying a copy of the proposed tripartite convention,) a new testimony of the lively satisfaction which the Government of Her Majesty feels in reflecting upon the manner essentially beneficial for the common interests of Spain and England, with which your lordship fills the high mission confided to you by your august Sovereign at this Court. I beg your lordship to accept the sincere and expressive thanks which I give you in the name of the Government of Her Majesty, for the efficacious manner in which you have contributed to the happy issue of the negotiation which forms the subject of the present communication."

Might I not, with perfect propriety, have gone further, and charged the British Minister at Madrid with the assertion of a falsehood? But it is quite as evident that he is an equally unreliable witness in a much more important matter. His agency in the proposed tripartite convention might have been safely avowed; not so in relation to the suggestion of Lord Palmerston of the emancipation of the slaves. Lord Howden still represents Queen Victoria at Madrid, and yet, if he speak the truth in his letter to Mr. Corbin, he had, since the 20th of October, 1851, failed to present the arguments in favor of emancipation, which he was expressly instructed to urge upon the Spanish Government. The habitual discipline of English diplomatists, their strict and prompt obedience to the instructions of their official chiefs, are well known, and Lord Palmerston, a thorough martinet in the administration of the Foreign Office, was the last man to tolerate anything like contumacy or neglect of his orders. We are bound then to believe that Lord Howden did say to M. Miraflores what he was instructed to say, and the most favorable construction we can place upon the discrepancy is, that the archives of his legation, not being at hand to refresh his memory, the fifth and sixth and most important subjects of his negotiations had escaped his recollection.

Another and more natural, if less charitable solution, may be found in the supposition that Lord Howden, knowing that his cabinet was desirous, from the threatening aspect of the Russian question, to remove suspicions of the existence of a convention between the three Governments respecting Cuba, found it convenient to profit by the opportunity presented by Mr. Corbin, to effect his object. His letter, on so grave a subject, to a citizen of the United States, eminently respectable, but occupying no public position, is altogether anomalous, and contrasts strongly with the habitual reserve of English diplomatists. It was widely circulated in Europe and the United States, and could not have failed to attract the notice of Lord Clarendon, and yet we have no intimation in any of the London journals of its not being approved by him. Silence in such a case presumes not only assent, but approbation, and commentary upon so gross a perversion of the truth in so high a quarter, would be superfluous. To say the least of it, it presents no very favorable specimen of the fair dealing of the English Cabinet.

There is one thing in Lord Palmerston's letter, which cannot fail to strike even the most casual reader; it is the recklessness of the assertion, with the experience of Jamaica and every other West Indian colony where the experiment of emancipation had been tried, fresh and full before him, that "free labor costing less than slave labor, negro emancipation would promote the interests of white proprietors, a free and contented peasantry being safer neighbors for the wealthy classes than ill-treated and resentful slaves."

Let us now see how far the idea of a concerted plan for the emancipation of the slaves in Cuba is borne out by the action of the authorities of the island. It is a matter of notoriety that the Spanish officials there have repeatedly and openly declared that, in the event of the insurrection of the Creole population, they would not only emancipate the slaves, but arm them against their masters; but, until very lately, nothing had been done towards the realization of this threat, and utterance had not been given to it in any official form. The Creoles of the white race are the great slave proprietors, and whatever may be said to the contrary, are, with entire unanimity, opposed to the Spanish domination, and desire, either by revolution and subsequent annexation, or by purchase, to enter into our Confederacy.

On this point, I speak not from mere conjecture or report, but from personal observation, and the most reliable sources of information; and the fact will hardly be questioned, when I cite as a witness, the late Captain General Cañedo, who, in a circular addressed, on the 29th October, 1853, to the subordinate officers in the island, said:

"Convinced, as is the Supreme Government, that it can only count upon the efficacious adhesion of the Spaniards of the Peninsula, (Spain,) and of the traders; and persuaded, also, that the Creoles are all its enemies, or, at least, that they are indifferent to the triumph of the holy cause of Her Majesty, and that, in the course of time, their fortunes will be contributed to serve the purposes of the revolutionary traitors, you will proceed," &c.

The threat of a servile war is sufficiently clear in the proclamation of the same Captain General, on resigning the command of the Island to his successor, General Pezuela, on the 3d December last; he then says:

"Remain obedient to the Supreme Government and to the officers it sends you, and never for a moment forget that the very existence and the name of Cuba depend upon its continuing to be a Spanish possession."

Mr. Barringer our late Minister to Spain, in his dispatch of 14th December, 1852, confirms this view of the subject:

"It is said that as a last resort to prevent its (Cuba) falling into the power of the United States, or becoming a free independent State by revolution, secret orders have been issued to emancipate the slaves, and place arms in their hands for the maintenance of their own rule and authority in the island, and that is the true reason of the recent increase of the slave trade in that island, in violation of public treaties. It is repeated as a motto in the public press of Spain, that Cuba must always be either 'Spanish or African.' What the future may bring forth it is impossible to see; but this, certainly, is the prevalent feeling and determination in Spain, in reference to the aspect of affairs and the final destiny of the Island of Cuba."

General Pezuela was known in Spain to entertain notions favorable to the emancipation of the slaves. He lost no time in proclaiming them in Cuba. He entered upon his office on the 4th of December, and on the 8th an article appeared in the official paper, the "Diario de la Marina," in which the policy of emancipation, as a necessary concession to European opinion, was very plainly indicated. Justly to appreciate the value of quotations from this journal, it will be proper to show what are the relations of the press in Cuba to the government. The "rules for the censorship of newspapers" declare:

"It shall be the duty of the censor to inform the civil Governor, within the day of the publication of the newspaper subject to his revision, of the publication of any article which has been inserted without his approval, or with alterations."

"Art. 14. All articles which treat of political or administrative matters, shall be submitted to the censor, without corrections or interlineations. The censor shall make such modifications as he may esteem opportune, noting them at the foot, and shall sign every leaf of the paper when he returns it to the editor."

Under these regulations which are stringently enforced, the opinions and arguments enounced in the newspapers of Havana are all approved by the Government before publication. The "Diario" of the 28th December, has an article on the necessity of a new organization of labor, recommending the importation of apprentices. It is much too verbose for quotation, and is written in a very ambitious and oracular style; but it contains one paragraph which cannot be misinterpreted:

"It being understood that what we have in view is to make a transition from labor that is entirely compulsory to the organization of labor under the system of complete freedom which prevails in other countries, it is necessary, prudent, and just, that we shall conciliate as far as possible the exigencies of both extremes. The contract system, which establishes for a fixed period, a reciprocal servitude and a reciprocal mastership, is the only possible solution of so delicate a problem."

On the 24th December last, a decree was promulgated authorizing, for two years, the unlimited importation of apprenticed laborers from Spain, India, Yucatan, and the Chinese Empire. It contains sixty-seven articles, prescribing minute regulations for the system. But some idea of their efficacy for the protection of the victims of this new slave trade, may be formed from the second clause of the fifth article, which declares that not more than four persons per ton, including the crew, shall be shipped on any vessel. Our limit for passengers was two to every five tons, and when the present regulation requiring fourteen square feet of deck for each passenger was substituted, it was supposed to be a fair equivalent for the old allowance. If I err, my friend from New York [Mr. Fish] who has lately investigated the subject of European emigration, will correct me. We all know that there is a vast deal of suffering, and great mortality on board of our emigrant ships, whose voyages are altogether made in the temperate zone. What, then, will be the horrid fate of these Cuban apprentices transported within the tropics on vessels allowed, by law, to carry ten times the proportioned number of passengers to which our ships are limited? With us, a ship of a thousand tons, which probably is about the average size of our Liverpool packet-ships, can transport four hundred passengers. The Spanish slaver is permitted to stow, or rather pack, in the same space four thousand apprentices. This would seem hardly credible, yet here is the decree at full, and any one who chooses to examine it, may find many other provisions exemplifying almost as strongly the paternal care which is to be extended to these favored objects of English philanthropy. Take, for instance, article fifty-seven:

"The master will only be able to apply the following punishments: The stocks, prison, and chains from one to thirty days, with or without privation of salary."

But subsequent articles expressly recognize the right of the master to inflict other punishment whenever, in his opinion, "the emergency requires summary action."

I have visited several plantations in Cuba where a portion of the laborers were Chinese, and I know that they were subjected to precisely the same labor and the same discipline as the negro slaves. Cannot some of our northern abolitionists spare a portion of their sympathy for these yellow-skinned sufferers, or is ebony the only shade of complexion that can elicit it? Why are not the horrid details of the sufferings of five or six hundred Chinese, inveigled by English merchants on board of English ships, under the pretext of conveying them to California, and then sold to bondage in the Chincha Islands, made the theme of eloquent declamation at the Tabernacle or Faneuil Hall by the Beechers, Jays, Phillipses, and other orators of the abolition school?*

*The following letter is taken from the New York National Democrat:

"The guano is dug by Chinese coolies, or laborers, who are brought here by English ships from the free ports of their native coasts. The poor fellows are made to believe that they are going to do well by engaging to serve as laborers for five years at a real (York shilling) a day, and a scanty allowance of rice. They fancy, it is said, they are coming to labor in the gold mines of California. How ever this may be, it is certain that they are shipped here in English vessels, and transferred or assigned (or whatever the word for such a transaction should be) to the Peruvian Government. I have known Englishmen who spoke of having been engaged in the traffic. The Government places

On the 28th December, four days after the promulgation of the decree authorizing the importation of apprentices, the "Diario" contained a long and labored article to prove that none but black laborers could be usefully employed in agricultural industry in Cuba. On the 20th January the Captain General addressed to the several administrative bureaux, and to a few private individuals high in its confidence, the following circular:

"Gobierno y Capitanía General.—Being desirous of reporting to Her Majesty accurately in regard to the labor applicable in this island to agriculture, I request that you lay before me your opinion upon this subject, taking into view and studying the situation of the slave race relative to our internal and external relations; and the manner in which laborers can be increased in sufficient numbers to cover those requirements of agriculture which are not reached by the newly instituted system of colonization, the propriety of resorting or not (with due respect to our treaties with other nations regarding the slave trade) to the introduction of African apprentices; and finally, the form and manner in which this system can be best established, and whatever else may occur to you upon this subject of so great importance.

"God preserve you many years.

"EL MARQUES DE LA PEZUELA.

"HAVANA, 18th January, 1854."

It has already appeared in a New Orleans paper, but I have received manuscript copies from two different sources in Cuba; they vouch for its authenticity, and speak of the design of the Captain General, acting under instructions from Madrid, to bring about the emancipation of the negroes, as no longer a matter of doubt. To cap the climax of usurpation and oppression, an order has been issued allowing all slaves to hire their time at eight dollars per month. The Spanish law has always favored the emancipation of the slave, and to enable him to acquire his liberty a tariff has been placed on his labor according to his convertible value, or the price paid for him. This was ten cents per day on every $100 value. Thus: a slave worth $500, by paying his master fifty cents per day, or fifteen dollars per month, could apply the balance of his earnings to the accumulation of a fund for the purchase of his liberty. Six hundred dollars is the minimum price of a healthy slave, so that the master, by being reduced from a monthly compensation of eighteen dollars to eight dollars, is deprived, by a stroke of the pen, of more than half his revenue.

Meanwhile the slave trade is going on with increased vigor, the vigilance of English cruisers has been so much relaxed for some months, as to justify the belief that the British Government is conniving at the introduction of slaves into Cuba. As we know that there is no disposition to promote the development of the agricultural resources of the island, to the detriment of their own colonies, we can draw but one inference from a course which would otherwise be inexplicable. She has them on these islands, avowedly under the original contract, to labor for five years; but who is to know how far this contract, if such it may be called, is adhered to? The truth is, the poor Chinamen are sold into absolute slavery—sold by Englishmen into slavery, the worst and most cruel, perhaps, in the world. There are about eight hundred of the unfortunate creatures at work on these islands at a time. As fast as death thins them out, the number is increased by new importations. The labor is severe, much more so than that of the negroes on our southern plantations. They are kept at hard work in the hot sun throughout the day. On the middle island they are tasked, each one, strong and weak alike, to dig from the hill and wheel to the mangers five tons of guano each per diem. The guano is compact, like hard clay like loam, and as dusty, when dug, as ashes. On the north island it has to be blasted for the steam paddies. It has to be wheeled from a hundred yards to a quarter of a mile. The nature of the labor may be conceived.

"The Chinese work almost naked, under a tropical sun, where it never rains. They are slender figures, and do not look strong. Negro drivers, the most ugly-looking blacks I ever saw, are stationed among them, with heavy thongs, which I have seen them use. The poor coolies have no hope or reward, no day of rest.

"The smoke of their torment goes up on Sundays as well as on week days. It blows away in a yellow cloud miles to leeward, and I never see it without thinking what a hell on earth these islands must be. That I do not exaggerate this account, any one who has been here will readily bear witness. The fact that some of the Chinese almost every week commit suicide to escape their fate shows the true state of their case. I was told that more than sixty had killed themselves during the year, chiefly by throwing themselves from the cliffs. They are buried as they live, like so many dogs. I saw one who had been drowned—it was not known whether accidental or not—lying on the guano, when I first went ashore. All the morning his dead body lay in the sun; in the afternoon they had covered it a few inches, and there it lies, along with many similar heaps, within a few yards of where they were digging. On the north island the Chinese carry heavy water cases, slung on poles, between two, up the steep hills; they can, in this way, as well as in barrows, take weights altogether disproportionate to their slender forms."

always contended, that the negroes imported since the treaty for the suppression of the slave trade, in 1817, were entitled to their freedom; and, over those introduced since the supplemental treaty of 1835, she has claimed guardianship and right of interference. It is estimated that much more than a moiety of all the slaves in the island are in this category. The price of present immunity from interference must be future emancipation.

This is probably the question in this hemisphere on which Lord Clarendon says that the policy of France and England, however antagonistic heretofore, is now in entire harmony. He cannot allude to any other subject than Cuba. For several years the two countries acted in concert in their difficulties with the Argentine Confederacy, until their final adjustment; and I am not aware of any part of this hemisphere, with the exception of the United States, where any occasion for concerted action has existed, or can exist; and as on the surface, at least, there appear elsewhere no disturbing elements, it would puzzle the most ingenious head to imagine where, on this side of the Atlantic, these loving allies are to display their harmonious policy, except towards us in Cuba. It is now, fortunately, not improbable that they will find themselves sufficiently occupied nearer home.

And here it may not be inappropriate to say how much it is to be regretted that in the Russo-Turkish quarrel, the attention of the country has not been more directed to the question in its aspects as affecting our own political interests. As between the rude and vigorous barbarism of the Cossack, and the effete nationality of the Moslem, I find no room for active sympathy, scarcely even for an abstract preference. The gratuitous and unwarranted declarations of our Minister, Mr. Spence, in his presentation to the Porte, calls for something more decided than a reprimand. If made in the terms stated in the newspapers, with every appearance of authenticity, there is but one fitting remedy, his immediate and unqualified recall. Should the contest, as many believe it will, (I am not of the number,) be speedily decided in favor of Western allies of the Porte, Louis Napoleon living and continuing to wield despotic power, we may not only abandon all hope of any early reaction in favor of liberal principles in Europe, but may look to a probable collision for which we are by no means prepared.

It is true that we have just made one short step in the right direction: we have appropriated three millions for a half dozen steam frigates, and have had the good sense to give a large discretion as to the mode of construction to the able Secretary of the Navy, which I feel confident will produce, instead of the miserable abortions under the old system, ships not unworthy of our past naval reputation. But England has now fifty or sixty war steamers afloat, and France as many more—ready, so soon as their services may be dispensed with in the Baltic and Black Seas, to illustrate, on our shores, the happy accord which Lord Clarendon traveled out of the record so offensively to state, existed between the two Powers in both hemispheres. We have fortunately been forewarned; it will be our own fault if we be not forearmed. This menace should, at least, have one salutary effect—that of checking the disposition to scatter with so much profusion the public treasure on every side on objects of more than questionable justice or utility. We seem to be in constant dread of financial plethora, and anxious to deplete in every way, excepting in preparations for defense.

With these, as I think, conclusive evidences of the intentions of Great Britain and France, intentions which, if realized, will soon, after scenes of blood and horror from which every one not blinded by fanaticism must instinctively recoil, convert this fair island into a second Hayti, what course have we to pursue? Shall we remain passive spectators until the fatal blow has been struck, or shall we at once put ourselves in an attitude to repel and avert it? I counsel neither negotiation nor remonstrance on this subject; we have the remedy in our own hands; it is that indicated in the resolution which I have submitted. Arm the President with the simple power to unfetter the limbs of our people, and the Government will have no occasion to put forth the energies of the nation; individual enterprise and liberality will at once furnish the men and the materiel that will enable the native population of Cuba to shake off the yoke of their trans-Atlantic tyrants.

I desire no movement on the part of our citizens, until the Cubans shall have put their own shoulders to the wheel. They have been reproached for their pusillanimity; but let it be once understood that if, by their own efforts to vindicate their rights, they show themselves worthy of our sympathies, the arm of the Federal Government will not be interposed on behalf of their oppressors, in less than six months the flag of freedom, the lone star, will wave over the whole island—the Moro may, perhaps, hold out somewhat longer. One thing is certain, that in despite of all your statutes, your collectors, your marshals, your Army and Navy, if the revolutionary standard be once hoisted in Cuba, and maintained for a few short weeks, no Administration can prevent our citizens rushing to the rescue in such numbers as will secure its triumph—a Democratic President would not desire to do it. I deprecate as much as any one can such a contingency. There is but one mode to avert it. Intrust the power to suspend the neutrality laws to the President. He will not exercise it lightly; and, in all probability, the knowledge of his power will dispense with the necessity of exercising it at all. France and England will retract their mischievous counsels, and orders will be given to the Captain General to retract his steps.

We have already had some experience of the emptiness of these menaces of interposition; they tended rather to precipitate than to retard the acquisition of Texas, and will, if persisted in, produce the same effect now. I repeat, I would deprecate any movement not invited by the uprising of the people of Cuba; but if they be driven to it by the conviction that they are doomed by their jailors to the horrors of a servile war, then, I say, hands off; the people will not, cannot, be prevented from giving them aid more substantial than their prayers. They will not permit a Black empire under a British Protectorate, the key of the Gulf of Mexico, nominally independent, but for every purpose of annoyance and aggression, a British dependency to be established in sight of our own shores.

Cuba is studded with the safest and most capacious ports, from whence an enemy may menace, if not command, the immense and constantly increasing commerce which must pass through the narrow strait that separates it from Florida. We have repeatedly announced to the world that we will not permit it to fall into the possession of any other European power than Spain. This declaration has met with the hearty, unanimous response of the nation, and yet its cession to either France or England would be less dangerous to the South than the existence of a pretended independent black Empire or Republic. I say nothing of the value of the island in a financial point of view; its inexhaustible fertility; its annual exports, now amounting to nearly thirty millions, and which would soon be doubled under a good government, where any confidence was reposed in its stability. At this time agricultural property is not worth more than three or four years' purchase, estimated on the basis of present income. A plantation, yielding a net revenue of $25,000, can be bought for less than $100,000.

I think it unnecessary to make more than a passing allusion to a matter of recent occurrence, and which has been the subject of a communication from the President to the House of Representatives. I mean the seizure of the United States mail steamer Black Warrior at Havana, and confiscation of her cargo. This is but one, the most outrageous, indeed, of a long series of insults and vexations by which it has been attempted to exclude our steamers from Cuba. They serve to complete the proof I have adduced of an understanding, probably an alliance, consummated by treaty between Spain, France, and England. The Cuban authorities would never have dared to take so offensive a step, if they had not relied on the support of those Powers. I have no doubt that the policy indicated by the President will be energetically pursued, and that full pecuniary reparation to the owners of the Black Warrior, and apology for the insult to our flag, will ultimately be obtained.

But I regret that we are to look for this at Madrid. I should have preferred to see it enacted in a more summary way by the blockade of Havana and the other principal ports of the island. It is high time that we should have a remedy for these insults more immediately at hand, and that the Captain General should be compelled to use his power, which is only restricted by his ultimate responsibility at Madrid, as well for redress as for aggression. I have been satisfied, for the last three months, that the power of suspending the neutrality laws should be conferred on the President; I now think that it should be done at once. Perhaps it may be proper to go further than I have proposed, and to make it discretionary, to use it even during the session of Congress, but I have been restrained by the belief that the President will only have to announce to the Representatives of the people and of the States, that the contingency has arrived, and call for immediate action, and his appeal will be promptly responded to. The issue must be met eventually, and we cannot choose a more proper moment for its solution.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. President, I am aware that this is not the proper occasion for the discussion of the very grave subject to which my colleague has called the attention of the Senate and the country; yet, as he has done it in obedience to resolutions passed by the Legislature of our State, I think it proper to say a very few words.

I concur with him in opinion, that the existence of a concerted scheme for the Africanization of Cuba, and for the establishment of a negro State, nominally independent, and yet under the virtual protectorate of England, France, and Spain, has been conclusively established by the evidence that he has placed before the Senate in so connected and conclusive a form. I deem it proper further to state, that I am thoroughly convinced of the fact that this scheme is now in process of execution; and I deem it to be the duty of this Government firmly and promptly to oppose, by all proper means, the carrying out of a line of policy so fraught with danger, not only to the country at large, but especially to our southern constituencies.

I am not prepared, sir, to commit myself to the line of policy indicated by the resolution offered by my colleague. I shall reserve what I have to say upon that point. I only rose to express the hope that this matter may be speedily taken into consideration by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that their report may be presented to us. When it shall be presented, at the proper time, and when discussion shall arise, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate for a fuller expression of my views upon the subject.

Mr. HUNTER. If any other gentleman desires to speak on this subject, I suggest the propriety of postponing it until to-morrow, so that we may now take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SLIDELL. I consider that this is not the proper time for the general discussion of the subject. The resolution is merely one of inquiry, and can now be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and when they make their report, I take it for granted that, whatever it may be, it will not be agreed to without discussion.

Mr. SEWARD. I suppose, as this resolution was introduced this morning, it cannot be considered now unless by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT. It was introduced by unanimous consent, and there was no objection to its consideration.

Mr. SEWARD. It was impossible, at the distance which I sit from the honorable Senator from Louisiana, to hear the very elaborate argument which he has addressed to the Senate; and as this question is one of very grave magnitude in its bearings, and in some respects may possibly tend to endanger the peace of the country, and to involve us in the calamities of war, which are just beginning in the eastern world; and as, in looking around, I see that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. MASON] is not in his seat, and that two other distinguished members of that committee are not here, I have risen for the purpose of suggesting that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have no sort of objection to that.

Several Senators. Postpone it for a week.

Mr. SLIDELL. I think to-morrow will be better.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, as the representative in part of the State which probably will more directly be affected by the policy which has been indicated, I must express my thanks to the Senator from Louisiana for bringing forward this proposition, although I am not prepared to say that I will vote directly for that proposition. I take this opportunity to express my own opinion that there cannot be a reasonable doubt in the mind of any sensible man, who has been watching the course of events in Cuba, that there is, and has been for a long time, a decided determination to Africanize that island. I have always thought so; and watching, as I have done for many years, the policy of that island, I have always thought that course was the most suicidal that could possibly have been resorted to. Sir, Senators will recollect that as far back as 1823, the proposition was directly made to our Minister at London, Mr. Rush, by the British Government, that we should pledge ourselves to take no measures for possessing ourselves either of the island, or of any peculiar interests in the island of Cuba, and that we should join England and France then in committing ourselves. This was declined at that time.

Now, through the intervention of England, the term of apprenticeship to which imported Africans have been subject, of seven years, has been recently reduced to one; and the latest advices from Cuba disclose this state of facts, that the three hundred or four hundred Africans seized near Matanzas some months ago, when their title to liberty was fully made out, were not apprenticed for the usual term of seven years, but were put out to favorites of the Government for one year—the Captain General himself, the highest in authority, setting the example of approbation of that policy by selecting one of the children for himself, who could be of no use to him, but to show to the people his own approbation of the policy. I trust the Committee on Foreign Relations, seeing the importance of the subject, will report at an early day.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the resolution will be referred.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on postponing its further consideration until to-morrow.

Mr. CHASE. I have no objection to taking the question on postponement without further debate. I hope the resolution will be postponed; but I prefer that the postponement be for a week, rather than till to-morrow.

The resolution does not contemplate any immediate action, but merely proposes to confer a power on the President of the United States to be exercised during the recess of Congress. Of course there is no necessity for immediate reference. As the opinion of the honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SLIDELL] has been expressed upon the general question of our relation to Cuba, and also that of the honorable Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY], their opinion, of course must go out to the country, and may, perhaps be taken as indicating the judgment of the Senate, unless some opportunity be afforded to those who entertain different opinions to state their views.

For myself, I do not hesitate to say that, so far as any proper measures be taken by the Spanish Government, either at Madrid or in Havana, whether under the influence of England or France, or from independent considerations of duty and policy, may tend to the emancipation of slaves in Cuba, those measures will command my sympathy and my best wishes for their happy and beneficial issue to all parties.

But, sir, I am far from thinking that the disposition towards emancipation is confined to the Spanish Government in either hemisphere, or to the Governments of England and France. Certain facts which have come to my knowledge incline me to the opinion that the idea of emancipation is seriously and favorably entertained by many enlightened Spaniards and Creoles in the island and out of the island, and by at least some of the gentlemen who constitute what is familiarly known as the Cuban Junta. To that idea and that purpose, by whomsoever entertained, I am decidedly favorable.

On the other hand, to all that part of the policy of the English and Spanish Governments, if there be such a policy, which tends to revive the African slave trade under any name or in any form, whether for the purpose of supplying apprentices to the island, to be converted at some future period, either near or remote, into freemen, or for any other purpose, I take the same objections, and take them as strongly, as the Senator from Louisiana.

I do not wish to go into this subject now. I wish, however, to have an opportunity of submitting my views of it to the Senate and the country, and therefore suggest the postponement of the resolution for a week.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope, Mr. President, that this matter will now be referred. I think it prudent that the Committee on Foreign Relations should take charge of it at this time. I am sure, for one, that I could not, and I hardly think the Senate could come to any intelligent or satisfactory conclusion upon the suggestions that have thus far been made. They are certainly deserving of great respect and consideration, coming from the Senator from Louisiana as they do, acting upon his very high responsibility as the representative of a State very deeply concerned; but as this is a matter which must necessarily depend upon information and communications to be made by the Executive to the committee, I think prudence requires that I should move the reference of it immediately; for if we engage in a debate on these general topics, without having any definite issue upon which the Senate can pronounce its judgment, I doubt very much whether we may not do as much mischief as good. I therefore move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT. The question must first be taken on the motion to postpone.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the honorable Senator from South Carolina will consider better his proposition, and let the resolution be postponed for some time—some Senators say for a week. To me it is quite indifferent whether for a week or not. It is quite enough for me to have it postponed for a day, until I shall have an opportunity to see what the argument which I have not been able to hear on this subject is; and if that be the arrangement, I will wait with great pleasure for another day, in order to be better informed.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will state to the honorable Senator from New York, that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, [Mr. Mason,] informed me that he would not return until this day week. I think that, perhaps, there would be some degree of impropriety in going on with the discussion of the question, in the absence not only of the chairman, but of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. EVERETT.]

Mr. SEWARD. And of the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. CLAYTON.]

Mr. SLIDELL. And of the honorable Senator from Delaware, who is also on the Committee on Foreign Relations. It seems to me better to reserve the discussion, until the committee report, and I therefore hope that, by general consent, the resolution will be referred now.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest that Senators will have a chance to discuss the question when the Committee on Foreign Relations report.

Mr. SEWARD. If that be the general sense of the Senate, I will not object further than to say that the fact of receiving a resolution of this kind, and referring it, after a debate, in favor of the proposition, without any argument opposed to it, is calculated, by implication, to commit the Senate to some degree of favor towards the proposition itself. Protesting for myself that I do not in any way compromise myself, but that I wait to hear the argument and the report of the committee, I will very cheerfully yield.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope, then, the resolution will be referred. It commits no one, I think.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I merely wish to say that I think I stated very distinctly that I do not mean to commit myself to the support of any policy, or to the course recommended by my colleague; but that I would reserve my views on that subject until a report should be made by the Committee on Foreign Relations. I conceive, however, that the question has not been discussed, as gentlemen say, upon one side alone; but that my colleague simply accompanied the offering of the resolution with such explanations as would necessarily be demanded by the Senate and the country, and which, as a matter of justice to himself, he was bound to offer, when putting before the country a question so grave as this is, so as to justify him in bringing it to the attention of the Senate and the country.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on postponing the further consideration of the resolution for a week.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from Ohio will withdraw that motion, and let us refer the resolution now.

Mr. CHASE. As it seems to be the general sense of the Senate that the subject should be referred, I withdraw the motion.

The resolution was then agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855, the pending question being on the appeal taken by Mr. COOPER, on Thursday last, from the decision of the Presiding Officer, (Mr. BRIGHT being in the chair,) ruling that the following amendment, reported by Mr. COOPER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, was to provide for a private claim, and therefore excluded by the 30th rule:

"To pay Andrew Taylor for his reservation of six hundred and forty acres of land at Sitico Old Town, on the waters of the Tennessee river, $14,720, with interest from the 23d of August, 1843."

Mr. COOPER. I appealed on Thursday last from the decision of the Chair, because I believed that that decision was not in conformity with the spirit of the rule upon which the question of order was raised. I stated then that this same claim, presented in the same shape a year ago, had been received. It was passed both by the House and the Senate, and was afterwards lost in the committee of conference, which took place between the two Houses, upon the disagreeing votes on the Indian appropriation bill. The amendment does not involve any of the characteristics of a private claim, such as are contemplated by the rule in question.

As I stated on Thursday last, it is a claim which arose under the provisions of the treaty of 1817, between the United States and the Cherokee Indians. By that treaty, all Indians, or white men married to Indian women, by whom they had children, became entitled to land; and Andrew Taylor, being a person within the provision, became entitled to a section of land. By the operation of an act of the Legislature of Tennessee, he was ejected from that land; and afterwards, in 1835, when a new treaty was negotiated between the United States and the Cherokees, provision was made for such as had lost their lands in virtue of the legislation of the Legislature of Tennessee. Commissioners were appointed, in pursuance of the seventeenth article of that treaty, to assess the value of the reservations made under the treaty of 1817. They made the assessment, and returned it into the office. The value put upon this reservation was $14,720; and by an act of Congress subsequently passed—which I have not just now before me—provision was made for its payment, and for the payment of other claims, the value of which had been determined by the same commissioners. That sum is exhausted; and the proposition now is merely that provision shall be made for a claim which stands both upon the faith of treaties, and upon a statute passed by the Congress of the United States. It is in no sense a private claim. I trust that the Senate will overrule the decision of the Chair, and thus do justice to this most meritorious claimant.

Mr. RUSK. It seems to me that this amendment is clearly not excluded by the rule. The rule excludes only such private claims as are not for the purpose of carrying out an existing law. Any appropriation, it seems to me, upon the reading of that rule, will at once strike the Senate as being in order, if it is to carry out an existing law. This amendment is clearly for the purpose of carrying out an existing law. By one treaty this reservation was allowed. By the laws of the State in which the reservation was made, the reservee was deprived of his reservation. A law of Congress was then passed, authorizing the payment to him of the value of the reservation, not including the improvements. But, whatever the land would have been worth, taken under the former treaty, was to be paid at its valuation, not including the improvements. A commission was appointed for the purpose of ascertaining that fact; appropriations were made for their payment, and other cases similarly situated were paid. The commissioners went out, and determined the amount of damage. Then the amendment is offered under the provisions of a treaty, under the provisions of a law, and is clearly not intended to be excluded by the rule, because it is simply the carrying out of the law.

Mr. COOPER. When addressing the Senate before, I was not able to turn to the provisions of the law making appropriation for the payment of the claim. Before the question is taken, I desire to read it:

"Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to pay, or cause to be paid, the several sums found due to claimants under the Cherokee treaty of 1836, upon the certificate issued by the board of commissioners appointed in pursuance of the seventeenth article of said treaty, out of the unexpended balance of appropriations made for the payment of such claims, upon the presentation of said certificates."

I have stated already that the claim arose under the treaty of 1817, originally, and that provision was made for the assessment of the value of the reservation by the subsequent treaty of 1835 and 1836. This is the one referred to in the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. BRIGHT called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fish, Foot, Jones of Iowa, Norris, Pettit, Stuart, Sumner, and Wade—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Cooper, Dawson, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Toombs, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The decision of the Chair is sustained. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. WALKER. If I understand, it is a tie vote. The Chair made a decision; the appeal was taken; and the question then was, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?" On a tie vote the affirmative is lost. It does not stand. The amendment is, therefore, decided to be in order.

Mr. COOPER. The Presiding Officer votes.

Mr. WALKER. The question is in the affirmative; shall the decision stand? There was not a majority for that.

Mr. BADGER. I think the Senator is right; and in order to settle the question, and ascertain the sense of the Senate on that subject, I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, that that vote is an affirmation of the judgment of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is not in order to take an appeal upon an appeal.

Mr. WALKER. There is no appeal now. The Chair announces that to be settled.

Mr. BROWN. That appeal the Chair has announced to be settled.

Mr. BADGER. The Chair announces that the decision is affirmed; and I appeal from that decision. Suppose the Chair were to announce yeas 15, nays 25, and that the decision was thereby affirmed, could not I appeal from that?

Mr. WALKER. The decision holds the affirmative, if I understand, and the Senate has failed to cast a majority vote for it. It is a tie vote.

Mr. BADGER. The form of the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?" There must be a majority in the affirmative to sustain the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that it is not in order to take an appeal from a decision upon a question of order.

Mr. BADGER. I take an appeal from that. Surely the Senate must have the ruling of its own decisions, otherwise we cease to have any influence upon our own business.

Mr. BRIGHT. I concur entirely in the opinion expressed by the Chair. It is not the opinion of the Chair that the question is upon in this case; it is an appeal from the decision of the Senate that the Senator proposes to take. The Senate, of course, have sustained the decision.

Mr. COOPER. Oh, no.

Mr. BADGER. The Senate is equally divided.

Mr. BRIGHT. This comes up in the shape of an affirmative proposition. Suppose the question was upon an amendment, and the vote was 16 to 16; as a matter of course, the amendment would fail.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Chair decided this amendment out of order. The question is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? The Senate being equally divided, clearly the proposition fails, and the decision originally made by the Chair stands, and the amendment is out of order.

Mr. BAYARD. It seems to me that the proposition is an exceedingly simple one. The Chair decided that the amendment offered was out of order. That is binding, unless appealed from. I ask, whether you must not reverse the decision of the Chair in order to permit the amendment to be introduced? If you must reverse it, certainly you must have a majority to reverse a positive decision. The decision of the Chair would make the amendment out of order, unless reversed by the Senate. Can there be a reversal by an equality vote? If you take the analogy of courts of justice, the principle is that an exception to a decision must obtain a majority. Take, for instance, the case of a motion for a new trial. Where a trial has been had, and a motion for a new trial is made, if the court is equally divided, the motion is refused.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator will allow me to say that that is not the question now before the Senate. There being an equality of votes, the Presiding Officer declares that the decision is affirmed; from that decision I take an appeal.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand.

Mr. BADGER. And the Presiding Officer informs me that I have no right to take the sense of the Senate whether he is right in his construction. I say, therefore, that that would be equally true if the vote stood yeas fifteen and nays twenty-five. Suppose he said, in such a case, "The yeas have it;" could not I appeal from that decision? That is the question now before the Senate—whether the announcement of the vote by the Presiding Officer is conclusive.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no objection to the decision of that question by the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. That is the present question.

Mr. BAYARD. But it seems to me that there cannot be a shadow of a doubt, in regard to the decision of the Chair, that it requires a majority to reverse a decision of the Chair on a question of order.

Mr. BADGER. That may be so; but I think, clearly, we have a right to have the judgment of the Senate on that point. If not, then we have no right to the judgment of the Senate that the majority overrules the minority, if the Chair declares it the other way. I do not mean, of course, to imply that the Chair would decide it the other way; but to illustrate this proposition: There being a vote of yeas sixteen, nays sixteen, the Chair says the yeas have it, or the nays have it—either way; surely I have a right to the judgment of the Senate upon it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It seems to me that the Chair has decided two propositions. From one of those propositions there has been an appeal; from the other there has not been an appeal. The first proposition was whether this amendment was out of order. The Chair decided it to be out of order. That was one decision, from which an appeal was taken. When the votes were counted, they were found equally divided. The Chair then decided, upon that state of facts, that the appeal was lost—that the decision of the Chair was sustained. Now, the proposition to which the Senator from North Carolina proposes to take an appeal is this decision of the Chair, that an equally divided vote upon an appeal on a point of order affirms the decision originally rendered. It is from that proposition the appeal is now taken, and upon that proposition I cannot conceive how an appeal can be denied.

Mr. BRIGHT. The rule in this case, I apprehend, settles the question, as far as the Chair is concerned. The rule gives to the Chair the power of deciding whether an amendment is in order or not. If the Chair decides that it is in order, it requires a majority of the Senate to overrule that decision. Now, in this case, a majority of the Senate have not overruled the decision. It requires a majority to reverse the decision of the Chair; and if the appeal be persisted in, and the question is put, it ought to be in this shape: Shall the decision of the Chair be reversed by the Senate?—whether sixteen votes against sixteen reverses the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BADGER. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the fact that he does not meet the proposition before the Senate. There is a vote of sixteen to sixteen; the Chair announces that, therefore, the decision of the Chair is affirmed by the Senate.

Mr. BRIGHT. Because a majority has not reversed it.

Mr. BADGER. I am not entering into that. I will assume, for the present, that the honorable Senator from Indiana is correct; that the Chair is correct; but I happen to have a different opinion, and I take an appeal from that decision. The Chair says I am not entitled to it. Now, it is a question of construction; and, like every other question, is to be decided by this body. The Chair says, there being an equal division, the Chair is sustained. I say, there being an equal division, the decision of the Chair is reversed. Well, now, have we not a right to have the judgment of the body upon that question? I am not entering into the merits of the original question at all. I am not undertaking to decide now whether the ruling of the Chair is right or wrong; but I say I have a right to test that ruling by an appeal to the Senate. That is all. I very respectfully submit to the Presiding Officer that I think he must see that that is a question upon which, at all events, he has not a right to decide without appeal.

Mr. RUSK. The Senate was not paying much attention at the time this matter was discussed, and a bare quorum voted. I have no sort of doubt that this amendment comes clearly within the rule—that it is not excluded by it. We are delaying time with it. Here is a treaty stipulation to pay money; the amendment is to carry out a treaty; and when we propose to make an appropriation for that purpose, and pay one of the beneficiaries of the treaty, it is determined, under that rule, to be out of order. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WALKER] says we cannot appropriate at all under it, if that is the case. But we are getting into a hobble about the matter. We have one decision after another; and I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina, whether it would not be better, instead of following up his appeal, to get some one who voted in the majority to move a reconsideration, or to offer the amendment again, when the bill is reported, and we have a full Senate.

Mr. BADGER. I have no objection to the course suggested by my friend from Texas, but then I do not want it to be understood that when a Presiding Officer of this body announces that a vote is carried, the announcement is conclusive upon the body; because, as I have just mentioned, without the slightest imputation upon the honorable gentleman now filling the Chair, if that were so, and the Chair were to decide upon any other question, there being fifteen yeas and twenty-five nays, that the yeas had it, we should be entirely powerless, and a minority might determine anything, having the sanction of the Chair. I only want to have the sense of the Senate in that particular. I am entirely indifferent as to this particular vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question raised by the Senator from North Carolina. The Chair has no power to refuse to put questions.

Mr. BADGER. Then, sir, I have no hesitation in withdrawing the appeal; I am very willing to withdraw it, and let the matter fall. I do not wish to embarrass the Senate or delay the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appeal being withdrawn, the bill is open to amendment.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty," in line fifty-four. The object is to increase the appropriations for buildings for Indian agencies from $10,000 to $20,000. I have received a letter from the Indian office on the subject which explains the necessity for this:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, May 1, 1854.

SIR: In view of the necessity of removing the present localities of the Indian agencies in our remote Territories, and also of the negotiations which are being made with the Indians of Nebraska, and the consequent necessity of removing the agencies situated there, I have the honor to recommend that the appropriation now at the disposal of this Department for agency buildings be increased by $10,000, so that the amount applicable to that object will be $20,000.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEORGE W. MANYPENNY, Commissioner.

Hon. W. K. SEBASTIAN,
Chairman Committee Indian Affairs, U. S. Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I am further directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following as an additional section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, in all cases where by law or treaty stipulations the United States have engaged to invest sums of money in stocks for the benefit of the Indians, or to hold the same in trust, and pay interest thereon, or to pay perpetual annuities, to cause the said sums to be invested or held in trust, and the sums equal to the principal of said perpetual annuities to be, with the assent of the Indians, when necessary, invested in safe and profitable stocks of any of the States in this Union, or committed into shorter annuities, or the principal paid to the Indians, as the President, in his discretion, thinks most advantageous to the Indians.

Mr. President, the United States are indebted by treaty stipulations to Indian tribes in about three and a half millions of dollars, which they engaged many years ago to invest in safe and profitable stocks for the benefit of the Indians. Heretofore, in consequence of the embarrassed state of our exchequer, that treaty stipulation has never been redeemed; and the consequence is, that we are appropriating the interest upon the money every year, while we have an overflowing Treasury, out of which the money might be taken and well invested, and the treaty stipulations fulfilled. This, then, is a proposition to pay off so much of our national debt as is due under treaty stipulations to the Indians. That is one class of debt which is owing on account of Indian treaties, and it amounts to about three and a half millions of dollars. The stipulation is uniformly in some half dozen treaties, that it shall be invested in "safe and profitable stocks." That has not been done heretofore; and this merely requires the President to do what the treaties required to be done long since.

The second class of engagements are of this kind: where the United States pledged themselves to the Indians that they would hold certain amounts of money in the Treasury of the United States in trust, and pay them the annual interest perpetually. This, to all intents and purposes, is of course a national debt, and might as well be invested in safe and profitable stocks for the benefit of the Indians.

There is also a third class, that of perpetual annuities, which ought to be changed to the form of stocks. The United States are paying the interest perpetually, but there is now idle in the Treasury not only the capital, but more than the capital required to produce this annual interest. In order to convert this and the second class to which I have adverted, would require the formal assent of the tribes before it could be done; and the amendment only authorizes the President to make these investments for the Indians when they agree to it, and he judges it to be necessary.

In regard to the first class, however, amounting to three and a half millions of dollars, their assent is not necessary, because it has already been given by treaty; and it is simply required of us to invest the money, which ought to have been done long since, and would have been done ere this but for the state of the Treasury. The main object is to prevent the enormous accumulation of these perpetual annuities, trust funds, and other national debts, which are swelling to an alarming extent, I may say, the annual appropriations in the Indian bill.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, if I understand this proposition, it is to invest the money which we owe to the Indians in State stocks; and those State stocks, according to the practice of the Government heretofore, we must guarantee. If they fall below par, or if the State fails to pay the interest, we have to make it good. In each of the annual appropriation bills we have already stipulations to make good the interest on the Indian funds which we have already invested in those stocks. I think our experience has shown that this is a very dangerous relation to hold towards the States. I am not disposed to see the United States going into the market, and investing money, especially in such large sums as these, in the stocks of the States, for many reasons. The precedent is a bad one, and it is a dangerous sort of patronage, especially when we come to extend it further; and it is one which may be sought to be extended further in the present condition of the Treasury. It seems to me that we had better meet the question at once. It is far safer for the United States, if we have to guarantee, to retain the funds, and pay the interest ourselves, instead of running this risk. We have not found, heretofore, that this relation of debtor and creditor between the United States and the States has been very profitable, and I am not disposed now to extend the practice. It has gone far enough already.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I wish, Mr. President, to be allowed to correct what I think is an obvious misapprehension of the Senator from Virginia. I do not think the Indian bill contains the feature of which he speaks—that of annual appropriations to make up for the fall or depreciation in the price of State stocks.

Mr. HUNTER. The failure to pay the interest.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It is true there is in every Indian appropriation bill an appropriation to pay interest, but that interest is received from the States into the Treasury of the United States as trustee, and requires an appropriation to pay it out again. That is a mere matter of form. After the money goes into the Treasury it requires an act of appropriation to get it out again. The Government of the United States holds largely of the stocks of the States in trust for the Indians, at this time, in pursuance of treaty stipulations; and as to the first class of cases embraced in the amendment, there cannot be any question or doubt as to the propriety of it, because such is the positive, imperative obligation of the treaties, that it must be invested for the benefit of the Indians "in safe and profitable stocks." The duty which we take upon ourselves to discharge is that of trustee; a plain one, which involves no responsibility where the trust is honestly performed. If stocks are safe and paying stocks at the time we buy them, we are certainly not bound to guarantee the fortunes of the particular State, or its punctuality and promptness, through all coming time. Such has not been the view which the United States have taken of their obligations heretofore. I well remember that in a case where some bonds were bought for the Chickasaws, they fell from par to twenty-five cents on the dollar. We have large stocks of the State of Michigan at this time which are paying interest, but the annual interest thereon is appropriated in the Indian appropriation bill, and these are the appropriations which the Senator from Virginia erroneously supposes to be appropriations to make good out of the Treasury of the United States, the losses to the Indians. Such is not the case. There can be, therefore, no difficulty as to the first class, amounting to about three and a half millions of dollars, in regard to which we have most imperatively engaged by treaty to do the very thing which the amendment proposes to require the President now to do.

The second class of cases, those in which we hold moneys in trust where we have engaged to pay perpetual annuities, I assimilate to the case of a national debt, and allow them to be converted into stocks, with the assent of the Indians. If they give us that assent in such a manner as to enable us to be freed from any responsibility afterwards to invest these surplus funds for their benefit, it will be of great advantage. We are now paying interest on large sums of money which are lying idle in the Treasury of the United States, and this will be, to that extent, a discharge of the national debt. The amount which we have thus engaged to pay interest to the Indians reaches, at this time, the astonishing sum of $10,000,000; and I am sure that few Senators are aware that this amount is a perpetual charge against the United States, unless it can be redeemed, or its extinction provided for in the manner pointed out by the amendment.

But the amendment does not stop simply with requiring the investment of these funds of the Indians in safe and profitable stocks. It allows, with their consent, these long annuities to be turned into shorter annuities; or, in such cases where the President may judge it to be advisable, the whole capital may be paid over to the Indians. I can imagine many cases in which the Indians are highly competent to manage the funds for themselves, and where, instead of dealing out to them little dribbling annuities perpetually, it would be much better for their condition, socially and physically, that the whole capital should be redeemed and extinguished by the payment of the principal over to them.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I think that if the Senator from Arkansas will look into the matter, he will find that we have been in the habit of making good an appropriation to Indians on account of the failure of Indiana to pay the interest on certain moneys invested in Indiana State stocks. I think we have made good investments in Arkansas stock for the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. No, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. I think we have; I think the Senator will find that such is the case. And I apprehend, if we were to invest these funds of the Indians in State stocks, and the States should fail to pay the interest, we should hold ourselves bound to make it good to the Indians. Now, if this be the case, if we are bound to guarantee this payment to the Indians, is it not safer to retain the money in our hands? What do we gain by investing it in State stocks? If we are to have this obligation imposed upon us, is it not far better to retain the fund in our own hands, and pay the Indians the interest annually? So far as these long annuities are concerned, if it be desirable to exchange them for shorter annuities, paying them larger sums, that could be done by treaty, whether we pay them directly out of the Treasury, or in the form of State stocks. There is no reason why treaties, bargains, or contracts should not be entered into for that purpose, if it be a desirable object. What I object to is, taking this money and investing it in State stocks in a mode and shape which will make us responsible for the payment of the interest on those stocks.

I object to that for many reasons. One is, that it is a species of obligation which I do not wish to see imposed on this Government. Another is, that it may be the commencement of a very dangerous system. Suppose, whenever we have a surplus in the Treasury, it is proposed to extend the system further, and invest the whole surplus in State stocks, what a dangerous sort of patronage, and to what evils might it not lead? It is better, I think, to oppose these things in the beginning. Now, there is nothing in the treaty stipulation with the Indians, which forces us to invest this money in State stocks, so long as we guarantee and secure to them the payment of the interest, which is all that they are entitled to demand. They have it in truth and in effect in the United States stocks—in a six per cent. United States stock, and this is far better for them than any State stock which we could purchase.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Virginia is not correct in regard to the delinquency of Arkansas as connected with the Smithsonian Institution; but still I believe he is substantially right in this, that they were a portion of the bonds of the State of Arkansas, now under par, for the State is unable to pay the interest, which did constitute an investment by this Government. The State having failed to pay the interest, and the stocks having gone below par, they were, some years ago, by authority of the Government of the United States, sold out for what they would bring.

Now, sir, respecting this policy, in regard to which the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, differ, I have no question that if the Government of the United States, under the authority of a treaty, goes on according to the terms of the treaty, and invests funds due to the Indians, in State stocks, it renders itself liable. If the Government does not invest in safe stocks, it must ultimately pay the amount. It seems to me that there can be no question of that. When the United States have all the power in their own hands, and when they have the management of the Indian funds, there is no defense for a failure on their part to secure to the Indians the whole of their money. Especially is this so when we look at the history of the Indians in connection with our Government. As to the question, then, what shall be done with this matter, I must say, if we are to continue this policy, let it be done in this case as in all others. If not, a distinctive and definite proposition ought to be adopted; and perhaps we might as well get clear of those bonds which we have, and let the United States invest the sum in their own stocks at once. I do not know how that would be. Gentlemen can settle that matter as they please; but it seems to me that we are bound for the money when we make an investment for the Indians.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I do not see any necessity now for our investing any funds in the stocks of the States. There are United States stocks enough in which we can invest; if there is any necessity for investing these sums. It seems to me to be a mere matter of book-keeping. We may as well be indebted to the Indians without investment, and that has to them all the security of a stock of the United States as much as if we were to make an investment; but certainly, while we are paying off our own stocks to reduce our own debt, it seems to me, very unwise and unnecessary to be investing special funds in the stocks of the States. I agree with the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I think the Senator from New York misunderstands the amendment. I did not certainly undertake to recommend investments in stocks of the United States, because these engagements already constitute a stock of the United States. What I propose is, when there is so large a surplus in the Treasury of the United States, to take the money and invest it in stocks of the States, in pursuance of the treaties with the Indians requiring this specific investment to be made "safe and profitable stocks," say the treaties, and this obligation reaches to $3,500,000.

Mr. SEWARD. Then it is only necessary to make a new stock of the United States; that will be a "safe" investment.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. That would be changing the form of the investment, and not extinguishing the debt.

Mr. SEWARD. It would be changing the form of the books certainly. I think that for us to buy up State stocks, and get into the difficulties into which we got once before, would be very unwise.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have another amendment to offer from the committee. It is to insert under the heading "miscellaneous" the following:

For defraying the expenses of continuing the removal and subsistence of the Indians in California to five military reservations, in accordance with the plan submitted by the superintendent of Indian affairs of that State, and approved by the President, the sum of $125,000: Provided, the sub-agents created by this act shall be appointed by the superintendent, subject to confirmation by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed one for each reservation nor five in all. Said reservations to contain not less than five, nor more than twenty-five thousand acres: And the said superintendent is authorized to apply, out of the sum hereby appropriated, not exceeding $25,000 in the extinguishment of conflicting titles and rights to said reserved lands at a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre for a valid and indefeasible title to the lands so purchased: And Provided, the State of California shall cede the necessary jurisdiction in such cases.

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, embracing the expenses of travel of the superintendent and agent, &c., $25,000.

Mr. WELLER. This amendment makes an appropriation of $125,000 for continuing the removal and subsistence of the Indians in California, while the estimate of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for this purpose was $200,000. Really I do not see upon what ground the Committee on Indian Affairs have reduced the amount to $125,000. Why, sir, according to the report of the Commissioner, it appears that one fourth of all the Indians in the United States are in the State of California. There are one hundred thousand Indians there. The superintendent of Indian affairs in California asked for an appropriation of $500,000 to carry out the plan which was adopted by Congress at the preceding session. Upon consultation with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I was satisfied that this estimate was extravagant, and that $200,000 would answer all the purposes of carrying out that plan, and pacifying and providing for the wants of the Indians. I am therefore surprised to find that the Committee on Indian Affairs propose to reduce the sum to $125,000. That, in my judgment, is wholly inadequate. It will not answer the purpose. It will neither enable the superintendent of Indian affairs to remove these Indians, and make the necessary provision for their support during the present year; nor will it protect our people against the outrages committed by them. I therefore move to strike out "$125,000," and insert the amount fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, "$200,000."

Mr. GWIN. Twenty-five thousand dollars is put in the amendment for the purpose of meeting requisitions by the superintendent of Indian affairs, in regard to purchasing claims to the reservations. I would therefore suggest to my colleague that he had better say $225,000, so as to leave $25,000 for the specific object of purchasing claims to the reservations, and $200,000, the amount of the estimate, for removal and subsistence.

Mr. WELLER. My first motion is to strike out "$125,000," and insert "$200,000." Then I suppose I can accomplish the object which I have in view, by a subsequent amendment which I shall submit to the next provision of this amendment of the committee.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have no manner of objection to the amendment of the Senator from California, if it shall meet the favor of the Senate. It is true, as stated by the Senator from California, that the Indian Office did recommend $200,000. It is a recommendation which, as I am informed by the Commissioner, was based on the information that he had in his office, in reference to the condition of the past appropriations. There was an old appropriation of $100,000, for the purpose of preserving peace with the Indians in California. Last winter, it will be remembered, $250,000 were appropriated. We have an account, by the return of the late superintendent, of the expenditure of a large portion of the old appropriations; but, by accident, perhaps, the whole $250,000 is not accounted for. I believe the report of the superintendent of Indian affairs has been in arrears for the last two or three quarters.

This experiment, for experiment it only amounts to thus far, seemed to be the only one which afforded a solution of the problem of Indian civilization and protection in California; but it was working out its results at a cost which caused the committee to hesitate as to the amount of money which they should recommend in its further prosecution, until they could see how the fund which had been heretofore provided by very liberal appropriations, had been disposed of. There was an amount of almost $250,000 unaccounted for. The reason why we cut down the amount from $200,000 to $100,000, resulted entirely from the unwillingness of the committee to embark more than the sum of $100,000 in the prosecution of this experiment, until they should see better evidence as to the manner in which it was working in California.

I have said that I believe the system is an efficient one in California, but it is an expensive one. I have contemplated that it must necessarily be so. But when it has been in operation for only a short period of time, and has worked so expensively, I think the friends of that system ought not to ask that too much shall be embarked in it at the beginning. There is great danger that the system will break down under the weight which it thus accumulates on its shoulders, and fall before it has a fair chance of proving its efficacy. We thought, therefore, that the sum of $100,000 was as much as could profitably be expended there in carrying out this experiment; for it has, as yet, been developed only on a small scale.

At present, out of five reservations which Congress authorized to be selected by the superintendent, only one is in operation; and upon that he has congregated, and gives employment and protection to about twenty-three thousand Indians. It will be recollected that the population of Indians in California has been estimated as high as one hundred thousand souls. If, therefore, the experiment, successful as it may be to the extent of twenty-three thousand Indians, is to be carried out at the same expensive ratio for one hundred thousand, it is easy to see that the coffers of our Treasury, large as they are now, will not be able to stand the successful completion of this experiment in regard to the whole Indian population of California.

We have provided, however, in the amendment, an additional fund of $25,000, for the purpose of enabling the superintendent of Indian affairs in California, to extinguish conflicting private claims to some of the reservations which have been selected, provided the Government of the United States can obtain a good title by purchase; and the State of California shall, by the necessary acts of cession, give the United States Government jurisdiction over these grants. I have stated that, if it be the sense of the Senate that a larger amount is necessary to carry out this experiment, I shall have no hesitation in agreeing to it; but the amount named in the amendment was all that the committee, under the present circumstances of the case, were willing to sanction.

Mr. GWIN. I think the whole form of this proposition should be changed. I propose to strike out the whole of the amendment after the statement of the amount, and increase that amount as recommended by my colleague, and add the words "and to preserve peace with the Indian tribes within that State;" so as to make the amendment read:

"For removal and subsistence of Indians in California, and to preserve peace with the Indian tribes within that State, $200,000."

I move, however, now, if it be in order, to strike out all of the amendment after the statement of the sum.

This policy of Indian reservations is a new one. It has been tried for the first time, I believe, in the State of California; and the people are very much opposed to having these Indians constantly on military reservations within their borders. It is a new policy. There are doubts as to whether there is any power on the part of the General Government to reserve large tracts of land in one of the States of this Confederacy, for the purpose of concentrating Indian tribes within its limits. I think the proper course for us is to make an appropriation, according to the estimate of the Indian Department, of $200,000, for the purpose of continuing the removal and subsistence of the Indians, and preserving peace with the Indian tribes within that State.

Mr. President, the most hostile Indians in our State are those in the northern section; and they have never received any of the benefits of these appropriations. The superintendent of Indian affairs has never yet gone to the extreme northern section of the State, where the Indians are most hostile. It is well known that if you feed them they will not fight. Their hunting-grounds have been taken possession of by the citizens of California, and they are in a state of starvation; but if we make appropriations by which these Indians can, in certain seasons of the year, be supplied with beef, through the superintendent of Indian affairs, we can preserve peace there. For the present, I think we had better merely make an appropriation for their removal and subsistence; because, if some of these Indians are willing to remove outside of the borders of the State, the superintendent ought to have power to remove them; but I do not think the present policy should be pursued further until we ascertain that it is a useful policy. I do not think it is. I think it is very doubtful whether we have a right to build up military reservations of this sort in the heart of any State of this Confederacy. I am sure the people of California have given indications of opposition to it; and I do not think they will ever consent to cede jurisdiction. Therefore, I wish this proposition to be "simply for the removal and subsistence of the Indians in California, and for preserving peace with the Indian tribes."

Mr. WALKER. I was not aware before that the Senators from California had any objection, or made any opposition, to the experiment which has been attempted in California. I think, sir, that there can be no doubt, from the position taken by the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN], that if that State shall object to the acquisition within her borders, by the United States, of these reservations, the Government will not have the power to make them. I understood, however, at the inception of this scheme, that it was advocated by the Senators from California; but I may be mistaken in that.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator will permit me to say that it originated with the superintendent of Indian affairs, and the military commander of the Pacific division—General Hitchcock. It was brought forward by them, presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and by the committee brought before the Senate. I do not believe that my colleague and myself recommended it at first.

Mr. WALKER. I did not say that the Senators recommended it, but I understood at the time that it was done with their acquiescence.

Mr. GWIN. It seemed to me that it might possibly be a good plan to settle the difficulties in that State.

Mr. WALKER. I was about to remark, that I understood it was undertaken with the acquiescence, at all events, of the Senators from California. The only doubt that I had about the matter at the time was, whether, when the citizens of California came to look at it, they would not object to it. I do not wonder that they did object. I regret to find that they are objecting; but it does not surprise me. I regret it, because I believe some such policy as this is the last hope which the country has of properly arranging and settling our Indian relations. But, sir, the Government certainly must feel itself powerless. It cannot go against the consent of a State within its geographical and jurisdictional limits, and there settle down the Indians upon reservations. I think it would require the express assent of the State, given through the supreme power of the State, to enable the Government to do what it has been proposed to do here. In one instance, in Wisconsin, that assent has been given by the Legislature of the State, as regards the location within its borders of the Menominee nation of Indians. But what are we to do? Certainly, with the information before us, we cannot do what the Committee on Indian Affairs recommend, in which recommendation I cordially acquiesced. The committee are evidently thrown off their position, and the Senate ought not, in compliance with their recommendation, to make the appropriation in the form proposed; for when the Senators from that State tell us that there are arising in that State, serious objections to this policy, it certainly is futile for the Government to attempt it.

But it is proposed by one of the Senators from California, [Mr. GWIN], to make this a general appropriation for removal and subsistence, and for maintaining peace with the Indian tribes in that State. These objects are, a part of them, very desirable, and another part absolutely necessary, I presume; but we are without information in regard to them. We have not the necessary information from the proper department of the Government. The appropriate committee of the Senate have not had the subject under consideration at all. They have not had an opportunity to investigate it, much less to consider it on any information derived from the proper department of the Government. It seems to me, from all that I can see now, that we are left without the ability to do anything, until we can have some consultation with the department, and know what it would say under this changed view of the subject.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, the only difficulty that is presented to my mind, is as to the constitutional power of this Government to make these reservations. I have, from the outset, entertained the opinion—and I avowed it at the last session of Congress—that, in my judgment, this was the only practicable way of preserving the Indians of California from destruction; but, it is true, a considerable portion of the population of California have been opposed to these reservations. My views have been honestly entertained and fearlessly expressed. To protect the people, and at the same time preserve the Indians from extermination, has been the leading object with me.

Now, sir, if the superintendent of Indian affairs in that State has not made a return of the expenditure of the appropriation made at the last session of Congress, I apprehend it is the duty of the Department to compel him to do so; and if he has not discharged his duty, I apprehend there is an obligation resting on the Department to remove him, and appoint some person who will give a faithful account of the expenditures. The delay may be unavoidable, as I have no doubt the incumbent will be able to account for all public money which may have been entrusted to him. It is, therefore, no objection to the proposed appropriation to carry out the plan adopted by Congress, to affirm that the superintendent has not made a return to the Department of the moneys which have been entrusted to his care. There may be reasons for the delay easily explained.

But, sir, the power of the Federal Government to go into a State to make these reservations may very well be doubted. The phraseology of the Constitution is that Congress shall have power "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever" over the district ceded for the purpose of locating the seat of Government, "and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same may be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings." If the Federal Government possesses the power at all, it is by virtue of the authority which it has to establish military posts. There is no limitation upon the power of the Federal Government in going into a State and establishing a military post, for the purpose of protecting the inhabitants against the Indians. If it has the power, then, to establish a military post on the frontier, and if it should be necessary to make that post so large as to bring the Indians down upon that reservation, and thus not only protect the Indians, but at the same time protect the people from their incursions, I presume that then it has the power. I do not believe the Federal Government possesses the power to make these reservations, and exercise exclusive jurisdiction over them, without the assent of the State, and hence I desire that the consent of the Legislature should be obtained before they are made. The State, in the exercise of its sovereignty, must determine this question. No State will be willing to concede the right to the Federal Government to go within its limits and exercise exclusive jurisdiction over any portion of its territory.

Sir, last fall, when the superintendent of Indian affairs in California was involved in difficulty in the execution of the act of Congress, he called upon the Representatives from that State for their written opinion upon the subject. I hold in my hand the answer which I wrote him at that time, and which was submitted to the Department of Indian Affairs. In that letter I said:

"I should regret very much to find that you were unable to execute the act of Congress passed on the 3d March last. The plan contemplated by that law is, in my opinion, the only practicable one for preserving the Indians of this State from destruction. Unless they can be gathered together, and placed under military protection, we shall have a bloody war, which will result in the extermination of the race. The Indians should be withdrawn, as much as possible, from the white population, and taught to rely upon their own labor and industry for their support. The supplies which nature has heretofore furnished them will soon be cut off, and an attempt to sustain them otherwise than through their own labor would be impolitic.

"It is well known to you that whilst the plan you are endeavoring to carry out received my warm support, yet I was utterly opposed to making the reservations as large as they are now authorized by law. Whilst we have some of the richest agricultural lands in the Union, the fact cannot be disguised that we have a large body of land in this State which cannot be cultivated. The greater portion of our population are engaged in commerce and mining. They are consumers; and in order to feed them, all our agricultural lands should be put under cultivation. We should not depend upon other States, or foreign countries, for our bread-stuffs. If five reservations are made in this State, and to the extent authorized by law, great injustice will be done to our citizens; withheld, for the use of the Indians, one hundred and twenty-five thousand acres of agricultural land, and a serious blow will be struck at the farming interests of this State. Such a policy would be unwise in every particular; no reservation, in my judgment, should be made containing more than eight thousand acres. In each of them you could readily find a sufficient quantity of land susceptible of cultivation to produce enough to sustain five thousand Indians; and this, I apprehend, will be as many as you can assemble or settle upon any one of your reservations."

I have never believed that it would be possible for the superintendent of Indian affairs to concentrate more than twenty or twenty-five thousand Indians upon these reservations, and they would be generally those who were attached, in the olden time, to the missions, and who have been christianized and civilized, to a certain extent, through the influence of the Catholic church. If the consent of the Legislature can be obtained, I am unwilling to abandon this plan; it may be an expensive one, but in the end it will be found to be an economical one. It will save an immense amount of money that the State would otherwise be compelled to expend in affording protection to her people against the outrages of the Indians. If they can be concentrated in these reservations; if they can be taught to rely upon their own labor for subsistence, as I believe they can, to a very considerable extent, you will have effected more than has been done in any other State of this Confederacy. It is because I am unwilling to have these Indians exterminated, as I know they must be unless this policy can be carried out, that I am anxious to have it continued; at all events, the experiment should be fairly tested. I hold, therefore, that it is simply a question of whether you will fully test this experiment by making the necessary appropriations in order to protect the Indians, as well as to protect our citizens; or whether you will say to all who are so disposed, "you must seek protection for your lives and property in the extermination of these Indians." If we make no provision for them, and hunger compels them to steal for a subsistence, our people must protect themselves. This they will do. Then we shall hear the charge of inhumanity and barbarity preferred against our citizens.

Mr. President, I have no local feeling in regard to this matter at all. I am actuated by no other consideration than a desire to soften the blow which necessity will compel us to inflict upon these Indians. Their extermination in the end is inevitable. It is a mere question of time. They must finally disappear before the onward march of the white man; but in the meanwhile humanity demands that you should, as far as possible, lighten the blow. This plan, therefore, received the sanction of my judgment; and I propose, at the proper time, to offer a proposition to limit the extent of the reservations, in accordance with the suggestions made in the letter to which I have just referred, that they shall not exceed eight thousand acres, instead of twenty-five thousand acres, as now allowed. There is no necessity for making more than two or three reservations, at the outside, in the State of California. The others could be made in Utah and New Mexico. The great body of our agricultural lands are demanded by the wants and necessities of our own people.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, it is perfectly evident that we can find no place for the Indians of California in the Territories referred to, without infringing on the rights of some of the citizens of the United States. In Utah and New Mexico, they have earnestly protested against removing the Indians within the borders of the State of California to those Territories. The idea of removing them to Oregon has met with a similar protest there. We are bound by treaty not to drive those Indians into Mexican territory. Then it is absolutely necessary to make some provision for them within the State of California, unless we infringe on the rights of citizens of the United States within the Territories, which are not represented here. I am not disposed, so far as I am concerned, to urge the removal of these Indians into those Territories, as at present advised.

It seems to me, sir, that while there is a doubt, we have no right to force upon the State of California a policy offensive to the people of that State—the policy of colonizing the Indians in military reservations within the State; and all that we can do for the present is to preserve peace between the Indians and the people of California. That can only be done, as I believe, by giving the Indians such sustenance as is indispensable to preserve life, and without which they will rob the white citizens there, and bring on wars between the whites and the Indians.

I was very much struck with this policy when it was first presented, but the difficulties have increased since. As my colleague has stated, he agreed to the recommendation of the superintendent of Indian affairs. I also did, to a certain extent, and that was as to the necessity of getting reservations in the southern section of the State, where the Indians could not be surrounded by white population. I thought that if the reservations were made in the midst of the white population, it would be impossible to preserve them from depredation. I believe the true policy in regard to the Indians in California, is to sustain them for the present, to have an energetic and active superintendent of Indian affairs, who will have means to sustain these Indians when they are suffering for the want of something to eat, as they must do in the severity of the winter season; and leave the future to develop what is to become of them. I am afraid the prediction of my colleague as to the ultimate fate of the tribes in California, will be fully realized. It is well known that they cannot live near the whites without leading to collision. There may be some point developed hereafter, east of the Sierra Nevada, within the limits of the State, where the Indians may be concentrated. I have read a debate which recently occurred in the Legislature of California, in which one of the representatives in that body stated that he had explored a country east of the Sierra Nevada, where the Indians could be concentrated, and be entirely out of the reach of the white population. I do not know whether this is correct, or not; but, in the mean time, it is our duty to make an appropriation of at least $200,000 for the purpose of preserving peace between the Indians and the whites. I think that is as far as we should go at the present time.

In regard to the reservations, I think we had better have some information as to whether the State of California will relinquish her jurisdiction before we fix, by act of Congress, the policy of continuing them. The Indians who have been concentrated already at one of them (and but one has been established) will not be disturbed. I think, therefore, it would be better to limit the appropriation "for continuing removal and subsistence," and let others be removed to the same locality, where they are out of the reach of the white population; and let it be also "to preserve peace between the whites and the Indians," as I have suggested.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, this seems to me to be a subject of considerable difficulty. I believe there is a good deal in the objections suggested by the Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] in regard to our right to accept the cession of exclusive jurisdiction over these reservations within the limits of a State. That is a question of some doubt. It is manifest, too, that it is impossible that we can carry out this policy, even if we should believe that we had the power, without the consent of California; and it seems doubtful, from what we hear from her Senators, whether that consent will be given. Under these circumstances, therefore, it seems to me that whatever appropriation we make should be given to be used at the discretion of the Department, restricting it to removal, subsistence, and, I would add, settlement, for it may be that some mode of carrying out these reservations may be discovered that will prove acceptable to the State and the Indians. In my State, and not far from my home, there is still an Indian tribe, which holds its lands under charter from the State, governed by trustees. This was the old policy of Virginia. It may be that the State of California, and other States in which Indians are situated, may resort to some expedient of this sort; and when they do so, it may be that we can aid them with these appropriations. At present, as it is entirely doubtful what is best to be done, it seems to me, whatever appropriation we make, should be at the discretion of the Department; and therefore I would not make it too large, especially as I understand there is a large balance in the hands of the Superintendent which has not yet been accounted for. I understand the Department does not know where it is. It has not been accounted for.

Under these circumstances, I should be reluctant to go further than the Committee on Indian Affairs have gone; and the sum they propose I would leave to the discretion of the Department, to be expended for the removal, subsistence, or settlement of the Indians, I would say; because if it should turn out to be practicable to make these reservations, I am inclined to think it is the best, most economical, and humane mode of disposing of the Indians. If it can be done, I am inclined to think it is the best thing that can be done; but in the doubt which surrounds the whole subject, I do not see that anything better can be done than to leave it to the discretion of the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The first question is on the amendment to the amendment, to strike out "125," and insert "200."

Mr. HUNTER. In regard to that, I do not think that I should be willing to increase the sum under present circumstances.

Mr. GWIN. Two hundred thousand dollars is the estimate of the Department. I am willing to leave the expenditure of the money precisely as the Senator from Virginia says—with the Department. The estimate of the superintendent of Indian affairs was $500,000; the Department, in its judgment, thought best to limit it to $300,000. I am entirely willing to leave it to the head of the Department, as the Senator suggests; but certainly, if there are one half of the Indians reported to be there—the superintendent reports one hundred thousand, which is one fourth of the Indians within the whole territory of the United States—it is utterly impossible for the superintendent to do anything beneficial to them with so small a sum. If we leave it entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, it seems to me we should give him the power for which he has estimated.

Mr. WALKER. I regret that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has been compelled to leave the Senate Chamber just at this particular moment; for as he had this matter more particularly under his charge, the other members of the committee are not prepared to speak to it so definitely. I wish, however, to remark that I cannot see the necessity of appropriating the amount recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and for this reason: There is yet unaccounted for, if I remember aright, about $180,000, in the hands of the superintendent of Indian affairs of California. Now, it is proposed by the committee to appropriate $125,000 more, making about $300,000. The question for us to decide is, not how much we shall ultimately appropriate for the protection and subsistence of the large number of Indians in California, but how much we shall appropriate for the coming fiscal year. The present fiscal year will soon expire, and, for aught we know, there may be of the appropriation made for this fiscal year a large balance yet remaining. We are acting in the dark in making these large appropriations. I think the Committee on Indian Affairs have recommended the largest sums that prudence would dictate, until we have some account of what has become of the money already appropriated. I feel confident that the Superintendent will not be able to appropriate and expend profitably for the Government, before the end of the next fiscal year, an amount exceeding that now in his hands, and this sum of $125,000, making $305,000 in all. So that I think, with this view of the subject, the Senate must be impressed with the belief that the appropriation for the fiscal year will be large enough when we have appropriated this sum of $125,000.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President—

Mr. SLIDELL. I would suggest to the Senator from California the propriety of postponing the further consideration of the subject until to-morrow.

Mr. WELLER. I shall not interfere with that suggestion, but I wish simply to remark, in answer to the Senator from Wisconsin, that a large portion of the expenses necessary to carry out the plan, was necessarily incurred in the first year. They had to purchase stock—

Mr. WALKER. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. WELLER. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER. I am not making any opposition at all to this policy. For my own part, as I remarked before, I think it is the last hope the Government has of reconciling its relations with the Indians; and I should regret most exceedingly to see it broken up by the action of California. It is only a question of prudence as to the amount which we shall appropriate for the fiscal year.

Mr. WELLER. Entertaining the opinions which I have expressed in regard to the practicability of this plan, and its being the only one which, in my opinion, will preserve these Indians from extermination, I am anxious that the responsibility should be thrown upon the Legislature of California. If they are disposed to break down what I conceive to be the only practicable way of preserving the Indians; if they prefer to throw them back dependent on the mere mercy of the settlers there, let them say so, and I shall abandon it, of course, at once. I have heretofore defended it as the only practicable way. If those who are the immediate representatives of the people of the State of California do not see proper to give the consent of that State to the reservations, as a matter of course the Government will be saved the trouble of making any future appropriations, and the time will very speedily come when there will be no Indians there. I propose, therefore, that, by the unanimous consent of the Senate, this amendment be withdrawn for the present, to be renewed hereafter when the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs may be here.

Mr. HUNTER. That is not necessary. Let the Senator move to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. WELLER. I move to postpone its further consideration until one o'clock to-morrow. The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 1, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICKER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 5th instant, estimates, prepared from the muster-rolls and vouchers filed in the War Department, principally by the Delegate in Congress from the Territory of Oregon, showing the amount of claims for services of volunteers, and for supplies furnished for their use in suppressing Indian hostilities in the Rogue River Valley, in that Territory.

On motion, by Mr. HOUSTON, the communication was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled, the following bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act for the relief of Grafton Baker; and

A joint resolution authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the expenses of the commissioners appointed by the Territorial Assembly of Oregon to prepare a code of laws; and also, to adjust the expenses of collecting and printing certain laws and archives of the Territory of Oregon.

ROADS IN NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER. The first business before the House, under the special order, is the question upon the passage of the bill for the construction of certain roads in the Territory of New Mexico, which was ordered to be, and which was read the third time; and the question being upon its passage, the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a privileged question. I understand from the Delegate from Oregon [Mr. LANE] that the bill to which the estimates laid before the House this morning refers, has been already referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I therefore propose to reconsider the vote by which the estimates were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, so that they may be sent to the same committee to which the bill was referred.

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous wish of the House that the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] be followed in reference to this bill? If not objected to, that order will be made without the formality of going through a reconsideration.

PROTECTION ON THE NEW JERSEY COAST.

Mr. SKELTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill for the better protection of life and property on the New Jersey coast from shipwreck. The recent disasters upon our coast fully demonstrate the necessity of action upon this subject on the part of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SKELTON] took occasion, when I sought to introduce a similar proposition, to make objection.

Mr. SKELTON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] is mistaken.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have sought an opportunity to repay the gentleman for some time, and I now repay him.

Mr. SKELTON. I move a suspension of the rules, for the purpose of enabling me to introduce the resolution indicated by me.

The SPEAKER. Under a suspension of the rules, this day was set apart as a special order for the consideration of territorial business; and it is not in order to move to suspend the rules, unless the object be to reconsider the steps taken by the House with regard to the special order.

Mr. COBB. Is it not in order to have the committees called upon for reports?

The SPEAKER. If there be no further territorial business, and the House are not disposed to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the Chair would state that it would be in order to call upon committees for reports.

THE ATMOSPHERIC TELEGRAPH.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I am intrusted with the memorial of a citizen of the State which I in part represent—James S. Richardson—the inventor of the atmospheric telegraph, who asks the aid of the Government to enable him to make an experimental demonstration of the efficacy of that machine for the instantaneous transmission of letters, packages, and mails. As there seems to be no one standing committee of the House to which this subject of inquiry is more appropriate than another, I ask the unanimous consent of the House for the introduction of the following resolution, making a reference of the matter to a select committee:

Resolved, That the memorial of James S. Richardson, the inventor of the atmospheric telegraph, asking aid of the Government for the purpose of testing, on an extensive scale, the efficacy of the invention for the rapid transmission of packages, letters, mails, &c., be referred to a select committee.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to trouble the House with the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It will then be received and referred under the rule.

Mr. BANKS. But the gentleman from Tennessee will see that this is a subject which is not more appropriate to any one standing committee of the House than to any other.

Mr. JONES. I do not think it appropriate to any committee. I do not think that this House has anything to do with inventions. This Government was not organized for the purpose of making experiments with new inventions.

The SPEAKER. There being objection, the introduction of the resolution is not in order.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of taking up the special order?

The SPEAKER. That is the business specially in order.

Mr. FARLEY. Then I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FARLEY] will withdraw his motion, to allow me to call for the special order.

Mr. FARLEY. I withdraw my motion for that purpose.

ROADS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now demand the special order, which is, I believe, the vote upon the passage of a bill for the construction of roads in the Territory of New Mexico.

The bill was accordingly read by its title, as follows:

"Bill for the construction of certain roads in the Territory of New Mexico."

Mr. HAMILTON. Were not the yeas and nays ordered on the passage of this bill?

The SPEAKER. Such is the case. On the passage of this bill the yeas and nays were ordered.

The bill was then read, in extenso, by the Clerk. Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Speaker, have we gone so far in the consideration of this bill as to order the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAVEN. I recollect having the impression on my mind that I intended to move to strike out the second appropriation of $12,000—that is, as much of the bill as authorizes the sinking of wells along the road.

The SPEAKER. On the 7th day of March last this bill was under consideration; and then it was ordered to be read, and was read a third time; and the yeas and nays were ordered on its passage, when the House adjourned.

Mr. HAVEN. I certainly had it on my mind that I intended to move to strike out the latter portion of the second clause, allowing the sinking of wells.

Mr. PHILLIPS. When I had occasion to trespass on the House on this subject, when the bill came before the House, I read a letter from Mr. Sumner, who is intrusted with this bureau, showing the propriety of this appropriation.

Mr. HAVEN. I recollect the fact, but that does not meet the point at which I was aiming. I thought it unauthorized to dig wells along the line of these roads.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The fact was then stated to the House, that the roads in this country pass over deserts, and wells are as necessary there as the roads themselves, because such roads could not be used unless there be artificial means of supplying water.

Mr. HAVEN. I think we might as well authorize public houses to be built.

The question was then taken; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 59; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Ball, Banks, Benson, Breckinridge, Campbell, Carpenter, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Curtis, Cutting, Dickinson, Disney, Dunbar, Eddy, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Farley, Fenton, Flager, Franklin, Green, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Henn, Hiester, Howe, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, McDougall, Mace, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Smith Mill, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, John Perkins, Phillips, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Sabin, Sapp, Seymour, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Alexander H. Stephens, Horst L. Stevens, Stratton, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, and Hendrick B. Wright—73.

NAYS.—Messrs. David J. Bailey, Belcher, Boyce, Brooks, Caskie, Churchwell, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dowdell, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Giddings, Goode, Grow, Hamilton, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McNair, Matteson, Maurice, Milson, Murray, Bishop Perkins, Powell, Pratt, Ready, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Shaw, Skelton, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Vail, Vansant, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—59.

So the bill was passed.

The title of the bill was then read a third time: An act for the construction of certain roads in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to amend the title by inserting the word "military" before the word "roads."

Mr. HAVEN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "and wells" after the word "roads," so that it shall read "An act for the construction of certain military roads and wells in the Territory of New Mexico."

The question was then put upon the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS called for the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a point of order. Is it in order to call for the yeas and nays after the decision of the Chair has been announced upon the vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair had not announced the decision, and the yeas and nays were demanded in time.

Mr. PHELPS. I hope the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] will withdraw his call for the yeas and nays, and let us ascertain the result by a simple division.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I withdraw the demand, and ask for a division.

The question was again put; and, on a division, sixty-three rose in the affirmative.

Mr. ORR. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and CHURCHWELL, were appointed.

The question was again put; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 49.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the title, as amended; and it was agreed to.

Mr. PECKHAM. I would inquire of the Chair whether a resolution calling for information in regard to Territories is now in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it would not be in order. It would not be in order under the special order of the House.

ROGUE RIVER INDIAN WAR.

Mr. BISSELL, from the Committee on Military

Affairs, reported a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union:

A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the expenses of the Rogue River Indian war.

MILITARY ROAD IN OREGON.

Mr. BISSELL, from the same committee, reported back without amendment, House bill (No. 119) "to provide for the continuation of the military road from Myrtle creek to Scottsburg, in Oregon Territory;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

RIGHTS OF NEUTRALS.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House—I know that it cannot be done except by unanimous consent—to offer resolutions from the Committee on Foreign Affairs requesting information only.

The SPEAKER. They will be read for information.

The resolutions were read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House, as far as, in his opinion, it may not be incompatible with the public interest, copies of all correspondence which has passed between this Government and foreign Governments on the subject, accorded by declaration or otherwise, to neutrals, and the rights claimed by belligerents in the war pending between certain European Powers.

Resolved, That the President be also requested to communicate to this House, as far as, in his opinion, may not be incompatible with the public interest, copies of such instructions as have been furnished by the Department of State to our representatives abroad, in relation to the Island of Cuba, as well as all such dispatches as have been received from said representatives by the Department of State.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question will be on the adoption of the resolutions.

There was no objection.

The question was then taken; and the resolutions were adopted.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS AGAIN.

Mr. LETCHER. I would inquire whether the bills which have been reported this morning by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. BISSELL] are to be acted on this week, in the disposition of territorial business?

Mr. BISSELL. I can only say to the gentleman that such is the hope of the committee.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I hope that the bills will be printed. Nobody here knows anything about them except the gentleman and the members of the Military Committee.

Mr. BISSELL. I will say to the gentleman that there is no sort of objection on the part of the committee to having them printed. They are short bills, and the time during which they are to be acted on is not long. Therefore we thought that it would not, perhaps, be necessary to have them printed.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, the usual order will be made for the printing of the bills referred to.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. FARLEY. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of territorial business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Maine the propriety of referring a single territorial bill, which is upon the Speaker's table, before his motion is acted on.

Mr. FARLEY. I will withdraw it until that bill is referred.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] were adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion; and it was agreed to.

A bill of the following title was then taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union:

An act to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. FARLEY. I now renew my motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Maine will withdraw that motion till the committees have an opportunity to report all the territorial bills which are ready, that we may get them upon the Calendar.

Mr. FARLEY. I will withdraw it, if there are any more territorial bills to be reported.

Mr. BISSELL. I desire to report two more bills of a territorial character from the Committee on Military Affairs; and ask that they may take the same direction as those which I reported just now.

Mr. B., from the Committee on Military Affairs, then reported bills of the following titles; which were read a first and second time by their respective titles, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union:

A bill to provide for the construction of a military road in the Territory of Utah; and

A bill to refund to the Territory of Utah the expenses incurred in suppressing Indian hostilities.

Mr. FARLEY. I now renew my motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The bill first in order for consideration is House bill No. 164, "making further appropriations for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department."

The bill was then read through by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is reported by the committee to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That the following sums of money be, and they are hereby, appropriated for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, to wit:

For the continuation of the road from Point Douglas, on the Mississippi river, to the mouth of the St. Louis river, of Lake Superior, $20,000.

For the continuation of the road from Point Douglas to Fort Gaines, now Fort Ripley, $10,000.

For the continuation of the road from the mouth of Swan river to the Winnebago agency, $5,000.

For the continuation of the road from Wabashaw to Mendota $15,000.

The continuation of the construction of said roads to be made under the direction of the Secretary of War, pursuant to contracts to be made by him, or under his direction: Provided, That so much of any former acts as require the first-mentioned road to terminate at the falls or rapids of said St. Louis river, are hereby repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. In the month of March last we had under consideration, in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, territorial business. At that time a question of order was raised as to what latitude of discussion could be allowed when a special order was under consideration. The present occupant of the Chair then ruled that, under the order of the House, he would be compelled to restrict debate to the bill under consideration. In that decision the committee then acquiesced. The Chair feels it his duty to make this statement now in advance of any discussion, so that gentlemen of the committee may be aware of the decision of the Chair, which was sustained on a former occasion.

Mr. FARLEY. With the indulgence of the committee, I will endeavor to explain the reasons which induced the Committee on Territories to report this bill back to the House with a recommendation that it do pass. There are four roads named in the bill, which are all of a military character, necessary for the convenience of the Government in the transportation of troops and military stores, and necessary also for the protection of settlers in that section of the country, which, it is well known to the committee, is quite new.

The bill now under consideration proposes to make an appropriation for the continuation of the construction of these roads. The first appropriation made by Congress for their construction was in July, 1850; and a further appropriation for the same purpose was also made in January, 1853. The appropriation made in July, 1850, amounted in the aggregate to the sum of $35,000; and the appropriation of January, 1853, amounted in the aggregate to the sum of $40,000. It is now apparent, as exhibited by the estimates coming from the Topographical Bureau, under the direction of the Secretary of War, that further appropriations are necessary, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $50,000. If gentlemen will turn to the third volume of the documents accompanying the President's message, they will find on pages four and five that the sums named in the bill are there recommended to be appropriated by this Congress. And in a letter addressed to the Delegate from Minnesota, by the Colonel of the Bureau of Topographical Engineers, the opinion is expressed that these sums named in the bill are the sums which can be judiciously expended during the present year. The committee will find, also, on pages twenty-eight and twenty-nine of the same document, a letter from J. H. Simpson, of the Corps of Civil Engineers, dated St. Paul, September 17, 1853, stating the progress that has been made in the construction of these roads.

In accordance with the report of the bureau, a bill has been drawn, and the sums recommended in that report are embraced in the bill; so that, in addition to the sums which have been already appropriated, including the sums which, by this bill, are proposed to be appropriated, the whole expenditure thus far will amount to $125,000. The estimates for the building of these four roads amount in the aggregate to the sum of $189,114. As I before said, the sums which have been already expended, with those which it is now proposed to appropriate, will amount to $125,000. And this will leave the sum of $64,000 to be appropriated hereafter, which amount will—as I understand, from the best information I can obtain—complete the roads.

And I would now call the attention of the committee to the fact, that this is not a new project, but is merely a proposition to continue the construction of roads that have been already commenced. There are one or two amendments proposed by the committee to which I also wish to call the attention of members. The first of these amendments is in relation to the termination of the road which commences at Point Douglas, and leads to the falls or rapids of the St. Louis river of Lake Superior. The former appropriations required the road to terminate at the falls or rapids of the St. Louis river; but it is now proposed to change the road, and instead of having its termination at that point, to have its termination at the mouth of said river, at its connection with Lake Superior.

The reasons of this change, are these: If the road terminated at the falls or rapids of the St. Louis river, it would not terminate at good navigation, and would involve the necessity of transportation around the falls of the St. Louis river. If, on the contrary, the terminus is at Lake Superior, then the road terminates at good navigation, and saves the cost and trouble of transportation around the falls, and will be of great convenience to that section of the country, which is rapidly becoming settled. There is another fact in favor of this change of termination. It is this: that the lands in the neighborhood of Lake Superior, where it is proposed, by the amendment, to have the road terminate, have been reserved by the President of the United States for military purposes. This is the most important amendment that has been proposed, and it meets, as I understand, with the approbation of the settlers in that section of the country, and with the approbation of the officers of the Government here, who have given the matter investigation and consideration. I will state that all of these roads are of a military character. The one from Point Douglas to Fort Gaines is necessary for the convenience of the Government, because it terminates near to the Chippewa agency. The one from the mouth of the Swan river terminates at an important point near the Winnebago agency. The road from Wabashaw to Mendota is also a military road, which will be of great convenience to the Government.

I will detain this committee but for a few moments longer, principally for the purpose of reading a short letter from the civil engineer at Minnesota, Mr. Emerson, which he addressed to the Delegate from that Territory, explanatory of the reasons for the change of location of the first named road. He says:

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA, December 28, 1853.

SIR: Having been engaged for the last three years upon the survey of Government roads in this Territory as a civil engineer, I wish, respectfully, to recommend to you a change in the terminus of the Point Douglas and St. Louis river road.

This road is now surveyed, and located on the St. Louis river, above navigation on Lake Superior, and cannot be approached from the lake without going into the Indian country.

There is no advantage whatever to be derived from its present location on this river; whereas, if it should be changed, so as to run to the mouth of the St. Louis river, it would terminate at a good harbor on that lake, and be of great advantage to the many settlers who will soon be upon the borders of this lake.

I have no doubt but what the expense of making the road would be much less on the proposed route than as now located.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. L. EMERSON, Civil Engineer.

Hon. H. M. Rice, M. C.

I do not know that there are any other facts, having a bearing upon this matter, which need be stated; and I will simply say, in conclusion, that, from the investigation which I have given to the subject, I have become perfectly satisfied of the correctness of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the gentleman will retain the floor for a few moments, until I can propound to him a question or two for information. I notice, in this bill, that all these appropriations are for the continuation of the roads, and not one for the completion of a single one of them. The information I desire is, what these roads are to cost? How much more, in addition to the appropriations heretofore made, and to the proposed one, will be required, in order to complete them?

Mr. FARLEY. I stated in my remarks, which I presume were not heard by the gentleman from Virginia, that for the completion of these roads the sum of $64,000 will be necessary.

Mr. LETCHER. In addition to the present?

Mr. FARLEY. In addition. The estimate of the whole cost of these roads is $189,000.

Mr. LETCHER. That will complete all?

Mr. FARLEY. It will. If this appropriation is made next year, or at some future time, it will be necessary to appropriate some $64,000 more.

The question then recurring upon agreeing with the amendment reported by the committee, it was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered to the bill, it was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

INDIAN AGENTS.

The next business in order upon the Calendar, was House bill (No. 292) authorizing the appointment of an additional number of Indian agents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. ORR. I would remark to the Chair that it is hardly necessary to report the bill, for I observe in the proceedings of the Senate of Thursday or Friday, that two sections were introduced into the general Indian appropriation bill, making provision for the appointment of the different Indian agents, whose appointment is provided for in this bill. The sections to which I have referred have been adopted in the Senate. The bill will come back to this House, and they will have an opportunity of passing upon the subject when it is returned. I suggest the propriety of laying aside this bill. I would move to lay it upon the table, if there were any table in the Committee of the Whole. I see no objection to its being passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House, where it can be disposed of.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The next bill coming up in order, was the bill to provide for the extinguishment of the title of the Chippewa Indians to the lands owned and claimed by them in the Territory of Minnesota and State of Wisconsin, and for their domestication and civilization.

The bill was then read entire.

Mr. ORR. I suppose it is proper that I should move an amendment. I desire to make a few remarks in explanation of the bill, and for the purpose of giving me an opportunity, I move pro forma to strike out the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Indian Affairs have reported this bill, and recommended unanimously its passage. It proposes to introduce a new feature in our Indian relations. It is not, however, without precedent that the legislative department of the Government should indicate to the Executive the manner and terms upon which treaties with the Indian tribes should be negotiated. We have several precedents for it.

The propositions contained in this bill have been suggested by many persons who reside within the limits of the Territory of Minnesota; and will, I am informed, if the bill passes, meet the sanction of the white settlers in the immediate vicinity of the Indians. It proposes that the President shall enter into negotiations with the Chippewa Indians, for the purpose of extinguishing their title to the lands which they own in the Territory of Minnesota, and to a small portion in the State of Wisconsin.

It further proposes, that when their title shall have been extinguished, to make a grant of eighty acres of land to each Indian who is the head of a family as a homestead. The object is to interest the Indians in the actual cultivation of the soil. We are informed that those who reside in the vicinity of Lake Superior have been found to be valuable laborers. Their labor has been already turned into very useful channels, in digging copper ore, and in discharging the duty of menials. The committee desire that they shall be allowed to remain on their own lands, and cultivate the same; and we are informed that such is the desire of the people of Minnesota.

The bill directs the President to allow each head of a family the reservation of eighty acres; and for the purpose of guarding against any fraud which may be attempted to be practised, now or hereafter, on the Indians by the whites, the bill makes this reserved land inalienable in the hands of the Indians until Congress shall otherwise direct.

It also contains a further stipulation, that the annuities which are proposed to be paid these Indians, for their title to the remainder of their lands, shall be paid either in money; or, if, in the discretion of the President, it will be more conducive to their interest, in goods, provisions, or means of subsistence.

The President is also authorized to expend a portion of the money which may be due these Indians, to have their lands cleared, fenced, and cabins erected for their comfort and convenience.

These are the general provisions of the bill. My own impression is, that if the system which is contemplated be carried out, it will be found to work well. I think that we have had experience enough that the policy which we have heretofore pursued of extinguishing the title to the Indian lands, removing them further West, and paying them large money annuities, has been demonstrated by experiment to be an utter failure. I believe that it has been the most fruitful of all other causes of the retrograde movements of these people in the scale of civilization. They have made no progress on that account. You furnish them with money, and that money is expended in a week or two, or, at most, a month after they have received it. Then, for the balance of the year, they live scantily, frequently suffering want and starvation. Now, if the President exercises a sound discretion when these treaties shall have been executed, if he appoints a judicious agent, one who will look to the interests of the Indians, we shall see the whole of the expenditures made for them really inuring to their benefit. We shall see that it will not find its way into the hands of traders and speculators.

The territory in which it is proposed to extinguish this Indian title is a very extensive and valuable one. It embraces a very large proportion of the copper region situated in the Territory of Minnesota. It now belongs to the Indians. The opening of the canal around the falls of the Sault St. Mary is bringing all that section of country into notice. It is giving it all the facilities of market; and hundreds and thousands of persons, in a short time, will be operating in the mines there. Therefore, it is desirable that the treaty shall be executed at the earliest day, and executed so that the Indians may be allowed to remain, and their labor converted to useful purposes by the whites. It is desirable that it shall be made in such a way that whatever payments be made to the Indians shall enure to their benefit, and not that of speculators.

I have thus explained very briefly and concisely the provisions of the bill, and I trust that it may be adopted by the committee.

Mr. HENN. I wish to ask the gentleman from South Carolina, what is the area of the country which it is proposed to purchase in this way?

Mr. ORR. Well, sir, I am not prepared to answer that question specifically. It is, perhaps, fifty miles square, though I do not know but that it is more than that. The Delegate from the Territory of Minnesota [Mr. RICE] is better informed upon that point than I am.

Mr. RICE. It embraces about twenty-five millions of acres.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill through by paragraphs for amendment. When the second clause of the first section was read as follows:

Second. The annuities to which said Indian are entitled under existing treaties, together with such as may be allowed them for the cession or cessions under the provisions of this act, shall be equally distributed and paid them at their villages, or settlements within the limits of the ceded territory; but the President shall be invested with power to cause said annuities to be commuted from time to time for such articles of goods, provisions, stock, cattle, implements of agriculture, the clearing and fencing of land, and the erection of buildings and other improvements, as in his discretion will conduce most to promote their comfort, civilization, and permanent welfare.

Mr. HOUSTON said: I should like to know of the gentleman from South Carolina, if that section is intended to be a section of law to control the President, or a mere suggestion to him in making a treaty? It proposes that the President shall dispose of the annuities now due to the Indians by treaty stipulation, in a particular way. Now, I understand that all the annuities due to the Indians are due under treaty stipulations, and are to be paid according to the terms of the treaties. We cannot pass a law, I apprehend, by which we will change the manner of paying those annuities; and if that is the proposition contained in this bill, I think it is objectionable.

Mr. ORR. The bill is merely advisory to the President of the United States. As a matter of course, we could not, if we were to attempt it, control the President and Senate as to how they should negotiate and ratify treaties. It is merely advisory, but it is necessary that you should put it in the shape of law, so that the stipulations which the President may propose to make with the Indians shall be valid and binding on this Government, and the Indian not deceived by promises which Congress may fail to redeem.

Now, with reference to the annuities. If the gentleman objects to paying the annuities now due to the Indians in a different manner from that contemplated by existing treaties, he can amend this section of the bill by adding a proviso making it applicable to no annuities except those which these Chippewa Indians may receive by virtue of the treaty which we expect now to make with them.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have not a copy of the bill before me, and I cannot, therefore, propose an amendment at this moment. I am perfectly willing that the President of the United States shall, with the consent of the Indians, change the existing treaties, and improve the mode of payment to the Indians. I believe that the present mode is a bad one; I believe that it results badly for the Government, and injuriously to the Indian tribes. I believe that large amounts of the money paid out, and which are supposed to be applied for the benefit of the Indians, go into the pockets of other people for their personal advantage, and to the prejudice of the interest of the Indians. If therefore the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] and the Committee on Indian Affairs, shall propose any improvement in the mode of paying annuities to the Indians, all I desire is that they shall accomplish that purpose by proper approaches, and by that kind of treaty stipulation which shall bind the Indians. If I understand the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina correctly, that the treaty will bind the Government without any law, because it is the supreme law of the land when it is adopted and ratified, then I certainly differ with him.

Mr. ORR. I will suggest an amendment to come in the twenty-first line, which will meet the views of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] and which is to insert the words, "with the consent of said Indians." If the amendment be adopted, then the payment of annuities cannot be changed without the consent of the Indians themselves.

Mr. LETCHER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina does not meet my objection to this section. The gentleman says, that the object of this bill is to prevent the Indians from being imposed upon and swindled, and that, under present management, their money is distributed to those who have imposed upon them, and who have rendered little or no equivalent for the claims they hold against them.

I think the latter part of this section, when carefully examined, opens the door just as widely to fraud upon the Indians as under the present system. What is it?

"The President shall be invested with power to cause said annuities to be commuted from time to time for such articles of goods, provisions, stock, cattle, implements of agriculture, the clearing and fencing of land, and the erection of buildings and other improvements, as in his discretion will conduce most to promote their comfort, civilization, and permanent welfare."

If the President of the United States could superintend this commutation in person, I imagine that no imposition would be practiced upon the Indians. But if it is to be intrusted, as it is now intrusted, to Indian agents of the Government, many of whom, if report does them no injustice, are interested in securing their money, there is exactly the same chance for imposition on their part towards the Indians, as there is under the present arrangement.

Mr. ORR. If my friend will allow me, I do not think that the difficulty would be so great as he apprehends. In the first place, I do not know that we have occasion to complain of our agents having acted dishonestly in paying these Indians. The reason why these payments have not proved serviceable to the Indians is, that as soon as the money reached their hands, and until within the last three years, before it reached their hands, it was seized upon by the traders located within the limits of their country; and if it was not for prior contracted debts, it was for goods furnished at exorbitant prices, and for spirituous liquors furnished to the Indians. If, therefore, the amendment I have suggested be adopted, I cannot see how it will work any injury; for the Indians, in one contingency, will be greatly benefited, because the President will be invested with power to cause said annuities to be commuted for such articles of goods, provisions, stock, cattle, implements of agriculture, as their necessities may require. When these payments are made, why, as a matter of course, the Indians will get the benefit of them. I think myself, that it will be much better to make these payments in goods and implements of agriculture, than in money annuities.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire only to make a suggestion. I have had a little experience in reference to paying Indians their annuities in goods. I am in favor of the general objects of this bill. I think that the first provision of this bill is a very proper one, and that it is calculated to bring the influences of civilization over the Indians more than anything that has been done by the Government of the United States since I have known anything of their history or of their intercourse with the Indians. But, Mr. Chairman, this second provision does not meet with my approbation. I have no objection to the first part of the provision, with the amendments suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] down to the word "but," in the twenty-fourth line. But I would strike out the rest of the section, because all that I have seen, impels me to the opinion and the belief that it would open the door to fraud and bad dealing on the part of the agents. For the agents themselves would become interested in the implements and provisions to be furnished to the Indians, and would either make bargains beforehand, or compel them to take such articles as they wished. With the exception of this provision, I consider the bill very valuable, and I therefore now move to strike out the latter part of the second provision, which I have designated.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] will be adopted; and in reply to my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] I take occasion to say that I have heard of some of these agents who do take advantage of the Indians under the present system. They are all more or less interested in all of these grog-shops, and other establishments introduced into the Indian country; and they carry away some share of the plunder where there is so much to be distributed. It seems to me that the very moment you pass this law, including the provision proposed to be stricken out, these agents will become interested in the agricultural implements, goods, merchandise, and everything of that sort to be furnished to the Indians; and they will thus reap the same sort of profit which they are reaping now from the distribution of Indian annuities. I hope, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the suggestion of my friend from New York will be adopted, and that the latter half of this second section will be stricken out.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not quite certain myself, Mr. Chairman, but that the latter branch of the second section ought to be retained, with some modifications. I believe that it is the better plan of the two, that the Government, instead of making cash payments, should furnish to the Indians such goods and implements as they require to improve their condition. I am well convinced, from the observations that have been made on this floor on occasions like this, that the present mode of paying Indians for our indebtedness to them is not good, and does ordinarily result very little to their advancement and for their benefit. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would rather, as a general rule, agree in our treaties to pay the Indians so much of the articles that are necessary to their comfort and subsistence, either in goods, or food, or implements of husbandry, than pay them in cash. I would carry out the idea of my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] so as to let the annuity to be paid them, whether of $100,000 or $50,000, or any other sum, as stipulated in the treaty, be paid in such articles as the Indians may need.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I object to giving the President, or to the Indian agents, or superintendent, such power as is proposed to be given by this proposition. But, if the gentleman from South Carolina will so modify the second branch of that provision, that the whole thing shall be changed by treaty with the Indians, so that the annuities shall be paid in goods, such as the Indians may need, why then I should have no objection; because the goods then might be purchased by the Government in large quantities, and under the direct eye of the Government or some of its officers. I believe that the appropriate control of this subject is now vested in the Interior Department. If this be true, when you propose to purchase these large quantities of goods and implements, to discharge the obligations growing out of our treaties with the Indian tribes, the Secretary of that Department will exercise such a supervision over the matter as will guard against these frauds. When the money is once invested in the goods, then there is no other opportunity of committing fraud. The frauds which are committed now take place at the time of the payment of the money. The traders and the grog-shop keepers are upon the ground, watching the Indians. As soon as the Indians get a handful of money under the treaty stipulations, these traders and shop keepers seize upon it; and before the poor native can relieve himself of them, he is relieved of his money.

If the Government invest the money, which it is obligated to pay, in goods which the Indians really need, and must have, then you dispense with the necessity of having a great number of traders in the Indian country, and, at the same time, put it out of the power of the traders to commit frauds upon the Indians.

The only fraud indicated by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] is perpetrated in the purchase of goods. Whenever you guard that point we are safe, and the Indians will get what they ought to have. And, certainly, in the purchase of a large stock of goods in this way, under the supervision of the Indian Bureau, and of the Secretary of the Interior, it could be done safely. It would free us from those difficulties which have heretofore surrounded our Indian policy; it would enable us to get along more easily, more to our satisfaction, and certainly with more profit to the Indians themselves, than under the present system.

Mr. LETCHER. What will you do with those improvements mentioned in the bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. That part of the bill, in my opinion, ought to be modified. I would strike out the provision for the clearing and fencing of lands, the erection of buildings, and other improvements, and pay the Indians their annuities in goods, such as they need, and let them make their own improvement upon the land, by their own labor.

Mr. DUNHAM. I concur fully in the views just expressed by the gentleman from Alabama. I regard this provision of the bill which is proposed to be stricken out as one of the most important provisions of it. Some little attention to this subject has convinced me that more frauds are perpetrated upon the Indians, under the system of paying to them their annuities in cash, when gathered together at a specified place and time, than in any other way. There is not a single Indian trader, in the whole western country, who does not know the exact moment when the payment from the Government is to be made to these Indian tribes. They know the agent who is to pay, and when and where he is to pay, and they follow him, as sharks are said to follow a vessel upon which is sickness and death, for a like purpose, that of seizing their prey.

If you make the payment in money to the Indians, the traders are on hand with their trinkets, toys, spirituous liquors, and other things useless, or worse than useless, to exchange with them for their money as soon as it is paid.

I submit to any member in this House whether this exchange can be so readily made when the articles which the Indians receive are cumbersome in their character, and of such a kind as would be beneficial to the Indians in the cultivation of their grounds? The traders have no use for such articles. If we pay them in plows, wagons, and articles of that kind, it is evident the traders will not bargain for them, for they have no use for them, and consequently do not want them. Besides, the Indians would better understand and appreciate the real value of such articles, and would not be so readily tempted to part with them as with money, the value of which they cannot so readily appreciate.

I regard this bill as one of the most important which has ever been brought into this House for the benefit of the Indian tribes. We have tried the present system of managing our Indian affairs long enough to satisfy every man who has given the least attention to it that it is an absolute failure, and that these tribes are gradually, but certainly, vanishing away from the face of the earth. None, no, not one, will soon be left, if it is still followed, to tell the tale of their glories or their wrongs.

I object to this whole system of annuities; and I should be glad to see all our treaties with the Indians hereafter negotiated upon some other basis than the payment of annuities. I should also be glad if some arrangement could be made by which all now payable should be extinguished. I would do away with them entirely. These annuities, as a general thing, are injurious to them; and money annuities are especially so. Instead of advancing their civilization, they generally operate to retard it; and I will give you my reasons for this opinion.

You make a treaty with a tribe of Indians, and pay them in annuities—perhaps half or quarter enough for their support—just enough to induce them to withhold their exertions from industrial pursuits, yet scarcely enough to keep them from starvation; a mere bonus for their degradation, instead of a stimulus to exertion to improvement and civilization. I repeat, I should be glad if we could do away with these annuities altogether, and pay them whatever we do pay them for their lands in the shape of farming utensils, in the shape of instruction, and in any other way that will have the effect of improving and elevating them.

The present system has been an enormous tax upon the Treasury, year after year, and with no resulting good, and much that has been demoralizing and degrading to Indians and whites. Civilization and Christianization has been retarded, not advanced.

There is another principle in the bill which I regard as of great importance in the relations we are hereafter to sustain with this interesting people—that of giving each a distinct interest in his property. I regard the adoption of this principle as the sheet anchor of his salvation, if there is to be any salvation for him. It must be obvious to every one, that we now offer no inducement for him to exert himself for his improvement and support. The idle, the lazy, the drunken and vicious fare just as well as the industrious one. The prudent, the sober and worthy, the economical, is in just as much danger of starvation as the reckless and prodigal. So long as property is held in common, and individual interests are not recognized among them, there is no stimulus for his exertions; there is nothing to induce him to exert himself, either to acquire property, or to retain what he has acquired, or what the Government has paid him. All things are in common among them, and so long as they remain so, there is nothing to encourage, nothing to stimulate, nothing to reward; no hope for the future. There is no citizenship held out to them by the Government, no matter how loyal, how worthy, or how civilized and competent for self-government. Always treat a child as a child, and he will never become a man; always treat a savage as a savage, and he can never become a civilized man and a Christian; and so long as the present system is continued, he will continue lazy, and reckless, and vicious, as they always have been, and as their fathers and grandfathers were before them.

But this bill will, in my judgment, open up a new era in the history of these people. I believe it will open up the bright star of their salvation, and that some portion of this race, now rapidly passing away, may go down to posterity fit mementoes of the mighty, and, in many respects, noble race, who once peopled this vast continent from ocean to ocean.

I trust this bill, amended as has been indicated by the gentleman from South Carolina, will be adopted by the House; with that single exception, it meets my approval in toto. I think it will prove grateful to the Indians themselves; and I believe that nothing which has been done by this or any Congress, will prove of greater honor and credit to the country, than the passage of this very bill.

Mr. ORR. I do not desire to weary the committee, but I wish to make one or two remarks in reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] and the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER.]

Mr. HAVEN. I would suggest that the vote had better be taken first upon the pending amendment.

Mr. ORR. I will give way for that purpose.

The question was taken; and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I now move to strike out, in the third paragraph of the bill, all after the word "territory," as follows:

"But the President shall be invested with power to cause said annuities to be commuted from time to time for such articles of goods, provisions, stock, cattle, implements of agriculture, the clearing and fencing of land, and the erection of buildings and other improvements, as in his discretion will conduce most to promote their comfort, civilization, and permanent welfare."

I do this in order to perfect the paragraph in a way that may be satisfactory to the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "the clearing and fencing of land, and the erection of buildings and other improvements." I desire first to get rid of this provision, and therefore offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Alabama is first in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not propose to make any remarks. What I have already said is sufficient for my purpose.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words in reference to the last portion of the second section. I concur with the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM,] in all that he has said, excepting his remarks in relation to Indian traders. Having myself been one for many years, I will not here combat his opinion on the subject. I would now explain to the committee the condition of the Indians. I have lived among them for years. Most of them live along the line of the British possessions, and in a very cold country. Very few of them have received annuities. They are, so far as money and trade are concerned, mere children. If money be appropriated for them, I say that it will be anticipated, every dollar of it, before it reaches their country. They will cease their hunts. Their labors will stop, and indolently lounging about the whisky shops, they will anticipate the receipt of the money to be paid them. If they can get credit for one dollar, or to the full amount, or for ten times the amount they are to receive, they will take it. When the money reaches there, of course they will see but little of it; consequently, after the payment they are as poor as before. Thus they will go on from day to day, never looking forward for one moment beyond the next payment.

The object of the clause is to leave the discretion in the hands of the President, or of such agents as he may appoint, to change their annuities as they progress in civilization. At first we would not give the Indian hat and boots; he would want the money expended in moccasins and blankets. Next year he would want cloth. The year after he would want boots and shoes, hats and coats. He is to be led on step by step, as all past history has shown us nations are brought from barbarism to civilization. In a few years he will want a cow, a yoke of cattle, a house; and this clause of the bill leaves the power in the proper authorities to expend the money so as to meet the necessities of the advancing strides of the savage towards civilization. Therefore I hope that it will not be stricken out. It may be amended, and perhaps profitably amended.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman whether, in his opinion, it would not be better to pay the annuities to these Indians without commutation?

Mr. RICE. No, sir.

Mr. WASHBURN. Would not the annuities be squandered by the Indians at once, instead of their receiving something every year?

Mr. RICE. As I understand, the bill proposes to pay the Indians from time to time, as their necessities may require.

Mr. WASHBURN. With the gentleman's permission, he will see that the bill provides that the President shall be invested with power to commute the annuities from time to time, as the Indians may desire.

Mr. RICE. That refers to some of the bands which receive annuities under former treaties. The bill provides that the annuities shall be received according to the necessities of the Indians.

I will state another objection. Many years ago treaties were made with the Indians, stipulating that they should receive certain articles. Those treaty stipulations cannot be altered, except by the making of new treaties. Well, as the Indians advance in civilization, those articles become useless to them, and still hundreds and thousands of dollars worth of goods are taken from the eastern cities annually at the expense of the Government, and given to the western tribes. Those goods are perfectly worthless to the Indian. He sells them to the traders for one hundredth or one thousandth part of what they cost. I have seen axes which cost $1 50 apiece in New York, sold for five cents apiece on the distant plains. They are then taken by the white traders—"sharks," as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNHAM] calls them—to the settlements, and sold to the white settlers there. That is the way in which the traders make their great profits. Whereas, if the Indians should receive that which is necessary, and receive it when they want it, it would be a benefit to them. If an Indian takes it into his head that he will have a house built, let the agent build one for him. If he wants to have a few acres plowed and fenced—and we all know the Indians cannot do these things for themselves—put it in the power of the agent to pursue that policy. This is the only way in which it can be done; and I hope, for the sake of the Indians, that this clause will not be stricken out, for at this very day the Indians are starving to death in that country for want of provisions, and it is the only thing that can save them. It can be modified, however, so as to make it more acceptable.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will now read the modification of the section which I propose. I have drawn it up hastily.

Mr. ORR. Are we to understand that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York will be pending after the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] shall have been disposed of. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is to strike out a larger portion of the section than is proposed to be stricken out by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOUSTON. My amendment will make the clause read thus:

"But the President shall make treaties with said Indians, changing the present mode of paying annuities so as to pay said annuities in such goods, provisions, stock, cattle, and implements of agriculture, as, in his discretion, will conduce most to promote their comfort, civilization, and permanent welfare: Provided, That he shall cause reports to be made to Congress of each and every purchase of goods made under this provision, giving the character of goods purchased, the prices paid, and the parties of whom purchased."

Mr. HAVEN. Let me say at this point that I think that is unobjectionable, and the difficulty grows out of leaving the alternative power in the hands of the agents to pay or commute. If it is fixed one way or the other it would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. HOUSTON. I saw that very difficulty myself, that it would put it in the power of the agents to commute without any particular supervisory power on the part of the head of the Department. I propose to modify this clause of the bill so as to make it substantially as I have read it.

Mr. HAVEN. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ORR. I will state to the committee very briefly the reasons that influenced the Committee on Indian Affairs in reporting the bill in the shape in which it presents itself here. By examining the seventh and eighth lines of the bill, it will be found that the "treaties shall contain the following provisions, and such others as may be requisite and proper to carry the same into effect." In the forty-seventh line of the same section, it is provided that: "The President shall have power to prescribe and enforce such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the foregoing provisions, as he may deem necessary for the effectual execution of the purposes of this act, which said rules and regulations shall be annually reported to Congress."

The bill also extends to the mixed bloods among the Chippewa nation. Many of them are intelligent. Many of them may have some property. They are as much entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this bill as the Indians themselves. These persons are capable of managing for themselves. If you make the payment to them in money, they will, perhaps, dispense it as judiciously as any white man would. The committee reported the clause in its present shape, leaving it an alternative with the President, in the expectation that the President would instruct his agents to pay a certain amount to certain Indians in annuities from year to year, and, to those who are capable of managing for themselves, to make the payments directly in money. That was the object the committee had in view in reporting the bill in its present shape. If it be more satisfactory, I have no especial objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, although it will defeat the object which the committee had in view in allowing the President to make the payment of annuities in money to those who are competent to manage for themselves; yet a large proportion of the payments to be made, as provided in this bill, will still be made, as the committee desire, in goods, implements of agriculture, &c., &c. I have no doubt that many frauds have been perpetrated upon the Indians, and I doubt not that they will continue to be perpetrated. Wherever you have public money dispensed, you find that frauds are committed. It is out of the question that you can have honest agents all the time, especially when they are removed fifteen hundred and two thousand miles from the seat of Government.

Many agents, who have been in the service of the Government for a quarter of a century at least, have lived lives of integrity, and have preserved unimpeached their character and reputation for honesty. It is our duty, however, to guard the Indians as effectually as possible against the commission of frauds upon them by those who are not honest.

The object which the committee had in view, was to protect the Indians from the impositions which might be practiced upon them by traders, and by persons settling in their midst; or, in other words, the "sharks" which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNHAM] so well described. The committee desire that the Indians shall get the full benefit of everything designed to be paid them by the Government. If all the money which has been appropriated by the Government for the benefit of the Indians had been faithfully applied, we should have heard of none of this difficulty and suffering among them; and the Chippewas, even, to whom the Delegate from Minnesota [Mr. Rice] has referred, as having been in a starving condition, many of them, in the cold and inclement region in which they were located, would have been relieved of much of their suffering.

The committee are anxious that the bill should be passed in such a shape as will give the Indians the greatest protection possible. I desire, however, that the bill should not be weakened or impaired in its efficiency. I will not interpose, for a single moment, the slightest objection to any amendment the object of which is to guard and protect the Indians from fraud and imposition. If the committee think that the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] should be adopted, I will interpose no objection, although I would prefer that the bill should retain the shape in which it was recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs. If a majority of the Committee of the Whole are opposed to the bill in its original shape, I will cheerfully acquiesce in their decision in regard to the proposed modification, believing that it will not materially impair the efficiency of the bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] proposes to strike out the latter part of the second section of the bill.

As I understand this bill, the object proposed by the committee in reporting it, was to make an experiment—a new experiment—in civilizing these wild tribes of Indians, of which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Rice] has spoken. The great difficulty which presented itself to the mind of the committee, was stated to the House by the chairman, [Mr. Orr.] Now, with reference to the character of the proposition to which objection has been made, we have been told by the gentleman from Minnesota that these Indians are wandering tribes; that they are children, as it were, in the management of all their affairs. If this be true, Mr. Chairman, and we can have no doubt of it, then it shows the very great necessity there is for voting down the amendment which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] has proposed, namely: to strike out the latter portion of this second section. If the object of this bill be to civilize these Indians, to prevent their wandering from place to place, and to get them to settle down in this Territory among the citizens; if this, I say, be the object of the bill, then, as a matter of course, it is important to retain the provision, in order that they may be induced to settle down, and each individual Indian may know his home. It is desirable to have a cabin erected for him, and to supply him with food, clothing, and other necessities that will add to his own comfort and to that of his family; and to afford him the means at the same time to improve himself in agricultural pursuits. As a matter of course, inducements should be held out by the Government, in order that the Indian may be induced to come under this mode of civilization.

Mr. Chairman, this is quite a new proposition, as has been stated to the House; and it seems to me that great discretion and latitude ought to be given to the Government and its officers, for the purpose of testing the applicability of this proposition. It is impossible for this House now, in a new proposition of such a character as this, to make a bill perfect in itself, by which to carry it out. It is almost impossible to do it. As I before remarked, the committee had great difficulty in forming this second section of the bill, in order to meet the exigencies which might arise. And, Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentlemen who have addressed the committee, heretofore, with reference to the impossibility—yes, sir, the impossibility—of guarding these Indians from the frauds and speculations that are being daily practiced upon them. The practice of paying in money those Indians which are in the same condition as those immediately affected by this bill, should be abandoned. If you place in their power the means of subsistence; if you give them provisions; if you give them such goods as are necessary for their wear, and give them agricultural implements, and build houses for them and lay out their grounds, then they may improve themselves in agriculture. This provision is the only thing that could be placed in this bill to enable the Government to exercise proper controlling influence over them, in order to civilize them. They are a wandering tribe; and in testing this experiment, the President, or the officials who may be appointed by the President for the purpose of testing this new system, should have a discretionary power vested in them, such as is proposed by the second section of this bill. If it be necessary for the comfort of these Indians to furnish them with articles of food, certainly it can be done. If provisions be required to add to their comfort, and to save them from starving, let them be procured for them. Let implements of husbandry also be furnished to them to enable them to till their grounds. If, for the purpose of improving their agriculture, it is necessary to procure them a plow, or a hoe, or anything of that kind, let the agent provide it for them.

Sir, I think there is great objection to striking out the provision which is proposed to be stricken out by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston.] It is, in my estimation, the most important provision in the bill. If you desire to succeed in an endeavor to make citizens of them, by civilizing them, give them houses. It seems to me it is the most humane provision contained in the entire bill; and inasmuch as it is an experiment merely, I trust that the provision will be retained by the committee.

I know you cannot frame a bill perfect in all its parts, at the beginning. I have no doubt, however, that in a year or two, if this bill shall become a law, Congress will be called upon to make different provisions; anticipating, therefore, such a result, you must give the President and agents discretion, in order to meet all the difficulties which may arise in the conditions and wants of the Indians.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] may be read again; for, if I understand it, I desire to offer an amendment to it.

The amendment was accordingly again read, as hereinbefore inserted.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "implements of agriculture," the words, "the clearing and fencing of land, and the erection of buildings and other improvements;" so that his amendment, if adopted, shall be substantially like the provision originally reported by the committee, with the exception that there shall be no discretion whether the sum shall be paid in money, or by commutation in these articles; but that the bill shall specifically provide that it shall be paid in those articles. I think it is as necessary and as important that a provision should be made for the payment of the treaty stipulation in this way, as in reference to any of the other specific articles. I think it will tend as clearly and directly to the civilization of the Indians, if not more so, than the provision for the payment of stock, cattle, implements, &c. I think the Indians would be much more likely to have dwelling houses, to have fields cleared and fenced, and to have all the improvement of civilization—if a provision is made by which they shall be supplied to them—than if we made no such provision. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HOUSTON. The words which the gentleman from Maine proposes to insert is one of the most objectionable features in the bill, and that provision is all that I get clear of by my amendment, or propose to get clear of. I propose, in my amendment, to get rid of that part of the amendment providing for the clearing and fencing of land, and the erection of buildings.

No gentleman upon this floor who has observed our intercourse with, and relations to, the various tribes of Indians, can for a moment controvert what I say, and that is, that at all times it is the most difficult thing in the world to have our agents deal fairly with the Indians—I mean our agents, and everybody who makes treaties with them—and at the same time make our laws operate upon them with fairness and equality. If, then, we can avoid that sort of relationship towards the Indians, which will give rise to frauds of this sort, I think we ought, upon principles of justice and morality, to do it.

Now, sir, I ask gentlemen to look for a moment at what would be done, if a requisition of this sort were made upon the President. Suppose it should become necessary for the President to have lands for fifty, one hundred, or one hundred and fifty Indians cleared, he must find means for the building of fences, the erection of houses, and the clearing of the lands; and how is he to do it? He invests the Indian agent with power. The agent is compelled to employ A, B, and C to go upon the lands, clear them, and build the fences, &c. Sir, I tell the committee that it will result in the introduction of a horde of others to fleece those Indians, who, under your present laws, are kept out of their country. That will be the result. I would much prefer that the Indians themselves should be left to assist by their own labor in this work; and I repeat, that if this provision be adopted, it will send a horde of people to that Territory to fleece the Indians worse than they are now fleeced by the traders against whom we hear so much complaint.

Now, sir, I trust we shall pay these annuities. If the committee prefer it, let a part be paid in money; but let us pay these annuities principally in goods, in provisions, in stock, in cattle, in implements of agriculture, in tools, and in whatever the Indians may need for their subsistence and comfort; and then let us rely upon them to clear the land, and build their houses in part by their own labor.

It seems to me that, if, after giving the Indians the land, the Government is to clear them, to fence them, and to build houses, it will result in its being obliged to cultivate them also. If the Indians will not assist in these matters by their own labor, they will not be likely to cultivate the lands.

But, suppose the President undertakes to have this work executed, and the agent employs A, B, and C to do the work, who is to superintend these men? Who is to see that they do full days' work? Who is to see that they cut the rails the right length, split them properly, and build them into fence in a proper manner? Who is to see that the houses are built in a substantial and workmanlike manner? Sir, by adopting this provision, you will open an avenue for more injustice to be perpetrated upon these Indians than is done under the present system? Let us, as far as possible, simplify our dealings with these Indians, and thereby relieve them from the hordes of people whose object it is to fleece them out of whatever they receive from the Government. Let us pay their annuities to them in provisions, in stock, and in implements of husbandry and agriculture. In that way they will be much less likely to have their annuities taken from them by the traders than if they come to them in money.

Mr. CHAIRMAN, I have nothing to say against the traders. They are there for the purpose of making money. If we could so regulate our intercourse with the Indian tribes as to do away with the necessity of traders going among them at all; if the furnishing of their supplies could be carried on entirely by the Government agents, who live among them, and who receive regular salaries from the Government; if they could receive their goods and provisions, and distribute them, it would save the Indians immense sums of money, which would otherwise be lost to them, and tend very much to promote their civilization and happiness.

If you adopt this provision, you will, in my judgment, accomplish the very thing which all of us wish to avoid. If you insist upon providing for clearing their lands, building their fences, building their houses, and plowing their fields—and gentlemen will observe that the words "and other improvements" which the clause contains, will embrace plowing their fields, and whatever the authorities may choose to consider improvements—I say, if you pass this provision, you will, in my judgment, involve the Government in greater difficulties than were ever witnessed in the whole course of our Indian intercourse. You will never be able to execute in good faith, to their satisfaction, our treaties with them. I therefore hope that my amendment will be adopted, and that the clause will be stricken out.

Mr. RICE. I will say a few words in reply to the gentleman from Alabama. I must confess that I feel a deep interest in this bill; more profound than that I have for any other measure before this body. I know the whole of the people for whom it is designed. I have spent years among them. I have hunted, fed, and starved, almost, with them.

Hespeaks of traders. Traders! traders! Indian traders! Their names have been howled from one end of the country to the other, in Congress and out of it. Now, the proposition under consideration provides a remedy for the gentleman's objections. Under the existing treaties, the Indians are paid annually and semi-annually. If an Indian wants a favor, no matter of what kind, he is compelled to go to his trader. The trader, indeed, is now the only man who can afford him relief. He affords it, but as payment is doubtful, he must sell at a large profit. Then, the proper course should be to pass a bill, to throw the Indians on the Government. Under this bill, if an Indian wants a favor, to whom is he to go? He will not go to his trader. No; he is independent of him. He will go to the agent. He will go to the man who has been sent there to provide for his wants. He will go to the man who ought to have influence over the Indians. He will go to the man whose only aim, it is presumed, is the improvement of the condition of the Indians. The bill takes the Indians completely out of the influence of the traders.

Let me give an illustration to the gentleman from Alabama. Here is an Indian who has heretofore lived in a wigwam, and now takes it into his head that he would like to reside in a house. A beautiful piece of ground is selected, and the Government gives him title to eighty acres. He now wants a house built, a few acres of ground plowed and fenced, that he may be sowing something for his support during the coming winter. This bill leaves it within the power of the agent to build the house, to break and fence the land, and to furnish the Indian with seeds and implements of agriculture.

The gentleman is mistaken in another of his objections. Contracts by existing Indian regulations stand thus: If the Indians desire to have them changed, the agents are compelled to submit the proposed changes to the department. If the department approves them they are sent back to the agents, and they advertise throughout the country that they want so many buildings of such and such dimensions built, so many acres broken and fenced; and if you will look at the records of the Indian Department, you will find that improvements have been made by agents under this system cheaper than citizens would have been enabled to make them.

The object of the bill is to take the influence from the trader, and to throw it into the hands of the Government, where it belongs. It provides for the Indian according to his necessities. It gives discretion to the President, or his agents, to change the articles to be furnished as the Indians progress toward civilization. We see advertisements in the newspapers for $300,000 or $400,000 worth of goods. Merchants of New York and Philadelphia send in their bids and samples, and, after examination by the Department, contracts are made. You send to the Indians of Florida the same kind of goods that you send to the Indians of the far north. They are useless to those of one section or the other, and to perhaps both.

But the proposed system allows the Indians, whenever they assemble, to say to their agent: our next year's annuities will amount to so much; we want so many cattle, so much expended in breaking land, so much in building houses, and so much in buying agricultural implements; and the specification is then to be sent here, and, under that specification, the contracts are to be made.

Mr. SKELTON. I have been much gratified by the discussion thus far upon this bill, and likewise with the provisions of the bill itself. But before the vote is taken, I desire to say a few words with regard to that portion of it which is proposed to be stricken out.

The alteration proposed to be made by the honorable member from Alabama [Mr. Houston] would, in my opinion, strike out the most valuable part of the bill; that part of it which, in my estimation, is of more importance and value, and better calculated to promote the civilization of the Indians, than any other.

We hear complaints here that the Indians are wronged. As to that matter, I have no knowledge; but if it be the case, we should give to the Indian those things which cannot be taken away from him; and this very clause which the gentleman from Alabama proposes to strike out, includes the articles which cannot be taken away from him. It secures to him, in the first place, eighty acres of land inalienable.

Mr. HOUSTON. I don't propose to touch that.

Mr. SKELTON. I know that; but the land is to be inalienable, and the clearing, fencing, and buildings on the land remain with the land, of course, and are, therefore, also inalienable; and those articles are the only articles that the Indian is not allowed to dispose of to traders, and that there is no possibility of his being cheated in. So much, then, for that part of the argument which contemplates that the Indian will be wronged out of that which is his just due.

But the object of this bill appears to be to promote the civilization of the Indians, and in that particular it meets with my hearty cooperation and support; and the very argument which the gentleman from Alabama has adduced as an objection to this section of the bill, is to my mind one of the strongest arguments in its favor. He says that by it you will draw white men among the Indians, and he wants to keep white men away from the Indians. Now, I take it for granted that the object of this bill is to assimilate the Indian with the white man, to lead him forward by the force of example in the path of civilization and virtue. Now, we all know that these Indians are uncultivated, have no knowledge of the mechanic arts, and are unable even to build their own houses, or construct their fences. How shall you teach them those useful arts? Can you teach them in any other way than by sending among them men who understand those arts? Certainly not. Sir, whenever you want to civilize people, to lead them into the path of virtue and sobriety, the best means of accomplishing that reform is to present before them example. Example is infinitely more powerful in everything that tends to progress and improvement than precept can be. It is for that reason that I hope this provision of the bill which relates to the cultivation of the lands, to the building of houses, and the erection of fences, will be retained; first, because it gives the Indians substantial benefits, which cannot be taken away from them; and, secondly, because it introduces among them men who will teach them, by the force of example, lessons of civilization and art. I hope that this feature of the bill will be retained as one of the most important provisions in it.

Mr. HUNT. I should like to understand this matter. I would inquire what the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] would be.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] proposes to strike out, and insert what has already been read by the Clerk. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] submitted an amendment to insert in the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama the words, "clearing and fencing of grounds, the erection of buildings, and other improvements."

The question was then taken on Mr. WASHBURN's amendment; and it was rejected.

The question then recurring on Mr. Houston's amendment, it was taken; and, upon division, there being only 20 voting in the affirmative, the amendment was rejected.

The fourth section of the bill was then read, as follows:

"Fourth. The laws of the United States and the Territory of Minnesota shall be extended over the Chippewa territory whenever the same may be ceded, and the same shall cease to be Indian country, except that the lands reserved to said Indians, or other property owned by them, shall be exempt from taxation and execution, and that the act passed 30th June, 1834, 'to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes,' &c., be inoperative over the said ceded territory, except the twentieth section, which prohibits the introduction and sale of spirituous liquors to Indians."

Mr. ORR. There is a verbal amendment which ought to be made in the thirty-seventh line. I move to insert after the words "Chippewa territory" the words "in said Territory of Minnesota."

The question was then taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I wish to propound to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Orr] a question. It is this: I find that the fourth clause of the bill before us says that the act passed on the 30th of June, 1834, "to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indians," &c., shall become inoperative. I desire to know what is the effect of that act, and what are its contents?

Mr. ORR. The act of 30th of June, 1834, referred to, is the act known as the Indian intercourse act. There are some twenty sections which prescribe the manner in which trade and intercourse shall be carried on in all the Indian territory, which confine the right of trading to the Indians themselves, and the citizens of the United States within their territory. We propose now to repeal all the sections of that act except the twentieth section in regard to this territory.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments to be proposed to the section just read, the bill will now be laid aside—

Mr. WALSH, (interrupting.) I propose an amendment to the first section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York send in his proposition as an additional section to the bill, or merely as an amendment to the first section of it?

Mr. WALSH. I propose it as an amendment to the first section.

Several MEMBERS. It is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must remark to the gentleman from New York that this bill was being considered by sections. The first section has been considered and passed, and the second section has been read, before the gentleman from New York moved his amendment. It is, therefore, too late for him to propose it as an amendment to the first section. It may, perhaps, be introduced as an independent proposition. If the gentleman from New York proposes it as an additional section of the bill, the Chair will undertake to receive it.

Mr. WALSH. It cannot be offered as an additional amendment. It proposes to extend to the Indians the provisions of the homestead bill.

Mr. LETCHER. If the Chair will look at this bill, he will find that it contains but two sections; and we are not through the second section yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The second section was about being read, and the Chair was about to pronounce that, if no further amendments were offered, the bill would be laid aside, and reported to the House. Such order will now be made. If there are no further amendments offered to the bill, it will be laid aside, and reported to the House.

It was so ordered.

BILL FOR THE INCREASE OF SALARIES.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill next in order for the consideration of the committee is House bill No. 162, to increase the salaries of judicial and executive officers in the Territories of Oregon and New Mexico. This bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee, with amendments, proposing to insert after the word "New Mexico" the words "Washington and Utah," and proposing to strike out the words "two thousand five hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "three thousand," thus making the salaries of judges in the Territories of Oregon, Washington, Utah, and New Mexico, $3,000 per annum.

Mr. RICE. I have an amendment which I wish to offer to the amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the annual salaries of the chief justice and associate justices of the Territory of Minnesota be increased to $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Minnesota that the amendment is not in order at this time. The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary must first be disposed of.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I move to amend the amendment of the Judiciary Committee, by providing that the salary of the secretary of the Territory of Washington shall be $2,000 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that he should defer offering his amendment until the pending amendment shall be acted upon.

Mr. LANE. I withdraw it, then, for the present.

The question was then taken upon the amendments proposed by the Committee of the Judiciary; and they were agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I now offer my amendment.

Mr. LETCHER. I would ask the gentleman from Oregon what salary that officer now receives?

Mr. LANE. Fifteen hundred dollars.

The question was then put; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE. I now move my amendment as a separate section.

Mr. LETCHER. What salary do those officers now receive?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would remark that the salary of the judges of Minnesota is $1,800. I am acquainted with the amount of duties which those gentlemen have to perform, the number of miles they have to travel, the courts they have to hold, and the expenses of living in that Territory, and I think that the sum which the amendment provides for is not any more than sufficient, and I hope it will be adopted.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. BERNHISEL. I move to amend the bill so as to provide that the salary of the secretary of the Territory of the Utah shall be increased to two thousand dollars.

Mr. COBB, (in his seat.) Provided he have only one wife. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Delegate from Utah.

Mr. WALSH. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] has offered an amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The ordinary salary of that officer has been fifteen hundred dollars, and I do not think it is in order to move to increase it here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman that the bill is to provide for the increase of salaries.

The question was then taken; and Mr. BERNHISEL's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LILLY. I desire to offer an amendment as an additional section. I move the following:

SEC. —. Be it further enacted, That the salary of the district attorney of New Mexico shall be increased to $1,000 per annum.

I move the amendment at the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRIDGES,] who had the matter in charge. It is to increase the salary of the district attorney of New Mexico to $1,000. I understood from the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this matter had been before the Judiciary Committee, and that they had concurred with him in recommending the increase. That gentleman is now absent, or he would have taken charge of the matter himself. I said the Judiciary Committee recommended the increase. They, however, subsequently reconsidered their action, I believe, upon the ground that it would be setting a bad precedent to other district attorneys, who would be likely to come forward and ask to have their compensation increased in consequence.

The present district attorney for New Mexico, is a friend of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to whom I have alluded. When he went there he was under the impression that there would be comparatively little travel to be done, and that the legal business he would secure would be sufficient to make up a reasonable compensation. On arriving there, however, he found that there was much traveling to be done through an inhospitable and hostile country, that there was very little legal business to be done, and his salary would not pay his traveling expenses. He therefore thought this a fair case for an increase of salary, and concurring in that opinion, I have offered this amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey, that I understand there is a Senate bill before the House providing for increasing the salaries of the district attorneys in all the Territories, so that the amendment of the gentleman will hardly be necessary.

Mr. LILLY. I was not aware that such was the case. If it is, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CUTTING. I beg leave to make an explanation in respect to the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from New Jersey to have withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. LILLY. I should be glad to hear the explanation of the gentleman from New York, and will not withdraw my amendment until he has made it. I will say that I offered it under a promise to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, from whose district the district attorney to whom it applies came.

Mr. CUTTING. I beg leave to explain to the gentleman from New Jersey, in reference to the action of the Committee on the Judiciary, to which he alludes, that having had numerous applications from almost every portion of the western country, and particularly from the new Territories, for an increase of the fees of the district attorneys and of the marshals in those regions, that it has become necessary to examine and prepare, if we can agree upon it, a bill which shall settle the compensation, not only of the district attorneys in the Territory of New Mexico, but in the Territories of Washington, Oregon, and elsewhere. Now, if this committee adopt such a provision as is contained in the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, the salary of a district attorney in one of the Territories, it will in some degree embarrass the action of the Judiciary Committee. It will be considered as a precedent by which we are to be governed in regulating the compensation of the others in other Territories.

I said that there were applications for an increase of the salaries of other officers besides those of district attorneys. We have had before us applications in respect to marshals and other officers engaged in the administration of justice. The whole subject is an extensive one, and, it seems to me, ought to be embraced in one measure. If anything is done in relation to the subject, the whole matter should be embraced in a bill such as that for the increase of the salaries of the district judges—which the Committee on the Judiciary have reported to the House—in which we have endeavored to place the salaries of the respective judges in some degree upon the ground of equality, having in view the amount of business and the expenses of living in the different parts of the Union. So, too, as regards district attorneys and marshals. Instead of acting here on a solitary case, it seems to me that it would be better to leave the whole subject to the Judiciary Committee, which will report a bill covering all these cases. Now, in so doing, I do not desire the gentleman from New Jersey to understand that we make any promise on this subject, or that he will regulate his action in reference to his present motion on anything that the Committee on the Judiciary are to do.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I understand that the gentleman from New Jersey has withdrawn his proposition.

Mr. LILLY. No, sir; I desire to get some information before I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey is still pending.

Mr. LILLY. I do not withdraw it until after I have heard the explanation of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CUTTING. I can say to the gentleman from New Jersey that I can make no promise, even of an indirect character, in reference to the district attorney of this Territory. All I can say is, that the whole subject is under investigation; and the whole subject will, I hope, be reported on.

There has been some delay, arising from circumstances unnecessary to be alluded to; but we have taken up this whole subject. Last week we reported a bill on the subject of salaries; and I presume that we shall report a general bill, embracing all those officers in the various sections of the country. My own judgment is, that we had better not fix the action of the committee or the House to a particular compensation to a particular district attorney, which shall form a sort of rule of action hereafter for the Judiciary Committee. The question had better be left open.

Mr. LILLY. On the explanation of the gentleman from New York, and relying on the liberality of the committee in this case, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BERNHISEL. I move to amend the bill by increasing the salary of the Governor of the Territory of Utah from $2,500 to $3,000, so that it may be the same as that of the Governors of New Mexico and Oregon.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the amendment just offered will meet with the favor of this committee. We are now getting nearly at the rate of $3,000 per year, and I find it fully as much as I can do to support one wife on that apportionment. I understand this gentleman has some three or four, and I think that the least he can have is $3,000. [Great laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move, by way of amendment, that the salary of the Governor of Minnesota be increased to $3,000 per year.

Mr. RICE. An amendment has just passed the Senate regulating the salary of each of the Governors of Minnesota and Washington, if the superintendence of the Indians be taken from their duties, at $2,500 per year.

Mr. WASHBURN. At the suggestion of the Delegate from Minnesota, I withdraw my amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. BERNHISEL's amendment.

Mr. HENN. Does the amendment propose to increase the salary of the Governor, as Governor, to $3,000?

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to ask the Delegate from Utah if there is not already a provision in a bill before the Senate to increase the salary of the Governor of that Territory?

Mr. BERNHISEL. It only makes it $2,500.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to know what pay these Governors receive as Indian agents or superintendents of Indian affairs. I understand they receive $1,500 salary as Governors, $1,000 as Indian superintendents, and, in addition to that, extra compensation for other services. I notice that there was a proposition made in the Senate the other day to pay eight dollars a day to Governor Gorman for investigating Governor Ramsay's misconduct. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Did that pass?

Mr. LETCHER. No; it was voted down. It seems to me that there should be some reason given to show the propriety of this increase of salary.

Mr. BERNHISEL. Living is very expensive out there.

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, I know it is very expensive living now all over the country, and I am exceedingly sorry that prices rose just as the Democrats came into power. [Laughter.] That is what disturbs me. I have long heard that Democratic services were worth a great deal more than Whig services, but I apprehend that when we go before the country, we shall find some Democrats even who will be disposed to raise the question, and think they are not exactly worth just as much as we are likely to pay for them.

Mr. CAMPBELL here interposed a remark, which was not audible to the reporter.

Mr. LETCHER. Experience proves it. It has become a fixed fact, and the country so decided at the last election, when the Whig candidate received the votes of only four States out of thirty-one.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How would it be now?

Mr. LETCHER. Well, I think it very probable the Whigs would not be much better off with the same candidate, under the same auspices.

But really, sir, all jesting aside, it does seem to me that we are going on in a very unmethodical manner about this matter. Here are amendments proposed one after another, that nobody ever heard of before; no time is given for reflection; not a single argument or reason is given in support of them; and, under these circumstances, the committee votes on them one after another, and we go on increasing the salaries throughout the Territories. I think that before we undertake to do this, we ought to have some evidence that this increase is necessary—some recommendation to guide us in our action from the proper officer, at the other end of the avenue, who has charge of these matters. As it is now, gentlemen get up here and offer their amendments without presenting one solitary fact to show that the increase proposed is at all necessary, and the House votes them all into the bill. Such legislation ought to cease.

Mr. BERNHISEL. I will merely state, as a reason why this amendment should be adopted, that the Governors of New Mexico and Oregon receive $3,000 per annum. I may state, further, that California prices of living prevail in that region of country. Coffee and sugar are forty cents a pound, and the other necessities of life are dear in proportion.

The question was then taken on Mr. BERNHISEL's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I propose to add at the end of the bill, the following:

And that the same amount be paid to those who have heretofore served as Governors or secretaries of said Territories.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill does not relate to Governors, and therefore the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio would not be pertinent.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will substitute, then, the word "judges" in the place of "Governors."

I am not an advocate for very large salaries in this country. I see no particular reason why we should pay the chief justice and associate judges, and secretaries of these Territories named in this bill, more now than we did some three or four years ago. I think that justice requires we should pay to the gentlemen who then held office in this Territory at a time when the expenses of living were much higher than now, at least as much as is now asked for the present incumbents.

I do not agree with the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] in the statement he made in his very partisan like speech, that Democratic service is worth more than Whig service, as I have seen it exemplified. On the contrary, the disposition seems to be to raise the salaries of all the officers of the country; and I wish, for one, to place the Whigs, who served in this Territory at a time when it cost far more to perform the duties of their offices there, upon the same footing with those of a later date. I see no propriety of paying officers $3,000 a year, when we formerly paid them a much less sum; nor do I see the propriety of paying a salary of $2,000 to officers to whom we formerly paid but $1,500. But yet I am disposed to be much more liberal in this matter than some gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject. I believe these salaries are not too high; but I think it is no more than justice that gentlemen who have heretofore filled the same offices should be paid the same salaries. I appeal to the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] who is a liberal man, and commands the esteem of this House as a man of unquestionable veracity and integrity, to say if the sum of $1,500 will go further in the Territory of Oregon than $500 paid in the States?

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. As I am called upon so directly to answer the gentleman from Ohio, I feel compelled to make a few remarks, although I regret the necessity of doing so. I introduced this bill in good faith, in the hope and expectation that it would pass without any interference from any quarter. The judges in the Territory of Oregon have heretofore been allowed $2,000 per annum for their services. That salary is too small to secure the services of such men as ought to fill so important and responsible a position. They cannot live upon it, as they have declared in a petition which they have sent to Congress, in which they say that, unless their salaries shall be increased, they will be compelled to retire from the bench, and resume the practice of law. We have now a good bench, and I am satisfied that the sum of $3,000 is a small consideration for their services.

But to come to the point made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] I am sorry that any gentleman has attempted to create any prejudice against this bill; for, as reported by the Judiciary Committee, I think the bill ought to pass. It is just and proper that it should pass. The gentleman from Ohio asks me, as I understand him, whether the salary of $1,500, received by the secretary of the Territory of Oregon, would be more than $500 in the States. I can say most truthfully that this salary is not sufficient. The law organizing the Territory of Oregon passed Congress in the year 1848, before gold was discovered in California; at a time when the means of living were very cheap in that country. No portion of the country afforded subsistence cheaper than the Territory of Oregon at that time. There was no money in that country, and $1,500 would have been more there than $2,500 here. Wheat commanded a price of fifty cents a bushel, and was made a lawful tender at that price, by agreement among the people, as they had no currency.

Soon after the passage of the law organizing the Territory of Oregon, and fixing the salaries of its officers, gold was discovered in California, and a large portion of the cultivators of the soil were attracted to the gold mines. Gold became plenty, and the products of the soil became scarce, so that $1,500 would hardly support a man of family in Oregon. But it is too late now to talk about the propriety of going back; and I say to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] that I question the propriety of adopting provisions in this bill designed to have a retrospective effect.

I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that if this rule should be adopted, your humble servant will have to come in for his share. I went out to the Territory of Oregon at a salary of $3,000 a year, and with the double duty of Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs on my hands. I served in that capacity for eighteen months, and my accounts are now settled and filed in the Department. In the management of the Indian service, you will find that during the whole time I charged not one cent for traveling expenses; nor did I receive one cent over my salary. And I flatter myself that I performed the duties both of Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs pretty well. At any rate, we placed the Indian relations on a pretty good footing. We arrested the Wilatpu murderers, made treaties of peace, and did all at a very little expense.

But, let me remark here, Mr. Chairman, particularly to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] whose attention I desire, that, immediately after that, Whig service was worth a good deal more than Democratic service. For, about the time when I was dismissed from the service, Congress separated the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs from those of Governor, and left the salary of Governor at $3,000—which it ought to be; it is not any too much—and provided for the appointment of a superintendent of Indian affairs, at a salary of $2,500.

Now, if we go back and provide for the extra payment of a Whig secretary, I do not see why we should not also go back and give the Governor $3,000 salary for discharging the duties of that office, and $2,500 for the superintendency of Indian affairs. Now, this House may try to impose that on me, [laughter;] but I care so little for money, that I would not accept of it. I do not want any such thing. But I believe that the secretary who heretofore served in Oregon Territory ought to have some kind of relief. I believe the best way would be to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle his accounts on liberal terms, and to make such allowance to him as ought to be made for services not provided for by law.

I am unwilling to see this bill loaded down with amendments. It is of too much importance to be killed in this way; and unless we increase the salaries of the judges, we cannot secure the services of men who are competent to discharge the duties. We only ask it for a few months. They have heretofore served for less than they can live upon; and in a year and a half from this time we mean to be placed upon an equal footing with the States, by being one of them; and then we will pay our own judges, and relieve the General Government from legislating for Oregon Territory. She will then look to her own interests.

I can only say to the gentleman from Ohio, that the late Secretary of that Territory should have relief in some way; but I want to leave it to the committee to say in what way it shall be done.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would say to the gentleman from Oregon that I have no desire to embarrass this bill, for I shall vote for it with pleasure. But I think that the committee, as well as myself, may well thank the gentleman from Oregon for the information which he has given to us in relation to this matter.

But my particular object in speaking was to say a few words in reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] that while he was unwilling to raise the salaries of his Democratic friends, yet maintains that the services of Democrats are worth more than those of Whigs. I cannot agree to that. Officers of the Federal Government, whether they be Democratic Federalists, or Whig Democrats, in my opinion, should stand upon the same platform as to pay. I claim myself to be a Democratic Whig, and a good many Democrats in office do not deserve any more than the Whigs of the country. If there is any objection to this bill, it is upon that very ground.

I do not object to this bill, but I only desire to manifest a wish to do justice to those who have preceded the present incumbents, and the gentleman from Oregon is one of them. I have been given to understand that $1,500, paid to the secretary of Oregon, is not more than $500 would be here. A vast amount of duty is imposed upon that officer. If I am correctly informed, he is a disbursing agent, and is required to give a bond in the penal sum of $60,000. He discharges the various duties imposed upon him by the Territorial Legislature; and, in my judgment, $1,500 is a small compensation.

I shall vote for this bill; and if I could do so, in connection with this bill, I would relieve the gentleman from Ohio, who has been referred to as a former officer in that Territory, who, in consequence of the small compensation paid to him, is somewhat embarrassed, though his integrity is not doubted. He was paid only $1,500 as secretary of that Territory, and it was not enough. The Delegate from Oregon [Mr. LANE] has assured me that it was not enough; and he further assured me that, at the proper time, he would endeavor to relieve him, by making an effort to have him compensated for the duties performed by him, and for which he has not received a proper compensation.

I will not embarrass the bill by my amendment, and I will withdraw it.

Mr. KERR. I am a serious friend of this bill, and am very unwilling to see it incumbered with amendments which will endanger its final passage. But there is one important amendment which I desire to see made to this bill, and I will send it to the Clerk's desk to be read. I offer it as an independent section to the bill.

The amendment was reported, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That each of the judges of the Territories of Oregon, Washington, Utah, and New Mexico, shall be supplied with a complete set of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the United States Statutes at Large, and of Alden's Index to the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LETCHER. They are already supplied.

Mr. KERR. Now, sir, I believe that it has been the uniform practice of the Government to supply the judicial tribunals of the country with libraries for the purpose. I have been informed that the territorial tribunals were not furnished. The gentleman from Virginia, however, who is well informed in reference to all matters of this description, says they are supplied. But, sir, I have been informed by one of the territorial judges that they are not supplied.

I understand now that when the Territories were first organized, it was the practice of the Government to furnish them with reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court, and of the Statutes at Large, but that at that act has expired by its own limitation—that there has been no renewal of it for some years, during which time these judges have not been supplied. I am furthermore informed, that it is of very great importance that these judges should be supplied with these books. They reside in a region of country where it is impossible to procure a suitable library to enable them to discharge their duties properly, unless they are furnished by the Government. I think, upon a little consideration, the committee will see that there can be no reasonable objection to my amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment, provided he will so modify it as that these books shall not become the private property of the judges.

Mr. KERR. I have no objection to that modification, and will accept it.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not know how the fact may be about the territorial judges being supplied with those books. I know the district judges in the States are furnished with those reports annually, and that the United States Statutes at Large are also furnished to them, but they are retained by them as their own private property.

Mr. STEPHENS. But the gentleman from North Carolina accepts an amendment to the effect, that these shall not become private property.

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, sir; I understand that I am speaking of what has been done. If it be true, as the gentleman from North Carolina remarked, that these books were once furnished to the judges of the Territories, under the law, I do not think the act expired by its own limitation. If they were ever furnished, I have no doubt they are furnished now. If, however, they are not furnished now, I see no reasonable objection to affording the same facilities to the judges in the Territories that are furnished to those in the States. What I object to is, that we are called upon to act upon these matters in the absence of all reliable information in relation to them.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The Delegate from Minnesota [Mr. Rice] says that they were originally furnished to the judges of that Territory, but that when the judges were removed, they took them away as their own private property.

Mr. LETCHER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in regard to this bill.

Mr. RICE. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to give way a moment to enable me to ask the gentleman from North Carolina, who proposed this amendment, a question. I desire to ask, whether a provision for the Territory of Minnesota was included in his amendment?

Mr. KERR. It did not include Minnesota.

Mr. RICE. I move then to amend the amendment by including a like provision for Minnesota.

Mr. KERR. The Territory of Minnesota was unintentionally left out of my amendment, and I will cheerfully accept the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, I believe they are all in now, and I suppose we have everything before us in the way of expenditure that is to go into the bill.

Mr. HENN. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to allow me to make a single suggestion. I desire to suggest to the gentleman who moved this amendment, that he modify it so as to provide that when the judge goes out of office the books shall go into the territorial library.

Mr. KERR. No, sir; I prefer that they should go into the judicial library.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will remark, if the gentleman from Virginia will allow me, that there have been appropriations made for libraries in all these Territories, and that this is a new item entirely, to undertake to furnish libraries for the judges of the Territories.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not know how that may be, but there is a manifest difference of opinion as to the true state of the case, and goes far to demonstrate what I have said, that we are going on with this matter in a sort of helter-skelter style, by no means commendable in legislation.

Mr. DUNHAM. If the gentleman will allow me: the gentleman from Tennessee is undoubtedly right. If you examine our legislation for the last three or four years, you will find liberal appropriations have been made for libraries in every one of these Territories.

Mr. LETCHER. It only shows then what I insisted upon when I was up before—the necessity of leaving it to the proper Department, which has charge of these expenditures to furnish its own recommendations of what is necessary for these Territories.

Sir, I imagine, if you will go back and take the cost of Indiana Territory for its legislative, judicial, executive, and other purposes, you will find that it was not the one tenth part of what the cost of one of our Territories is now. I doubt whether indeed, it is the one twentieth of the cost of one of the Territories at this time. This increase of all these salaries makes the cost greater even than under the late Whig Administration! [Laughter.] The cost of keeping up all these territorial governments has been largely increased. For the last few years profligacy and extravagance in the distribution of public money, has been the prevailing evil of the times. You find it in the local legislatures. You find it here in this legislature. You cannot go anywhere where public money is distributed by legislative vote, or in any other way, that you do not find every species of application for appropriations for the benefit of particular individuals, or particular classes of individuals.

Now, here we see that everything is running up in price, as they tell us. Grain is a great deal higher; bacon is a great deal higher; and everything that a man eats or wears is increasing in price every twenty-four hours. [Laughter.] And at the rate it is going on, it is utterly impossible to tell what will be the cost by the close of the present session of Congress. [Renewed laughter.]

I do not apprehend that this is by any manner of means the last effort we shall have to increase salaries. I think that we shall have a number more; and I am not, therefore, at all surprised to see the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] introducing a proposition to go back and include all who have held office, without limitation as to time. But the gentleman says that he does it by way of justice to his Whig friends. He says my proposition that Democrats were worth more than Whigs is not right. Does not the gentleman show that my argument is right, when he admits that his Whig secretary in Oregon was a defaulter?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. No, I did not. His account remains unsettled.

Mr. LETCHER. I tell you that when the accounts remain unsettled, there is something wanting to foot up the balance. That is pretty generally the case, I think. [Great laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman enlarges the idea I meant to convey. I did not mean to enlarge the salaries of every man who had gone before. I say that if you put up the salaries of gentlemen now doing service in the Territory, you ought to do full justice, and pay those who have acted in these same Territories for four or five years back, the same sum.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not want to put them up. So the gentleman's argument is lost as to me. I was against even this clerk's bill, which had much of the principle contained in the amendment of my friend from Ohio. That went back. It was retrospective in its operation, and increased salaries for a year back, almost. I was against that. I am against all these retrospective acts; and I am against all appropriations of money here unless the Administration shoulder the responsibility, and tell us that it is needed for a proper purpose. It is their business to make these recommendations. It is their business to furnish the estimates, and then for us to decide whether they are right or wrong. Let them take their proper responsibility, and send their estimates here. If an increase of salaries is demanded, or if an increase of expenditures is demanded, why then let them show it. If they do, I am prepared to vote for it. I am not prepared to do it otherwise. I am not prepared to have it said that the officers of this Government did not ask an increase which the two Houses of Congress forced on them.

Mr. KERR. I desire simply to remark, in reply to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM,] that whatever appropriations may heretofore have been made by Congress, with a view to establish libraries in the Territories, I believe it is not pretended by anybody that any professional or law libraries have been established in the Territories.

Mr. DUNHAM. It is very true that they have not been established expressly as law libraries, but I understand that there are libraries expressly for the use of the officers of the Territory.

Mr. KERR. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DUNHAM. And I suppose that these very reports and statutes at large have been embraced in the purchases for those libraries. If they have not been, they undoubtedly should have been.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. If the gentleman will allow me, I will tell him what I know about the custom of the Government in relation to the statutes at large. The judges of Oregon Territory have been furnished by the Government of the United States with sets of the statutes at large. They were sent to me, and I distributed them equally among the judges of the Territory. Now, if that is not the custom of the Government, we in Oregon got so much more than we were entitled to. But I incline to think that the judges of all the Territories have been furnished with the statutes at large.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We can amend the amendment by adding a proviso that these books shall only be furnished to those Territories which have not already received them.

Mr. DUNHAM. I should like to ask the gentleman from Oregon whether the reports and statutes are not included in the purchase, and do not also form a part of the territorial library?

Mr. LANE. They are in the territorial library of Oregon. Whether they have been procured for the other Territories I cannot say.

Mr. DUNHAM. Undoubtedly they have. The gentleman from North Carolina will find that I am entirely right. The gentleman from Oregon says that these books have been furnished for Oregon Territory. Now, liberal appropriations have been made for the purchase of libraries for all the other Territories also; and if these other Territories have not expended the money with equal providence and care, the fault is their own.

Mr. KERR. I will modify my amendment in the way suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] by inserting the words "to which they have not heretofore been furnished."

Now, let me say a word or two only. I am a little surprised at the objection which is urged to this bill by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER.] Of all men upon this floor, he is the very last that I should have suspected of waiting for Executive dictation in the discharge of his duty as a Representative of the people. Now, I hold that here we are at liberty ourselves to inquire what is necessary to be done, and, being satisfied of what the public interest demands, we ought to do it, whether the Administration in power will take the responsibility of advising it or not. I care not who is in power; whether the party to which I belong, or the party to which I am opposed—

Mr. WADE, (interrupting.) I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina how this amendment affects the question of congressional non-intervention and popular sovereignty in the Territories? [A laugh.]

Mr. KERR. About as much as the gentleman's question affects this bill. It has nothing in the world to do with it. [Laughter.] I was about to observe that it matters not to me who is in favor. I care not whether it be a Whig or Democratic Administration, or whether they are for or against a measure. I will cheerfully give it my support, if I am satisfied that it deserves it, no matter what the powers that be may do or say, and I am sure that my friend from Virginia would do the same. If there is any man upon this floor to whom I look for an independent lead, he is the man; and I would as soon have suspected any other man here to inquire what the Executive wished to be done before he acts here, as the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER.] I think he did not do himself justice in that respect, but will do so if an opportunity is afforded him.

Mr. LETCHER. I certainly am much obliged to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] for the compliment he has paid me. In regard to waiting for recommendations from the Executive Departments before acting upon bills here, I think I can say that I am no more likely to be influenced by them than any other man upon this floor. It strikes me, however, in this case, that we ought to know what is expected to be done, and that it would be advisable to wait until we get some suggestions informing us what we really need.

Mr. KERR. I was about to observe, when I was interrupted, if I had to inquire for information at all with regard to my duty, I would inquire of my equals, and not of any masters.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the committee rise, so that we can ascertain from the President, or some other Executive officer, whether they have got a library in the Territory or not.

Mr. DUNHAM. I think that the section, even as amended by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. KERR,] is certainly not a judicious one, as I think I can satisfy the committee in a very few minutes. We have, as I stated before, made most liberal provisions for libraries in the Territories. These governments are in themselves evanescent; they cannot remain long. In a short time the territorial governments must be changed for State governments. Why, then, should we go beyond what we have done heretofore in providing libraries for officers of Territories, who will not long, at furthest, continue to need them? Why should we provide libraries for officers holding their offices at the will of the Executive, and may not, and probably will not, be continued in office over four years, especially if there should be a change in the politics of the Executive of the General Government; and if not before changed, must soon pass away when the territorial organizations give place to State governments.

Mr. PHILLIPS. But they will have successors.

Mr. DUNHAM. Who will be their successors, when the offices cease with the territorial Government for which they were created? Your government ceases, the office ceases, and, I take it, the succession ceases also. There will be no successor; there can be none.

Mr. KERR made some remark in reference to libraries for the judges of the district courts of the United States, who would be the successors, which was imperfectly heard by the reporter.

Mr. DUNHAM. Your territorial court is composed of three judges; your district courts will be composed of one. You will have three sets of books, besides the set now in the territorial library, in the very place, by the way, where these officers need them, the capital of the Territory. You will have three sets of books there, while you have but one district judge to use them.

Now, there is one thing more that I desire to say in regard to this bill, while I am upon the floor. I think we are increasing all these salaries with a great deal of recklessness and prodigality. I speak particularly of the men—

Mr. CULLOM, (interrupting.) I move that the committee do now rise and report to the House. It is not possible for us to get through to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield the floor for that motion?

Mr. DUNHAM. No, sir, not yet. I will complete my remarks, and then, if the committee desire to rise, they can do so. I shall be brief.

In regard to these salaries, I was saying, I speak particularly to gentlemen who make such earnest professions of the doctrine of State rights. We are increasing the salaries of all the Federal officers to an extent much above the salaries of officers doing similar duties under the State governments. And the tendency of all this is to destroy all disposition to take office under the State government, and induce an inordinate desire for office under the Federal Government. To withdraw the best talent of the country from the service of States, and absorb it in this great central power, must of course soon destroy the dignity and independence of the State sovereignties. This tendency is all wrong.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to interrupt him with a question?

Mr. DUNHAM. Certainly.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana this question: Whether or not, if any person receive these books, they will not revert to the Government when the office becomes extinct?

Mr. DUNHAM. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Arkansas, by asking a question in return: Did he ever know anything belonging to the General Government to be returned? If he ever knew an instance of that kind, then I think there may be something appropriate in his question.

Mr. BERNHISEL. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to make a remark?

Mr. DUNHAM. Of course; I yield it entirely.

Mr. BERNHISEL. I merely desire to state that the judges of the supreme court of the United States for the Territory of Utah were supplied with the United States Statutes at Large, up to the end of the first session of the Thirty-Second Congress.

The question was then taken by division on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. KERR.] Only twenty-nine members voted in the affirmative.

[Cries of "Count the other side."]

Mr. ORR. Mr. Chairman, we will be evidently without a quorum if a further count is taken. I call for tellers, and then I move that the committee do now rise and report to the House.

The motion was put, and agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, the Chair reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and especially the order relative to the territorial business, and had instructed him to report to the House three bills, which were adopted with amendments.

Mr. KERR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly, at half past three o'clock, p. m., adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 2, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky, in favor of a donation of land to that State for educational purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kentucky, in favor of so amending the act of Congress granting lands to certain officers and soldiers, or their widows and minor children, that in case there be no widow or minor children, the provisions of said act shall embrace the adult children; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WADE, at the request of Mr. SMITH, of Connecticut, presented the memorial of Alvan Underwood and sixty-nine others, citizens of Woodstock, Connecticut, praying for the adoption of measures, by treaties with foreign countries, which shall in future prevent wars, and refer all national disputes and controversies to arbitration; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a petition of inhabitants of the town of Farmington, Connecticut, praying the reduction of ocean postage to a uniform rate of two cents; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a memorial of William D. Sands and forty-nine others, citizens of Hadlyme, Connecticut, protesting against the passage of the Nebraska bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHASE presented a memorial of the Society of Friends of Indiana, composed of twelve thousand members, praying the rejection of the Nebraska bill, or of any bill which will introduce slavery into the Territories; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented a petition of citizens of Iowa, praying the establishment of a post road from Dubuque, via New Wine, thence on the new State road, via Strawberry Point, Robertson's Ford, and West Union, to Decorah; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a petition of citizens of Fayette county, Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the bill for organizing the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, presented a petition of citizens of the State of New Jersey, and a petition of citizens of the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of the Nebraska and Kansas bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Burlington county, New Jersey, praying that all those soldiers who have served in any of the wars of the United States, may be granted one hundred and sixty acres of land; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GEYER presented a petition of citizens of the United States, of the Jewish religion, residing in Missouri, praying that measures may be taken to obtain for American citizens of every creed, residing or traveling in foreign countries, a just degree of civil and religious freedom; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the memorial of Franklin Chase, praying that his claim in relation to the confiscation of the schooner Oregon, adversely reported upon, may be recommitted to the Committee on Claims; which, with the papers on file in relation to the subject, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORTON presented the petition of F. A. Underwood and H. A. Crane, heirs of Jehu Underwood, praying the confirmation of their title to a certain tract of land; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Margaret Chandler, mother of Walter S. Chandler, of the Army, who was drowned while in the discharge of his duty, praying a pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of S. T. Van Derze, an officer of the quartermaster's department in the war of 1812, praying an amendment of the bounty land and pension laws, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Summers, widow of Cornelius Summers, who served in the last war with Great Britain, as a substitute for one Gray, praying to be allowed bounty land, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John McVey, a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, praying a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Benjamin Rowe, reported it back without amendment, accompanied by a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of George W. Gibson, reported it back without amendment, accompanied by a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred additional documents in the case of Benjamin Burton, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of James Stewart, of Stamford, Delaware county, New York, praying a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EVANS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Frederick Vincent, administrator of Le Caze and Mallet, praying the payment of money advanced during the revolutionary war, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom were referred the memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico, respecting Indian depredations in that Territory, and the petition of John B. Chapman and Clarinda P. Chapman, praying that steps may be taken to civilize the Indians at Puget's Sound, in Washington Territory, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON, from the Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the petition of Denton Offutt, praying Congress to purchase his system for the improvement of the breeds of domestic animals, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, granting the right of way to the St. Louis and Iron Mountain railroad, through the arsenal magazine and Jefferson barracks tracts, reported it back with amendments.

SURVEY OF COAL FIELDS.

Mr. BADGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the President of the United States to cause an examination and survey to be made of the coal fields on and in the neighborhood of Deep river, in the State of North Carolina, with a view to the establishment of a national foundry and armory.

NEW MAIL ROUTE.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a mail route from Monteville, to Galesville and Douglass's Mills, to Black River Falls, in Wisconsin.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

A joint resolution authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the expenses of the Board of Commissioners appointed by the Territorial Assembly of Oregon to prepare a code of laws, also to adjust the expenses of collecting and printing certain laws and archives of the Territory of Oregon; and

A bill for the relief of Grafton Baker.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill for the construction of certain military roads and wells in the Territory of New Mexico.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted the following report:

The undersigned, managers of the Senate and House of Representatives, upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the amendments to House bill No. 47, being "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending the 30th June, 1855," have met, and after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend that the Senate recede from its first amendment to said bill; and, also, that the Senate recede from its non-concurrence with the House amendment to the third amendment to that bill.

R. M. T. HUNTER,
JAMES SHIELDS,
JOHN BELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEO. W. JONES,
WILLIAM H. RISSELL,
JOHN G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The first amendment of the Senate from which the committee recommended that it should recede, was to insert:

"For repairs and additions to professors' quarters, $5,000."

The third amendment of the Senate, was to add the following as an additional section:

"Be it further enacted, That the compensation of the professors of French and drawing be made equal to that of the professors of the other departments, and the compensation of the master of the sword be $1,200 per annum."

The amendment of the House in which the Senate originally non-concurred, was to strike out the words:

"Professors of French and drawing be made equal to that of the professors of the other departments, and the compensation of the"—

So as to make the section read:

"SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That the compensation of the master of the sword be $1,200 per annum."

Mr. SHIELDS. I will state that, for fear of losing the whole bill, we had to recede from our position, but I really hope we shall persist hereafter until we do justice to these professors.

The report was concurred in.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. WELLER to amend the following amendment, reported by Mr. SEBASTIAN from the Committee on Indian Affairs, by striking out $125,000, and inserting $200,000:

For defraying the expenses of continuing the removal and subsistence of the Indians in California to five military reservations, in accordance with the plan submitted by the superintendent of Indian affairs of that State, and approved by the President, the sum of $125,000: Provided, The sub-agents created by this act shall be appointed by the superintendent, subject to confirmation by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed one for each reservation nor five in all. Said reservations to contain not less than five, nor more than twenty-five thousand acres. And the said superintendent is authorized to apply out of the sum hereby appropriated, not exceeding $25,000 in the extinguishment of conflicting titles and rights to said reserved lands at a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre for a valid and indefeasible title to the lands so purchased: And Provided, The State of California shall cede the necessary jurisdiction in such cases.

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, embracing the expenses of travel of the superintendent and agent, &c., $35,000.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I moved an amendment to the amendment, to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$200,000." An amendment was also moved by my colleague to strike out all after the word "California," in the amendment reported from the committee; which is the question now to be taken?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The Senator who is now on the floor first moved to strike out "$125,000," and insert "$200,000." His colleague subsequently moved an amendment to the amendment of the committee. It will be read if the Senator desires it.

Mr. BADGER. What is it?

Mr. WELLER. I apprehend that there is some error in this.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again put the question if desired.

Mr. WELLER. The motion which I made yesterday—

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California will allow the amendment to be read, as the Senator from North Carolina desires it.

The amendment of the committee was read; and the amendment offered by Mr. GWIN was to strike out all after the word "California," and insert "for preserving peace with said Indians, $200,000," so that the amendment would read:

"For defraying the expenses of continuing the removal and subsistence of the Indians in California, and for preserving peace with said Indians, $200,000."

Mr. WELLER. The first question, I believe, is on my motion to strike out $125,000, and insert $200,000. I stated yesterday that the superintendent of Indian affairs in California called for an appropriation of $500,000.

Upon a consultation with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I advised him that, in my judgment, $200,000 would be amply sufficient to enable the Government to carry out the plan. It was, therefore, on my recommendation in part, that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs complied with the wish of the superintendent, but cut down the amount to $200,000. The Committee on Indian Affairs, not being able, as I think, to assign any reason at all, cut it down still further to $125,000. Now, I ask to restore the estimate of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $200,000. That, in my judgment, will be amply sufficient for the Indians in that country, there being now, according to the reports, one fourth of all the Indians in the United States located in California.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The pending question I now understand to be on the substitute offered yesterday by the Senator from California, for the amendment reported from the committee. I stated that I had not the slightest objection to increasing the amount, provided it was to be applied in the way the committee recommended. I yet have no objection, if the Senate think that $200,000 is required by the service in that country, to appropriate that amount; but the committee were unable to arrive at the conclusion that more than $125,000 could be profitably employed, because we had no information from the gentleman in charge of the administration of Indian affairs in California, of the disbursement of the quarter of a million which was appropriated last year. I think that, sir, is alone a sufficient reason for restricting and limiting the appropriation which the committee were disposed to give to the Department, below the sum recommended, which we now learn came from the Department on the suggestion of the Senator from California. That is a mere matter of detail, however.

But I understand that the amendment to the amendment goes further, and involves a departure from the plan adopted by Congress and the Executive heretofore, and to restore the old, and what I understood to be the exploded system of Indian administration in that State, which existed prior to the act of the last session of Congress. The amendment, as now proposed by the Senator from California, would be restoring the plan of appropriating general amounts for the general purpose of preserving peace with the Indians in California. By referring to the history of the administration of that plan, it will be seen that such had been the magnitude of the evils that had grown out of it; such had been the signal failure of that system heretofore, that, on the 3d of March last, the Senate, almost without a dissenting voice, adopted the system which is now in force there, and which, I think, affords the only efficient plan for the protection and civilization of the Indian population of that State against that inevitable and irresistible agency—the encroachment of the white man.

That system, so far as it has worked, has worked efficiently, expensively, it is true, as every system of administration in that State must necessarily work from the inflated state and condition of things there at this time. That is a difficulty which we must expect to meet, and which we must face. It is a difficulty which we are to overcome, and overcome now; for an experiment where, first tried must involve the expenditure of amounts startling to us, from which we must expect that the development of the system will recover itself in the process of time.

But, sir, does the old system, for which the Senator now proposes to abandon this experiment, ever work with greater satisfaction than that which was adopted on the recommendation of the committee at the last session, and whose fruits are successful up to this time, although it costs an immense amount of money? I think not. We all remember the fruit of the old system, for which an appropriation was made. Commissioners were sent out there, and almost the first results of their labor was the enactment of some nineteen or twenty treaties, which were returned here, involving the Government in the expenditure of $800,000 or $1,000,000. It is very true that we have not paid it; but this shows the operation of the system. The very first step which was made in its progress broke it down, and it has not been able to be revived.

I appeal to the Senators from that State, if we abandon the only system which has worked with anything like results corresponding to our expectations, and go back to the system of general appropriation—to the abandoned and exploded system which never worked with efficacy—what are we to expect? Are we to expect results more flattering than those developed in the operation of this system? I think not. I am disposed, therefore, to adhere to that system tenaciously, until it shall be, by experiment, proved to have been a failure or a successful policy. It is the same which we adopt in reference to all the Indian tribes at this time. It has been ingrafted on our late treaties. It has been ingrafted on one or two appropriations in the Indian appropriation bill; and we intend to propose and insist upon it as a system of general Indian appropriation, believing, as I think, that it affords the only prospect of permanently civilizing and giving fixed agricultural habits to that people.

As I before stated, I make no point upon the amount of money. If $200,000 is required instead of $125,000, I am willing to acquiesce in the sense of the Senate on that; but I am opposed to that amendment which involves the abandonment of the system on which the past appropriations have been made, and proposes the restoration of one which never brought forth good fruit, and which has been heretofore abandoned. I think, sir, it is more wise in us to pursue some system with consistency, with something like a dignity of purpose; and not be changing and vacillating between one system and another, and going back to a policy which never has, under the most favorable circumstances, led to anything but signal failures.

Mr. BELL. I concur entirely in the views expressed by the Senator from Arkansas; but I should like to make an inquiry of him in reference to an objection which he states, that the United States have no power to make reservations in the State of California. Why is it that treaties have not been made with these Indian tribes? I know that there were treaties made in such a form and under such circumstances, that the Senate rejected them, or the Executive, perhaps, thought proper not to submit them to the Senate for rejection or ratification. But why is it that no subsequent attempt has been made to make treaties with these Indian tribes? I take it for granted that there is public domain there, in the various gorges of the mountains, where they would not interfere with the population now in California.

A treaty is the only method of which I am aware, by which, under the Constitution, we can secure reservations in order to make the experiment, and I have been surprised, under the circumstances, that no such treaties appear to have been attempted of late, as far as I am informed. Perhaps it may be that they are in progress now, or that instructions have been transmitted to make them, but if there be territories belonging to the United States in California, by treaty, we can certainly secure the Indians in the enjoyment of those reservations just as we have done in all other cases, and just as we are authorized directly by the Constitution to do, where the United States are the owners of the unappropriated domain, and where the Indians have not been incorporated as members of the State by law. In that case we have no power.

It was suggested in debate yesterday, that the people or the Legislature of California would not, perhaps, give their consent to this plan.

Rumors were stated as existing in California, that perhaps east of the Sierra Nevada some country did exist on which the Indians might be located. I suppose, if there be any territory unappropriated by law, it would be in the power of the Government to select portions of the public domain on which to make this experiment. But my object in rising was to get information from the Senator from Arkansas, to get him to inform me, if he knew, why it was that this preliminary step had not been taken?

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the Senator from Tennessee—for I really wish the benefit of his information on this subject—whether he thinks we would have the right to take a cession of the exclusive jurisdiction from the State of California for Indian reservation? That seems to me to be a point of doubt. I merely wish to ask the question to get the information from the Senator.

Mr. BELL. I only refer the honorable Senator to the practice of the Government from Washington's administration down to this time. The Government has never undertaken to exercise the powers of sovereignty over the Indian tribes, it is true, so far as to give them the fee-simple in the domain. We do not do that by treaty, and it is not necessary for the experiment to be made that we should give them anything but the usufructory enjoyment; but that we can continue indefinitely.

In those States, for example, in Texas, where the Government owns no public domain, the United States have forborne, for they have not had the power, to make any such reservations. That would have to be done with the consent of the Legislature of the State. But my experience is, that the Government from its foundation, has felt at liberty, and has executed the power of making permanent reservations, not giving to the Indians the fee-simple of the soil in any State, but by treaty stipulations, protecting the Indians in the enjoyment of those reservations, and this under the express power of the Constitution authorizing the Government to make treaties with the Indian tribes within any States of the Union, those tribes not being members of such State, not being recognized as such.

Mr. RUSK. I do not apprehend that the United States can take the jurisdiction of any land in California for the use of the Indians, without the consent of California. The United States, though, have certainly the authority and power to set off for the use of the Indians, any amount of territory they choose, and prescribe rules and regulations for their government. The Constitution expressly gives the power to Congress to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes; and under that article of the Constitution it has been constantly the practice of the Government to set aside portions of the country for the use of the Indians, and establish certain rules to prevent encroachments on them, and thus carry out the power expressly granted by the Constitution.

Now, I should be very sorry to see this attempt in California abandoned. I should feel extreme reluctance to see it abandoned; and I should also feel extreme reluctance to make any rules or regulations in regard to the Indians which should be distasteful to the State of California. I know how these things are. At the time these reservations were selected and taken the country was not settled. There is a population going into California rapidly, and perhaps encroaching on the Indians; and this may lead to some inconveniences. I do not think, however, that we ought to abandon the plan. To abandon the policy I think would be wrong. The reason given for it is simply that the superintendent of Indian affairs there has not made a report of the fund which he last received.

This is rather an extraordinary time for the Indian appropriation bill to be in the Senate. I know nothing of the facts in relation to the report, except what is stated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I have a great deal of confidence in the superintendent, in his intelligence and energy, and the character of the man, so far as my acquaintance extends with him. We have reports from him that he has collected a number of Indians; and that they have gone to work, and are learning to farm, and make provision for themselves, and so far are getting along admirably well.

I think the best plan would be to compromise this measure somewhat. I am not disposed to stint California, or to stint the Indian Bureau in the appropriations necessary to carry out this plan. One of the Senators from California, and perhaps both, yesterday rather opposed the obtaining of any reservation on which to place the Indians. Now, I would not be willing to vote to abandon this measure, but would make the appropriation as proposed in the amendment offered by the committee. I am not disposed to confine myself to the sum recommended by the committee, of which I happen to be a member. I am willing to vote for any reasonable sum that may be necessary.

I would propose to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the Senator from California, that we increase the appropriation to a reasonable amount for this object. I think, myself, in the first law which was passed, authorizing the reservation, twenty-five thousand acres of land was too much, as was mentioned by one of the Senators yesterday. I think eight thousand acres in a place is amply sufficient. There is a less exposure to the collisions which will naturally take place between them and the white people; and I think that eight thousand acres is as much as ought to be selected in such a way by the head of the Indian Bureau or the proper officer—perhaps the superintendent of Indian affairs in California would be the best judge of that—so as not to throw the white population near the Indians.

I have no objection to increasing the appropriation; but as it seems to be distasteful to California—she may exterminate the Indians, it is true; but in doing that many valuable lives would be lost, and there would be uncertainty and difficulty on the frontier; it would be cruel to the Indians, and hurtful, I think, to the State of California, because valuable lives would be lost, and a formidable and troublesome enemy would be had upon the borders, assassinating the peaceful citizens—I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to increase the appropriation, and to make its expenditure, and the further progress of the affair, dependent upon some provision that it shall be expended in the manner proposed, with the assent of the State of California.

Mr. WALKER. In the report of the superintendent of Indian affairs for California, he asks that there shall be appropriated the further sum of $500,000 to enable him to proceed with his scheme for the Indians in California. While that proposition is under consideration in the Indian bureau, it is deemed, in concurrence with the views, as we hear, of one of the Senators from California, that the sum asked for by the superintendent is too large; and the sum of $200,000 is finally settled upon in the Indian bureau. The appropriation of that sum is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. In their investigation and inquiry into this matter, the Committee on Indian Affairs find, that as yet, a large unexpended balance remains in the hands of the superintendent for that section of country. I believe that unaccounted for balance is about $180,000.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Nearer $250,000.

Mr. WALKER. I am told that my recollection is not correct; that there is nearly $250,000 unaccounted for, and yet in the hands of the superintendent of Indian affairs in that section of country. Well, sir, there are other circumstances connected with the expenditure of that money which it is unnecessary for me to mention. There are those who have looked into them more carefully than I have; and if it be important that they should be mentioned at all in this investigation, it will be done by others, and perhaps by the honorable Senator from Missouri, our Presiding Officer, [Mr. ARCHISON]; but I do not know that it will be necessary to advert to them at all.

This unexpended or unaccounted for balance remains in the hands of the superintendent. Then, while the Committee on Indian Affairs had the subject under consideration, they deemed that an additional $125,000 would be amply sufficient for the ensuing fiscal year. I do not think there is any one who, upon looking at the subject, can come rationally to any other conclusion. I can see no necessity for adding to the $250,000, of which no account has yet been given, the further sum of $300,000, making $450,000 to be expended by the superintendent of Indian affairs in California for the next fiscal year.

This session of Congress will last probably until towards the first of September. Congress meets again on the first Monday in December, and if disaster should arise from the appropriation being too small, it will be an easy matter for Congress to remedy the evil. I think still, therefore, that the appropriation of $125,000 in addition to that now in the hands of the superintendent of Indian affairs in California, will be amply sufficient.

But, sir, we were apprised, yesterday, that another difficulty has arisen; that in California serious objections are growing up to this policy of the Government. The State, or the people of the State, are objecting to the location of the Indians upon these military reservations. I confess that what reflection I have been able to bestow on the subject, has brought my mind to the conclusion that we have not power to do it without the consent of California. Some are disposed to start the further question, whether we can do it with the consent of California, under the provisions of the Constitution. I am inclined to think, for one, that we can do it.

We have, then, under the state of the case, two propositions from the Senators from California. One proposes to appropriate $200,000 generally, which must be seen by the Senate is an abandonment of the scheme now attempted to be executed in California, of the scheme established, or entered upon at the last Congress, and going back again to the old system of general appropriations for the benefit of the Indian tribes. The other proposition is nothing more nor less than to increase the sum from $125,000 to $200,000, and to go on with the plan upon which we have entered. I think the Senate had better vote them both down, and take the recommendation of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I should regret exceedingly to see the Senate abandon the plan which has been commenced. It must be borne in mind by every Senator, that the condition of our country is such now, that we must necessarily resort to some plan by which we shall establish a permanent system for the Indian tribes. It is got so now, that we have no other place to send them; we find them in their condition surrounded by the whites. The last inch of territory is being organized. We have no place then to send them beyond the limits of these countries organized for civil government. Finding them, then, as we do, in different localities of the United States, it would seem that we must necessarily adopt some permanent system for their government, for their control, for the amelioration of their condition. It cannot be done, it would seem, in any other way than upon the plan of locating them permanently upon reservations, granting these reservations for their purpose, and sacredly maintaining the grant.

If it is proposed to locate them in this way, within the borders of States already established, as I before remarked, it is my opinion that we would have to obtain the consent of the State. In the State of Wisconsin, that consent has been given, as I remarked yesterday, to the location there of one of the Indian tribes, the Menomonees. Their reservation has been surveyed for them, and they are located upon it. There is there a good superintendent. He is suggesting, from time to time, plans by which the Government shall proceed in the matter, and bring the Indians to habits of industry, and teach them agriculture, and establish among them schools. So far as the matter has gone, we can see at all events, that the Indians have become contented. They have thus become, collectively and individually, interested in the policy of the Government. They are beginning to see, as well as the white population must see, that they have now to conform their habits and their lives to this permanent state of the case; that they can go nowhere else. Seeing this, as they rationally must do, they begin to manifest an interest which is really pleasing to those who look with an eye of regard on the condition of the Indian tribes. They are beginning to manifest that rational view of their condition, and I do sincerely believe, that under the quiet management of that Indian tribe, it will be soon seen that they will become agriculturists, that they will send their children to school, that they will imbibe education, and finally become, so far as such a race can become, good citizens.

This is but in miniature the plan which is proposed here, except that in Wisconsin they are not under military rule. It is but in miniature the plan, with that exception, which is proposed in California. There the number of Indians is vastly greater; but I have no doubt in my own mind, that when they, by contact with the whites, under this system, which is one of protection, shall see that it is the last thing that can be done for them, they will then, themselves, lend their hand as helpers to the Government, and co-work with the Government in the amelioration of their own condition. But if we now abandon it, what are we to do? If we no longer pursue this plan, but indefinitely, vaguely, and generally make appropriations for their subsistence, and for the maintenance of peace with them, what can they see in the prospect, in the future, of hope to themselves, that they are to have anything like a permanent condition? They can see nothing which they will have to interest them now to fix their minds upon a future and a better condition. But if the plan shall be persevered in, I have no doubt, in my own mind, that an interest will grow up among them, and that very soon, not only in point of expense, but in point of trouble and of exertion on the part of the Government, the system will vastly ameliorate itself. I cannot, however, see the necessity, for the next fiscal year, of increasing the expenditure to the amount proposed. I do not believe that it will be a benefit to the Indians. I do not believe that it will be a benefit to the Government. The Government, in trying this scheme, ought to do it cautiously; it ought to move cautiously; it ought to see that it has a faithful superintendent; that he treats the Indians fairly; that he is honest towards the Government, and prompt in making his reports; and that he gives results so that Congress can, at all times, have under its supervision the working of the plan as it proceeds.

But, at present, I must say it is a subject of regret to me, as an individual taking a deep interest in this matter, that the superintendent has not been more prompt than he has in making his reports; that he has not been more prompt than he has in giving us information of the working of the system in detail; that he should at all be in default in giving us the fullest information, the fullest account of the expenditures, and the fullest statement that he possibly could, by which we might be guided. While he has not done so, he may not be amenable to censure; but it occurs to me, and it probably will occur to the entire Senate, that it is a matter which should render us cautious in making large appropriations, and handing them over to the same hands, which seems to be negligent, so far, in reporting the expenditure of the money that has been already appropriated.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I think a very short retrospect of the history of the policy of the country in regard to the Indians, will show us why it is that we have never been successful heretofore in civilizing them by bringing them into reservations, and why it is that henceforth we are to be successful in that policy. When we began to bring the Indians into reservations in the Atlantic States, we found a portion of them desirous, and ready, and well disposed to adopt the habits of civilized life; but we found another and perhaps a much larger proportion, always retaining their migratory dispositions, tastes, and habits; and the circumstances of the country were such that, while the white man crowded upon the reservations that were made for the Indians who desired to remain, there was a vast and illimitable wilderness beyond, to which the Indian might resort, and where, instead of being cramped in small reserves, he might enjoy his native liberty in new and fresher and better hunting grounds. And, therefore, the Indians were always divided, and, in the divisions, the colonies which were reserved at home were neglected, and the tribes we sent abroad were poor, helpless, and dependent upon the favor of the Government.

As the honorable Senator from Wisconsin has said, we have reached the end of that condition of circumstances. There are no longer new hunting grounds to be assigned to the Indians; and when we assign them a reservation, it must be the last, and they must conform to the habits of civilized life, and in proportion as they do so, contract their disposition and increase their ability to cultivate the earth, so that they can submit to a contraction even of the limits of those reservations themselves. When we shall have attained this condition of circumstances, I believe that there will be found to be no difficulty in bringing the Indians into the habits and customs and pursuits of civilized man. Such is the condition at which we have already arrived in the State of New York, in regard to the remnants of the Six Nations. After division upon division, and after removing what were called the heathen or savage portion further west, from time to time, we have at last, reservations there in which the Indians are becoming agriculturists, and are becoming moral, upright, sober, intelligent, and virtuous citizens, maintaining schools, carrying on merchandise, and so conducting themselves, in both reserves which we have made for them, small indeed though they are, as to disarm all prejudice on the part of the white man, and win the favor of the Governor of the State, and of all classes of citizens by whom they are surrounded.

I think the people of California will find that they will not be crowded by these Indians, if they allow them reservations ample for the present purposes, and that the pacific disposition which they always manifest when necessity for a resort to the chase has passed away, will win the favor of the people of that State, as it does, I am sure, in all the other States where they are gathered together into reservations, from which they have no longer any disposition to escape.

To the question which was put by the honorable Senator from Virginia as to whether the Government has a right to take a cession from California, or to take the consent of California to set apart a reservation for the Indians in that State, I answer, that the General Government has exclusive power to negotiate by treaty with the Indians; and it has also the power to make arrangements, with the consent of the States. There can be no doubt that it would be unwise, on the part of the Government, to force Indian population into the territory of a State without its consent; but after the consent of the State has been obtained, the power is ample to place them upon their own native ground, or, if you have not that ground, to place them upon any other which you possess, by virtue of your right of eminent domain in the States, or even on that which you may obtain by treaty or purchase from other Governments.

Mr. GWIN. My great desire is to have a sufficient appropriation for the purpose of subsisting these Indians during the approaching fiscal year. In regard to these reservations, as I stated yesterday, it is a new policy. It may or may not be beneficial. The reservation which has been already selected is at Tejon Pass, and is certainly one of the most beautiful places in the world. I have been there, and certainly I never saw a more beautiful location. It is well adapted to the purpose, because it is a very rich piece of ground, and is almost surrounded by mountains. On the east, south, and west, is the coast range of mountains. That range and the Sierra Nevada come together near this point. Immediately north is the Tulare valley, which cannot be cultivated. I do not know of any other place in the world where those Indians could be so isolated from the white population as at that point, and it is one of the most beautiful places I have ever seen. That portion which is occupied by the Indians is very productive, and will no doubt yield enough to subsist a great number of Indians. I think ten thousand acres, proposed by my colleague as the limit of any one reservation, will cover all the land there which they need for cultivation.

I have not opposed this policy; but I am not in favor of forcing it on the people of California. I wish to have the amendment simply specify that the appropriation is for the removal, subsistence, and, I will add, settlement of the Indians. I wish to leave the matter with the Secretary of the Interior. Let him adopt that policy which he thinks wisest and best. Give him means to prevent collisions between the Indians and the whites. I have adopted the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] and will add to the amendment which I wish to propose, the word "settlement," so as to have the appropriation for the "removal, subsistence, and settlement," of the Indians. I think the main point is to give a sufficient amount and authority to the Secretary of the Interior. He has asked for a certain amount, and I am willing to give what he has asked for, and I wish to give him full discretion in the expenditure of the money.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that there are $180,000, or probably $200,000, in the hands of the superintendent of Indian affairs in California. I have no idea that he has anything like that amount. He has not yet made his returns. He has made large expenditures in farming operations, and for starting the Indians in them; and I think it will be ascertained that there is very little of the fund which he has not expended. I understand that he estimates the receipts from the produce which he expects to raise there this year at several thousand dollars. He must have spent a great deal of money in making the preliminary purchases, and obtaining plows and other agricultural implements, and everything necessary to start with. I think he has now two or three thousand acres in cultivation. The reservation is over a hundred miles from the sea-coast, and everything had to be transported there at a great expense. Now, the point which I make is, that we should appropriate the amount asked for by the Secretary of the Interior, and leave him discretion to continue the reservations, if the State of California shall yield her assent. It is more than probable that she will at the proper time.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that, under the circumstances, the amendment suggested by the Senator from California [Mr. Gwin] is proper. I think we had better confide this question to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and by the addition of the word "settlement" to the amendment first suggested by the Senator from California, we leave it open to him, to carry on the policy of reservations, if he finds that he can make such an arrangement with the State of California as will make it practicable. Under these circumstances, I am disposed to go for the amendment which the Senator has suggested; but, with regard to the amount, it seems to me that the Committee on Indian Affairs are right. The sum of $125,000 will probably be enough, especially as the other sum might have been estimated for under the supposition that we were bound to continue the policy of reservations. If we are not bound to continue it, and we have to make a discretionary appropriation, it seems to me that $125,000 will be enough under the circumstances. I suppose, however, the first vote will be as to fixing the amount, and after that, the question will come up on the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. Gwin.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, the plan for the location and government of the Indians on reservations in California, seems to have worked well so far; but time enough has scarcely elapsed to allow the Committee on Indian Affairs, or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to say, with certainty, whether it is one that can be universally applicable to all the tribes in that State or not. A good deal of money was expended during the last year upon one reservation, on which something like two thousand Indians, I believe, have been collected. It is evidently going to be a very expensive plan of governing the Indians; but, notwithstanding that it is likely to be so, I am prepared to give it my assent, so far as a further trial may be necessary.

I think there is no doubt that there is a very considerable portion of the appropriation of last year still unexpended, and in the hands of the superintendent. With that sum, and with the additional sum of $125,000 proposed by the committee to be appropriated, I think he will have an amount amply sufficient to give the system a fair trial. I think it would be unwise to appropriate a larger sum. I have no particular objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from California, [Mr. Gwin.] So far as I am concerned, I should be willing to adopt it; but what I meant to say particularly, was, that I regard the appropriation of $125,000 as abundantly sufficient, taken in connection with that which is in the hands of the superintendent unexpended.

Mr. STUART. I was not in my seat yesterday when this amendment was discussed; but on looking at the debate as reported, I see it stated that there are in the hands of this officer now $350,000. The chairman of the committee to-day, however, stated that there were about $250,000 unaccounted for.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Will the Senator allow me an opportunity of setting myself right, and also of fortifying what I was saying? The Senator informs me that I am reported as having said the other day that about $350,000 were uncounted for. I said about $250,000—the larger part of $250,000 were unaccounted for. I did not mean by that to say that the money has not been expended. I only intend to say that that amount of money has been withdrawn by the superintendent from the depository indicated by law. I suppose, as one of the Senators from California supposes, that a great deal of it has been expended. In all probability it has been; but returns, stating how it has been expended, or whether it has been expended or not, for the last three quarters, have never been received from the superintendent; so that we are left to conjecture whether he has expended the money or not.

Mr. STUART. It was for the purpose of obtaining that information that I rose at this time. Having obtained it, I wish to inquire of the Senate whether, when the superintendent has $250,000 in money unaccounted for in his possession, and three quarters, as I understand the chairman, have passed without any report of the condition of the funds in his hands, it is best to make any further appropriations at all? I confess that, with the lights which are before me at this time, I should not feel myself willing to appropriate another dollar, unless there be appended to the appropriation a proviso that it shall not be put into the hands of this superintendent until he has accounted for the money already in his hands. I do not know the fact, but from inquiry of one of the Senators, I understand that the bonds of this officer are probably $30,000. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, states that he had not made any report for the last three quarters, and there is a balance of $250,000 in his hands. Now, will the Senate go forward and appropriate $200,000, or even $125,000 more, under such circumstances?

Senators say they suppose this money has been expended. That is the reasonable supposition; at all events it is the charitable supposition. But an officer of this kind should make his reports. There is no reason assigned here why he has not made his quarterly returns, showing what money he has in his hands; and I confess, that unless something can be shown further than has at present been shown to the Senate, I shall feel entire reluctance to vote a single dollar. But if the Senate shall disagree with me upon that proposition, I shall, at the proper time, offer a proviso, that whatever sum is appropriated, shall not pass into the hands of this superintendent until he accounts for what he has already had.

Mr. RUSK. In regard to the superintendent, I believe it is generally agreed, so far as we have heard from him, that he has expended the money properly. It is true, as the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has said, that he has not returned his accounts in full as yet. There was evidently very great confidence reposed in him by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs when that officer put the whole of the appropriation at his disposal. The report, so far as we have any, as to the operation of the system, is that it is working admirably. The superintendent got the Indians together, and they are at work, and are getting on very well. Now, I do not pretend to say, for I know nothing about it, what is the reason why the superintendent's accounts are not here; but as I said before, this is a very early day for the Indian appropriation bill to come before the Senate. It was very nearly the end of the last session when the original appropriation was made, and it is usually near the end of the session before any appropriations are made. The superintendent may have thought that the usual course would be pursued this year, and that, if his accounts were in towards the close of the session, it would be time enough. At all events we have nothing upon which to predicate any improper use of the money by him. We have only the fact that his accounts are not returned. This is only presumptive; and my own opinion is, that he will satisfactorily account for the delay. I may be in error about that; but such is my judgment on the matter. I saw this gentleman frequently when he was before the Committee on Indian Affairs prior to the original appropriation being made. He bears a very high reputation so far as I know, and is certainly a man of very great intelligence and high integrity of character.

Mr. GWIN. I have had no intercourse at all with the superintendent of Indian affairs in California since I came to this city; but I understand that that gentleman was recently about to visit Washington, and a gentleman who traveled with him informed me that he had his accounts ready to bring on with him. He thought he had them in his possession until he arrived at Panama, when he ascertained that he had put the wrong bundle of papers into his trunk. It is more than probable that that is the cause of the returns not being here. I was very much surprised not to find his estimates here, such indeed as were necessary to be laid before the committees upon which to base the appropriation; and I ascertained, upon inquiry of a gentleman who has traveled with him, that he had taken the wrong bundle of papers when he left California, supposing them to contain his estimates and accounts, and probably that is the reason why his returns have not been made.

Mr. STUART. Perhaps the Senator from Texas, and the Senator from California, may have understood me as questioning the integrity of this gentleman. I made no such suggestion at all. I only stated the facts that appeared here, and that I thought the Senate ought to be cautious about putting into his hands further money until the delay was explained.

Mr. WELLER. I am very glad that the Senator from Michigan has made the declaration which he has just made—that he does not intend to impeach the integrity of the superintendent. It is unfortunate, perhaps, that his vouchers have not been sent to the Department; but I take it for granted that there has been an unavoidable delay. We all know the difficulty in getting papers from that part of the country to this; and I am a striking illustration, I presume, of that fact. When I was Boundary Commissioner, there was a great noise made in the Senate about my vouchers; and I believe that, because they did not arrive at the proper time, some were so uncharitable as to say that I was a defaulter. I lay under that imputation until it suited the convenience of the Government to settle my accounts, and pay me a balance of $5,000 or $6,000 which was owing to me. I say, therefore, it is fair to presume in this case, that this public officer has fairly expended the money intrusted to him. I know him to be a man of great intelligence, and of uncommon energy. I know that he was vigorously engaged when I left California, last fall, in carrying out the plan adopted by Congress at the last session. If there be any man in that State who, above all others, I would select to carry out this specific plan, it would be that very superintendent.

Now, Mr. President, I am unwilling to abandon this plan, if I can obtain the consent of the Legislature to these reservations. I desire that the plan shall be fairly tested; and if it does not, as I conceived in the beginning it would, turn out to be the only plan of saving the Indians from extermination, then, as a matter of course, you will have to make direct appropriations to feed them, upon the principle that it is cheaper to feed than to fight them.

I only desire, therefore, to increase the amount of the appropriations to a sum which I hold to be necessary, and which, in all probability, will be sufficient to put the reservations in such a situation as to enable the Indians to support themselves. A large number of Indians have already been congregated there. They have performed an incalculable amount of ditching and other hard labor, which one would have supposed could not have been extracted cheerfully from them. They will spend sometimes a week laboring day after day, and then procure some food, go to the mountain, wander about for three or four weeks, and return again to this farm as their home. It is their home, their abiding place. This is all we expect to accomplish by this plan. We do not intend to reduce them to a system of slavery. We do not desire that this Government shall make money by extracting labor from them; but we desire to teach them the important lesson of depending upon their own labor for their bread. We wish barely to extract labor enough from them to procure for them the necessities of life. By making an appropriation of $200,000, I doubt not this plan can be carried into such successful operation, that the Government will not hereafter be called upon to make appropriations for the support of these Indians. I desire to preserve them from extermination. If, however, as I said yesterday, the Legislature of my State sees proper to refuse to cede the jurisdiction, or to confer on the Federal Government the power to make these reservations, let the responsibility rest there. I do not desire that the blood of these murdered Indians shall be on my hands.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, there is from all quarters a notion started that I do not exactly comprehend. It seems to be conceded on all hands that it would be the true policy of the Government towards these Indians, and would be best for them that the system which has already been commenced in California, should be continued. But it has been suggested by both the Senators from California, and also by the Senator from Virginia and others, that it requires the assent of California to allow the continuance of this system. Now I confess my inability to understand that objection. These lands were reserved by the Government of the United States from sale. The public lands of California belong to this Government. The Government reserved, for military purposes, so many thousand acres of land in this, that, and the other portion of California. That the Government had a right to make such a reservation no one will doubt. Then, having a right to make this reservation, does it require the assent of the State of California to allow us to place these Indians upon that reservation? Senators concede that if the State of California would assent to this, it is not only the true policy of the Government, but it is true philanthropy towards the Indians. Now, for my life I cannot understand by what course of argument they make it out to be necessary for us to obtain the consent of California at all.

Mr. WELLER. I can put the Senator right. It is exceedingly desirable, as a matter of course, if you establish a military post on one of these reservations, that the Federal Government should exercise exclusive jurisdiction. Now, I said that that exclusive jurisdiction could not be obtained by the Federal Government without the assent of the Legislature of California. I do not doubt that, if the General Government owns land, it can go into that State and place the Indians upon it; but it cannot get exclusive jurisdiction without the consent of the State.

Mr. PRATT. I certainly understood that it would not have exclusive jurisdiction; but what, after all, is that? Why, if parties on these reservations should commit any offense against the laws of the State of California, they would be tried and punished under the local law of the State; that is all. Now, it is not material to us, it is not material to the system, which the Senators say is beneficial to both parties, that we should have this exclusive jurisdiction. It would be just as well for the Indians, that they should be tried by the local courts of California, as that they should be tried in the Federal courts. I do not, therefore, see that, for the beneficial purposes of the reservations, there is any necessity for our having exclusive jurisdiction over the territory.

The Senator concedes that if we have a right to the land we can place the Indians there, and can have them taught all the arts necessary to enable them to gain their own support. He concedes that we have a right to do this without consulting California about it. I am in favor of doing it. If $200,000 be necessary for the purpose, let us vote that amount. Do not let us, in the language of the Senator from California, have the blood of these murdered Indians upon our hands. Do not let us permit it to be left to California to determine whether they are to be murdered or not. It is the duty of this Government to protect them. We have placed them upon land belonging to us, where, it is conceded, they are protected, and where, it is conceded, they are taught. Let us give the necessary money. If $200,000 be needed for the purpose, let us vote it; but let us keep the Indians on our own land, and keep them beyond the control of those who desire to interfere with them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) Several Senators have suggested that the vote last taken was not understood by the Senate. The Chair will restate the question, and again take the vote. The amendment, as offered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, provides for the payment of $125,000. The Senator from California [Mr. WELLER] moves to strike out that sum, and insert $200,000.

The question being taken on this amendment to the amendment, there were, on a division—ayes 16, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. BELL. I hesitated to vote in the affirmative on this question after the suggestions which have been thrown out, but I wish to ask honorable Senators if it would not be a very easy matter to place this amendment in such a form as to be perfectly safe for the public interests? I do not understand that it is necessary to place this whole sum of money at any one time at the disposal of the superintendent.

Mr. WELLER. Certainly, it is not necessary; and I take it for granted the Department will not pay over any portion of the money now appropriated to the present superintendent, until he shall have accounted for the money he has already received.

Mr. BELL. Would the Department place $200,000 at any one time at his disposal?

Mr. WELLER. No, sir, of course not.

Mr. SEWARD called for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to inquire precisely on what amendment we are called upon to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is on the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] to the amendment of the committee to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$200,000."

Mr. WALKER. Then the Senate will understand that it is on the mere proposition to increase the amount reported by the committee.

Mr. WELLER. I have a remark to make in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee. I understood from the Secretary of the Interior, that the whole amount of the preceding appropriation was placed in the hands of the assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco. Instructions were then given to the superintendent not to draw over $20,000 at any one time.

Mr. BELL. I consider that the officer here is responsible, if he places the money in the hands of the superintendents imprudently; and as long as we have confidence in him, I do not see any great objection to increasing the sum as now proposed.

Mr. DAWSON. I should be glad if the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs would inform me how many Indians have been located on the reservation in California for the purpose of learning agriculture?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. According to the latest reports of the superintendent—and I may refer to a private letter which I have from him, which I received about the commencement of the session—there are about two thousand three hundred Indians on the reserve near the Tejon Pass. That is the only reserve which has been located under the authority of the law of last year, which allowed five to be located. The superintendent has succeeded in locating but one, in consequence of the difficulty of finding as large an amount of the public domain in any one body as would make up twenty-five thousand acres. On that one reserve he has congregated about two thousand three hundred Indians, and opened last year some seven or eight hundred acres to cultivation, and he expects to have between two thousand and two thousand five hundred acres in cultivation this year.

Mr. DAWSON. We appropriated $250,000 at the last session of Congress to remove and subside these Indians, and start them in the arts of agriculture. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is a very large sum of money to appropriate to make a commencement of a system; and now, without any report, satisfactory to this body, for I have seen none, we are asked to make an additional appropriation of $200,000, making altogether $450,000.

Mr. BELL. Not for this one reservation.

Mr. DAWSON. But for another reservation.

Mr. BELL. For others.

Mr. DAWSON. We are now in the month of May, and of course there can be no arrangement save clearing, or something of that kind, during the remainder of this year; yet now we are called upon to make this appropriation when we have no data, no statement upon the part of the vigilant officer engaged in the disbursement of the money, showing us the necessity of making a further appropriation.

Sir, this is a great system which we are trying, and we are met, in the beginning, with what is called a constitutional question, a States' right question, as to whether we can take lands in the heart of a sovereign State and set them off for the Indians in reservations of twenty-five thousand acres. There may be citizens who own the soil under the laws of Mexico when California belonged to that nation; and are we to surround those people with Indians? Are we to plant Indians directly in their midst without any consultation with them, and give to the Indians a title in the lands around these white people? Sir, this is a great movement which we are making.

The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs states a fact which is no doubt true, that it is difficult to find a body of land sufficient to place these people upon; and why? There is an abundance of land, but it is taken up by prior titles, hence the embarrassment arising out of the very mode and manner of appropriating the public lands. We are too precipitate in this matter. These Indians have been there through all time, so far as we have any knowledge. They came into this country with that portion of it which is known as California. They were subsisting there, and were maintaining themselves as occupants of the soil. Has the Government of the United States destroyed their occupant right? Has it driven them from the position which they occupied? Has this been done by the power of this Government? If not, has it been done by the power of the State government of California? Not at all.

But, sir, these Indians are said to be strays and waifs upon the land. Why, they are just as they were when we found them. The soil is just as it was when we took it, and they are entitled now to all the rights which they enjoyed then. We propose now to subside them by large appropriations annually from the Federal Treasury, when there are their lands and their hunting grounds, when there are the gold mines of the country, in which they can dig if they choose. If they can labor in the soil for agricultural purposes, they can certainly labor in the mines; but yet we are making an appropriation to convince these people that they need not labor, that they are the wards of the Government, and that they will be subsisted from the Treasury without the necessity of labor on their part. This is the education which we are giving them, an education well calculated to destroy them, and debar them from all progress whatever.

The Senator from New York has mentioned the course which his State has pursued towards the Indians that are there. They have been settled for the last seventy-five years immediately within the limits of that State; but instead of prospering, they are dwindling in numbers. It is true that some of them are intelligent and learned men now, but the tribes are dwindling away every day.

Now, sir, my idea on this question is, that we had better not make another appropriation, but wait until we can understand this matter well; and whenever we are about to determine this system, we should recollect that it will have to be applied to Nebraska and Kansas, and the other Territories of this country; we should fix it by a separate and independent bill, on which we can act understandingly. Let Congress know fully the effect of the measure. Let us not do all our important legislation connected with the Indian tribes, or any other portion of our people, by provisions in our appropriation bills.

I will go as far as any friend of California can desire to put these people in a condition where they shall be peaceful, but I do not want to do it by an act of legislation which will be oppressive to a portion of the people of California. If I were a citizen of that State, I would never submit to the Government crowding these people permanently around my home. It is a dangerous question to handle; and the rights of the State and of the people of that State ought to be considered. California is one of the finest States of this Union; and are not the California Indians as intelligent as the Chinese? The Chinese go there by thousands, delve in the mines, and make fortunes; and yet we are telling our California Indians, "Do not labor in the mines, but go and settle on a piece of land, and try to learn agriculture." Why take them from the grubbing hoe and the spade, and from the mines, where they might have made money? Why not encourage them to go to the diggings and make money by working for themselves, or hiring their services to others? Why tell them, "No, no; do not labor; we will gather you together and appropriate money to buy clothing and food to support you?" That is the doctrine. Is it beneficent? Is it kind? Is it philanthropic?

Under a Government like ours, said to be far superior to that of Mexico, are we to announce to the Indians that they cannot live under our benign influence, though they were able to subsist under the Government of Mexico? What a compliment is this to our institutions! What a compliment to the progress of this country! We heard nothing of starvation among these Indians when California belonged to Mexico. We heard nothing then of Indian desolation there. These things have sprung up since the acquisition of that country, and they are incident to the character of the people who went there almost without government and without law, and went into the mines. These are difficulties which do exist, and are very embarrassing, no doubt, in California. For myself I would rather that California should manage these Indians than that the General Government should do so, for the State would know better how to get along with them. But what I want to say is, that I am prepared to vote just as much money as any other man to protect the people of California and benefit these Indians, but I want to do it on such a principle that when I act I can understand what I am doing. When I am going to establish a system that is to be permanent—a system that will not only work in California, but in all our Territories, and even in the States where there are Indians located, I wish to do it intelligently. I know that it is embarrassing to exercise the power of the General Government over Indians within the limits of a State. I have been raised in a State where that was the case, and it gave rise to a constant series of difficulties and perplexities, and led to many conflicts between the two governments. If we adopt this plan of making large reservations in California, there will be such conflicts. It is a dangerous experiment, and one in which I do not wish to be instrumental until it is well prepared, well organized, and well arranged.

I repeat, we had better drop this appropriation for the present, and let the Senators from California ask for a committee, and let them digest a plan to organize the Indians properly. Let that be brought up as a separate proposition, which we can discuss and properly understand. Then, if the money be necessary, let us make an appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I cannot let this debate close without offering a correction to a remark made by the Senator from Georgia. He expressed what is, I think, the universal understanding, that there has been a decline—a decay of the Indian nations and races within the last seventy-five years—and he applied the statement especially to the Indians in the State of New York, once so independent, once so powerful, once the only republicans on this continent, and who have always been republicans. This has been the received opinion, which has gone into philosophy and gone into history. But, sir, some seven or eight years ago we caused a census to be taken of the Six Nations. We found them, to be sure, scattered by the hand of Providence, some of them remaining upon their ancient hunting grounds, others dispersed throughout Canada, others at Green Bay, others still further west, and others, again, further south. But the result of the whole was that when you came to correct the exaggerated estimates of the number of the Six Nations which were derived from tradition in the early settlement of the country, and to ascertain the whole number left, we found that they had not diminished, but, on the other hand, that they remained about the same. They have not increased as rapidly as the white man in a state of semi-civilization, or an initiatory stage of civilization, but at the same time they have not decayed by war and by famine as much as they did before. This is consolatory to those who believe that the experiment is humane, and certainly encouraging to those who felt impressed with the wisdom of the plan of drawing these Indians into reservations, and separating them from the corruptions, and from the violence of the whites.

Mr. PETTIT. Before I vote on this proposition, I wish to get a little more information, and I hope I shall be able to get it from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. If I understand it, this is a proposition from that committee to appropriate $125,000 to establish an Indian settlement in California, on the public lands of the country.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Five of them.

Mr. PETTIT. Five settlements or localities. The Senator from California moves in substance to add $75,000 to the amount proposed by the committee. His amendment is to strike out $125,000 and make the amount $200,000. Now, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether we are under any treaty or legal obligation to furnish this amount, or any other amount of money to the California Indians, or whether our relation towards them is not precisely what our relation is towards all the wild Indians with whom we have no treaties at all? In short, if we are under obligations to furnish means for the subsistence of these Indians, I wish to know whether we are not under like obligations to all other Indians with whom we have no treaties? Is this anything else than a moral obligation, if it is even that, and are we not under a like moral obligation to all the Indians within our jurisdiction? Can the Senator answer?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. In answer to the interrogatories of the Senator from Indiana, I can state, that our relations with the Indians of California are precisely such as they are towards all the Indian tribes with whom we have negotiated no treaties; and that we are under the same obligation, and no more, to provide for them as for other Indians with whom we have no stipulations to pay money. He may term the obligation moral or legal. It is, I believe, the common obligation of humanity. The Indians of California occupy towards this Government a position somewhat different from what our own Indians do; for, by the Spanish law, they were not regarded as having any interest in the country at all, but were always treated as mere tenants at sufferance; and the consequence was, that they were congregated together in the "Missions," by the different officers and subordinates of the Spanish and Mexican Governments, who were at different times sent among them. They were never regarded by those Governments as having any interest in the soil. We did, at one time, make treaties with these Indians; but the treaties were rejected by the Senate. This plan of collecting them together in five military reservations, to be carved out of the public domain of the United States, was adopted at the last session of Congress, and has been partially executed, to the extent of locating only one reserve.

Mr. WELLER. The Senator will allow me to say that it was never contemplated to make five reservations in California. The bill which was passed at the last session of Congress, authorized five reservations to be made in California, Utah, and New Mexico. It never designed that five reservations should be made in the State of California. I supposed there might probably be two or three there at the outside, and that the other two or three would be in Utah or New Mexico, or both.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The Senator from California states rightly the terms of the law. The Territories of Utah and New Mexico were embraced. I know the fact, however, to be, that the superintendent contemplated this as a provision, to be carried into execution, with reference chiefly to the State of California.

Mr. PETTIT. I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas another question, and that is, whether the California Indians do not claim, and whether we do not concede to them, as we do to all other Indians within our jurisdiction, the possessory title to their lands? Do they not, in that respect, hold the same relation to this Government that the Indians east of the Rocky Mountains do?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. We have acted towards them on the supposition that they occupied the same relation to us, and that they have the same title to their lands as the Indians in other parts of the United States.

Mr. PETTIT. Then, so far from this being an obligation resting upon us, I think it is quite the reverse. The Senator tells us that under the law of Mexico, from which nation we acquired this country and the jurisdiction over these Indians, they were not allowed even that possessory right which we have always yielded as appertaining to the Indians in all new countries. We, therefore, acknowledge their ownership of the unoccupied and ungranted territory of California over which they roam, and from them we must acquire the right to it, as we do to all the lands of our own Indians, by purchase. They have a possessory right to the land, and they are to dispose of it. They may sell it to us for large amounts of money, undoubtedly, if they are tribes, as I understand they are, and we are prepared to make treaties with them, as we have done with other tribes east of the Rocky Mountains. I have seen no good reason why we should now adopt in California this new policy of collecting the wild Indians, and saying to them, "Notwithstanding you own all this new country, and have subsisted yourselves heretofore under a worse government than ours—one which denied to you even the right of occupancy which we yield—yet we feel ourselves under obligation not only to acknowledge your possessory right of ownership to the soil, and to say that we cannot take it from you without your consent, but to advance to you this enormous sum of money." Upon what principle it is done I cannot see. All our Indian tribes may certainly come with greater force and greater reason, and ask you for similar amounts of money, in proportion to their numbers, per capita.

I am not prepared to vote for any portion of this amendment, not even for the recommendation of the committee. I have always endeavored to make it square with my views of propriety to vote for the recommendations of the committees of this body, in instances where they have properly examined the questions appropriately coming before them. I cannot, however, do it in this case; much less can I vote for the amendment of the Senator from California, much as I desire to do everything that may advance the interests of that growing and promising State. I certainly would not withhold from her any just, reasonable, or liberal claim which she could set up. But this is not an appropriation for California. It is an appropriation for the Indians, to whom we are under no earthly obligation, either moral or legal. We have come under no obligation to them. We have advanced them greatly from the condition which they were in under the country from which we acquired jurisdiction to them. Why, then, should we make this appropriation?

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I am very sorry that my friend from Indiana cannot see that there is any moral obligation resting on the people of this country to make some provision for the support of the Indians in California. His argument is this: the American Government is much more beneficent than the Mexican Government; and if these Indians could subsist themselves under the Mexican Government, why can they not do it under the American Government? Sir, let that Senator recollect that there is this important difference. Under the Mexican Government there was a very sparse population of white people in California, and nature amply supplied all the wants of the Indians; the streams were full of fish; there were there plenty of nuts and acorns, and everything that was necessary to subsist the aborigines. Now, under your American Government, you have three hundred and fifty thousand white people scattered over the whole surface of that State, for, unlike the other new States of the Union, they have not advanced gradually from settlement to settlement, but your people have gone there, and are scattered in all the ravines and gulches, and upon all the streams in that State. They have taken from the Indians the supplies which nature provided. They have destroyed their game. They have taken possession of that forest where they once obtained their supplies. They have taken their fish. Yet, now, the Senator can see no moral obligation resting on this Government to afford them subsistence. Sir, can there be a higher obligation than that which humanity imposes upon you? If by our action, or if by the action of our people, these Indians have been reduced to a state of abject penury and want; if by our conduct we have deprived them of the supplies that God intended they should have, is there not an obligation resting upon us, not only as enlightened citizens, but as men, to make some provision for these unfortunate people?

Mr. PETTIT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him, whether these Indians have ever requested us to treat with them? Have they ever asked for an appropriation? Have they ever asked that we should do what this amendment proposes, or are we voluntarily shoving it upon them?

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I happen to know the fact that there were hundreds of these unfortunate Indians, who were driven to the mountains during the last winter, and who suffered death for want of the necessary food to sustain life. There are thousands of them, who, during the coming year, if there be no provision made for them, must absolutely starve.

Mr. PETTIT. That does not answer my question.

Mr. WELLER. They have not asked me for my charity. They have not said to me, as an American Senator, that they wished me to see that they be saved from starvation. I had a heart that required no such appeal. Now, sir, if the Senator from Indiana can see no obligation; if he is content to sit down and say "Let them starve, I do not find it written in the bond that I am to support them," let him so decide by his vote.

Mr. PETTIT. I wished to know whether they had asked for this.

Mr. WELLER. The great body of the Indians to whom I now allude, are as wild and uncivilized as the grizzly bear of the mountains, and if they attempted to speak to me, they could speak only in a tongue that I could not comprehend. A large portion of those Indians who suffered during the last year for the want of food, have been driven high up into the mountains by the white man, and there they can obtain no food, no subsistence. Now, we propose by these locations to induce the Indians to come down from the mountains, engage in agriculture, and rely no longer upon nature alone for their food. That is all that is proposed. We have our "Mission" Indians there, and the Senator from Georgia seemed to think that we were inducing those Indians to abandon their labor in the mining region of the State, and come down, and loaf away their time upon agricultural pursuits. Let me tell the Senator that those Indians who are to be provided for by this system, never worked a day in the mines. They are unaccustomed to labor. They have never performed it. They have obtained their supplies directly from nature. The white man has robbed them of these; and there is, in my judgment, an obligation resting on us to supply the place. As to whether the appropriation shall be $125,000 or $200,000, that is a question which the Senate can determine. I feel no greater solicitude in this matter than every man should feel, who sees the Indians fading away day after day because of the inhumanity of the white man.

But I did not intend to trespass upon the Senate again, for I desire, above all things, to have this question settled. The argument of my friend from Georgia was fully answered at the last session of Congress, and it would be a work of supererogation to refute it again.

Mr. BELL. If the Senator from Georgia be right in his views of this new policy, I shall be opposed to it myself. The question was not much debated at the last session of Congress, when the policy was adopted; but, if I have any correct memory about it, it is directly the reverse of that which is stated by my friend from Georgia. I understood that these farms were to be reserved, and these grounds opened and prepared for cultivation, with a view to lure the Indians from their wandering, idle habits, and to induce them to become agricultural laborers. That is the very basis of the policy proposed to be established by this new system—not that they shall be maintained in idleness by the Government, but that they shall earn their subsistence by their own hands. So far as I have obtained any information on the subject, (and I wish the Senator from Arkansas to state whether it is the fact,) we have lured a great number of these Indians from their wandering habits, and they are laborers now upon these grounds.

Mr. COOPER. About two thousand three hundred of them are now on one reservation.

Mr. BELL. So I understand. The Government does not propose to employ laborers any further than it may be necessary to initiate the experiment; but it relies upon the Indians as the laborers upon these grounds.

Mr. WALKER. Certainly; that is it.

Mr. BELL. If I am mistaken in that, I am wholly mistaken as to the scheme which has been adopted.

Mr. DAWSON. But the Government is to sustain them until they get the lands cleared and ready for a crop.

Mr. BELL. I understood the Senator to say that it was a permanent system; that instead of allowing them to labor in the mines, or seek subsistence as they ought to do, and as every human being ought to be encouraged to do, this was a system to maintain them in idleness.

Mr. DAWSON. Undoubtedly; and it has not been denied. Of course all that cannot labor must be sustained; and if you have nothing to sustain them on this year, when you bring them in, how are you to sustain them?

Mr. BELL. Of course they are to be subsisted for a year, or until they can raise a crop.

Mr. DAWSON. And then, after subsisting them, they are to clear the land, and you are to teach them how to cultivate; but up to this time they have to be sustained.

Mr. BELL. And that is precisely what we did with the Indian tribes that we removed to the west of the Mississippi. We gave millions on millions for the purpose of paying the expense of their transportation west, and then of subsisting them for a year afterwards.

Mr. DAWSON. That was in pursuance of treaty stipulations.

Mr. BELL. That part of this policy is in conformity with the past practice of the Government; and what I wanted my honorable friend from Arkansas to state was, whether it was not the very basis of this experiment that the Indians should be lured from the mountains, and taught to seek their own subsistence, and to earn their bread by the sweat of their brows?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The Senator from Tennessee has stated correctly the spirit of this new system, which was adopted at the last session of Congress. It is not contemplated that the Indians are to be brought together, and fed and supported absolutely at the expense of the Government, but they are to be taught to work, to work actively, like other persons engaged upon farms. According to the report of the superintendent, the Indians who have been collected upon the reserve near Tejon Pass, are actively engaged in labor, and profitable labor. It is an astonishing fact, stated by the superintendent, that the wild Indians from the mountains are with great facility brought down to the arduous and assiduous labors of the field. As a matter of detail, I would mention that during the operations of the last year, over forty Indian boys were engaged as plow boys; and a few days' training from the agent, a man of practical information in reference to that business, was sufficient to make them useful laborers on the farm; and out of two thousand three hundred Indians now engaged there, I understand that every one has a duty assigned him, and performs it strictly, and with a promptitude and facility which are quite astonishing, considering that the Indians there collected, are the root-diggers from the mountains, and not those who have been heretofore subsisted at the "Missions."

Mr. BELL. They are the wild Indians.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Yes, sir; they are the wild Indians who have been brought from the mountains, and not the old "Mission" Indians, who were far advanced in a knowledge of agricultural pursuits.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment of Mr. WELLER to the amendment of the committee, to strike out $125,000, and insert $200,000, resulted—yeas 19, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Wisconsin, Gwin, James, Mallory, Morton, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Weller, and William—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Brodhead, Butler, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Pettit, Sebastian, Stuart, Toombs, and Walker—18.

Mr. STUART. I move to amend the amendment as amended, by adding to it the following proviso:

Provided, That no portion of this amount shall be paid over to the superintendent of Indian affairs until he shall account satisfactorily for the amount already drawn by him out of the former appropriation; and that hereafter no more than $20,000 shall be drawn by the said superintendent, or be in his hands unexpended at one and the same time.

Mr. PRATT. If the Senator will insert the word "present" before "superintendent," I think there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WALKER. That would make it objectionable.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator from Michigan himself, I think, will see the impropriety of this amendment as it now stands. I do not pretend to say, nor do I believe, that the present superintendent has done anything wrong. But suppose he has? This amendment is offered upon the hypothesis that something has been done which is wrong. Suppose that to be so; then the superintendent will not make his report at all; and the result is, that no appropriation is made for the support of the Indians. The Government will discharge this man, if he has done wrong, and put some one else in his place; and yet your appropriation is avoided by the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. That amendment, as I have said, is predicated upon the supposition that the present superintendent has not discharged his duty. If that be so, he will not make his report, but will be turned out by the President, and somebody else be put in; and yet, under the proposed amendment, the appropriation will not go into effect.

Mr. STUART. I see the difficulty which is apprehended by the Senator from Maryland, but I wish to suggest to him that it would hardly occur practically. I think there is a very serious objection to the alteration which he has suggested, because I think it might be regarded very properly as being invidious against this officer. That I wish to avoid very carefully. But suppose the worst state of things; suppose this money cannot be satisfactorily accounted for by the superintendent; it does not follow that if a new officer were appointed, this appropriation would therefore be suspended.

Mr. PRATT. Certainly it would, under the amendment.

Mr. STUART. In my opinion it would not; but if I am mistaken in that, it would be better to use some other terms than those indicated by the Senator from Maryland. I think, however, that I am not mistaken, and in that case I think within the substantial meaning of the law the amendment would be complied with. That is my view of it. I am not, however, tenacious about words. I only wish to avoid anything that will convey an imputation against this officer. It seems to me that if we were to put in the word "present," as suggested by the Senator, it would be a direct imputation against him.

Mr. COOPER. I think the Senator from Michigan had better put in the word "present." It will not hurt his amendment.

Mr. STUART. If there be no objection, I will consent to that amendment.

Mr. WELLER. I do not see any necessity for the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. I take it for granted that if the appropriation be made, the Department will put no more money into the hands of the superintendent until he has accounted for that which he has already received.

Now, in regard to the amount which has been paid over to the superintendent; I understand that the other appropriation was placed, as I said to-day, in the hands of the sub-treasurer, and the superintendent was requested, by his instructions, to draw for a sum not exceeding $20,000, until he had already accounted for that which he had received. Wherefore, then, the necessity of this amendment? Cannot the whole object be attained by a faithful discharge of duty on the part of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs? If he gives instructions, and those instructions are disobeyed, I take it for granted that he will remove the recalcitrant officer. Wherefore, then, the necessity of inserting this amendment? Why proceed to do the very thing which the Department of the Interior has already done, and which, under the existing law, the head of the Department has full authority to do.

Mr. COOPER. The object of this amendment was suggested by myself, and it was suggested because the superintendent had, on one or two occasions, on one certainly, drawn perhaps to-day $20,000, and to-morrow $20,000, or $30,000, or $50,000 more, or perhaps $120,000. Did he not draw $120,000 at once? It is to meet that very thing that the amendment is offered.

Mr. WELLER. I should take it that that was a direct violation of his instructions, and if I were at the head of the Department, I would not hesitate to remove a public officer who would disobey his instructions in that way. Nobody has attempted to shield the superintendent of Indian affairs. If he has acted improperly, if he has violated the instructions of the Department, let the Department remove him; I shall utter no complaint; but there is no necessity for the legislation proposed by the amendment.

Mr. COOPER. I think there is.

Mr. STUART. I hardly think the suggestion of the Senator from California will answer in place of legislation. If this officer, or any other, misappropriates money, you may remove the officer; but that, after all, will not save the money. The object of the legislation is to save the money. The addition suggested to me by the Senator from Pennsylvania was, that he shall not only not draw more than $20,000 at a time, but that he shall not have exceeding that amount in his hands at any one time unexpended and unaccounted for. That I have put in my amendment, so as to make it perfectly clear. This officer, as has been suggested to me, is only required to give bonds to the amount of $30,000; and it seems to me that the amount of money in his hands, unexpended, should be within the limit of his bonds; and I submit that that should be a matter of law. I have admitted the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland, to insert the word "present," inasmuch as the Senator from California has no objection. I submit that it does not answer the amendment to say that the Department may regulate this by instruction. Whatever it is proper to do, ought to be done by law, so far as it can be done, without hampering the operations of the Government.

Mr. WELLER. The Senator did not understand me as agreeing to the insertion of the word "present." I said nothing on that subject, and I do not know how he could draw the inference that I was in favor of it. I should be unwilling to put in that word, because it would look as though we intended to impeach the integrity of the present incumbent, and advise the Department to remove him. I am unwilling to act in that way.

Mr. STUART. I should not myself have accepted that alteration, if I had not understood the Senator as conceding that it ought to be made. My own opinion was, that it would be a reflection on the incumbent.

Mr. GWIN. I will mention one fact in connection with this question, which seems to me to make the amendment useless. An order has been issued from the Treasury Department recently, requiring the disbursing officers in California to keep the whole of the public money which they have to disburse under appropriations made by Congress, with the sub-treasurer at San Francisco, and they can draw it out only upon vouchers. They cannot, therefore, get any of the public money unless they furnish their vouchers to the sub-treasurer, and he pays their drafts. The system has been entirely changed since the occurrences which have been alluded to. The change has been made within the present year. The Secretary of the Treasury has issued those instructions to the assistant treasurer in California, and he has received a reply that that officer is prepared to carry out the system. In future, therefore, the public money will be disbursed in California precisely as the public funds are now disbursed in this city, at the Treasury of the United States. In this way the money will not go into the hands of a disbursing officer, as heretofore, but will be retained by the sub-treasurer, and paid out upon vouchers. Hence, in my opinion, there is no necessity for the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, because the money will not be paid over directly to the disbursing officer, but will be retained by the sub-treasurer, and paid out upon vouchers as they are presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. STUART. I do not accept it unless it be agreed to by the Senators from California.

Mr. GWIN. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, but I object to the whole of it. I think that, perhaps, as it stands it might tie up the officer's hands. I am afraid that until the accounts are settled, none of the money will be used; and in that way the provision, as it stands, might lead to embarrassment.

Mr. STUART. Then I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland, and insert the word "present" before the word "superintendent."

The amendment of Mr. STUART to the amendment of the committee, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WALKER. I have another amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GWIN. No vote has yet been taken on the amendment which I proposed.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to perfect the committee's amendment before the question is taken on that of the Senator from California. My amendment is to insert after the word "Provided," where it first occurs, the words "that before any part of said sum shall be expended;" so that the clause shall read:

Provided, That before any part of said sum shall be expended, the State of California shall cede the necessary jurisdiction in such cases.

There is a provision in the amendment of the committee which was intended to be what it will be when my amendment is agreed to. But as it now stands, the Senate will perceive that it is too vague and indefinite to accomplish the object in view.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I am willing to accept that.

Mr. GWIN. I am utterly opposed to it. It ties up the whole appropriation until the State of California acts; and the Legislature does not meet until next January. I do hope the appropriation will be permitted to pass in such a form that it can be made available. If it is tied up by these provisions, it will be as well to make no appropriation at all. We want this policy carried on under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. We wish to give him this fund, in order to keep the peace with the Indians there, and if necessary carry out this policy, and propose to the Legislature of California next winter that she shall give us jurisdiction over these reservations. I think there will be no difficulty in going on if we do not trammel the Department too much by these provisions.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, the amendment of the committee, as it now stands, is designed to go on with, and carry out, the system adopted at the last session of Congress. In order to perfect the amendment, it will be necessary to adopt the provision which I have proposed. When it is perfected, the question will be taken on the amendment of the Senator from California, which is to cut loose all restriction from the appropriation, and leave it a general appropriation, such as were made in former times, simply for the subsistence of the Indians. With that view, I think it is well the Senate should vote on it. If it is necessary to go on and perfect the plan of last session, we should certainly do it in such a way that we can have authority. The Senator from California himself is the first to start objection here to this plan. Yesterday, for the first time, he brought to our notice the fact that California was objecting to the location of the Indians on the reservations. Now, if we are going on with that plan, if it is deemed the best policy to continue it, is it not necessary, if his ground be correct, that we shall obtain in some way the consent of California? Shall we make the appropriation absolute? Shall we go on, and by the appropriation of this sum of money declare, that the Indians shall be located on these reservations; and when they are so located, is California to step forward and say we shall not do it? I hope not. If we are to congregate the Indians upon these military reservations, and that cannot be done without the consent of California, in the name of common sense, is there any harm in obtaining her consent; and if she will not give it, to say respectfully to her, "We will not expend our money in this enterprise?" That is all that is proposed by this proviso, and I do not see how you can get along without her consent. It is impossible to do so. Suppose the appropriation is made with a view to carry on the system that has been established there. If the provision shall be adopted, it will be with a view to carry on the system which has been initiated there; and yet, when you come to expend the money for the purpose, you find you cannot do it, because California objects. Then, is it not well to get the consent of California? You have to get it, or abandon the system. The abandonment of it is proposed by the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] in his amendment. Then, when we shall have abandoned it, by the adoption of his amendment, this will all have been stricken out, and there will be no harm in it; but, as long as we propose to carry out the system, let us do it by the consent of California; for without her consent, it is pretty generally conceded we cannot do it. That is all that is proposed by my amendment.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I wish to appeal to my friend from Wisconsin to withdraw this amendment. I think there is great force in the suggestion made by the Senator from California. If you require, as a condition precedent to the expenditure of any of this money, that this cession of jurisdiction shall be given, as the Legislature of California does not meet until the January of next year, you will, in effect, suspend the application of the whole of the money. Now, I think, under the circumstances, when we consider the distance of California from the seat of Government; when we consider the necessity of some immediate application of this money towards the general purpose, we may safely trust to the proper Executive officer not to make any large and unwise expenditure until the consent of the State of California shall have been obtained. I think we had better leave it to his discretion, under the existing circumstances, on account of the importance of a power immediately to use some portion of the money, and on account of the distance of the place and the time before a cession of jurisdiction can be obtained. I agree with the Senator entirely in his views; but I think, under the particular circumstances of the case, we had better not impose a positive restriction, which will make it just as if the money had not been appropriated until some time, perhaps, in the succeeding month of February.

Mr. WALKER. If the argument of the honorable Senator from North Carolina be correct, we should not adopt the amendment of the committee at all, for if he will listen to the reading of that amendment, he will see that the whole of it proceeds upon the ground that we are to continue this reservation plan. If we are going upon that plan, my proposition is necessary to perfect the amendment of the committee. After you have perfected it, you may strike it all out, on the argument of the Senator, and adopt the proposition of the Senator from California. I shall make no strenuous opposition to that proposition; but if we are to adopt the amendment of the committee as our policy, it is absolutely necessary that my amendment should be made to it. Perfect it first, and then take the question on the proposition of the Senator from California, and adopt that, if the views of the Senator from North Carolina are to be carried out.

Mr. BADGER. I suggest to my friend from Wisconsin that I assumed, for the purpose of the suggestion which I threw out to him, that the cession from California is necessary; but he will observe that that is by no means a clear point. It is by no means sure that we are not entitled to proceed without the consent of California. But I want to raise no unnecessary question about it. That consent will no doubt be given, when the Legislature shall have an opportunity of yielding it. In the meantime, let the officers of the Government go on and carry out this beneficent scheme. Do not hamper them by a proviso, which in one aspect of it, may be a concession of what we ought not to concede; and, in the other, will produce a mischievous delay in the useful commencement of this system. Let us be content with practicable guards. Let us be satisfied to leave some discretion to the executive officers. Let us not, by an exceeding anxiety to tie up this matter against all possibility of contingency in a direction we may not approve, put upon it such restrictions as may render it, in a great measure, impracticable for a considerable period of time. Now, that strikes me to be reasonable; and I know that my friend is reasonable. I hope, therefore, that he will not embarrass this provision by his amendment.

Mr. WALKER. I will withdraw my amendment, and in doing so, I wish to make one observation. I see it is clearly the design of the Senate to abandon the policy that it agreed to at the last session; for, without obtaining the consent of California before the expenditure of the money is made there, you will not obtain it at all, and without obtaining it you cannot carry on the plan.

Mr. GWIN. Now my amendment is in order. The Senator from Wisconsin, and other Senators, have said that it proposes to abandon the system of reservation. I wish the Secretary to read it, to show that they are mistaken.

The Secretary read the amendment. It is to strike out of the amendment reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs all after the word "California," and insert after the word "subsistence," the words "and settlement;" and add after "California," the words "and preserving peace with said Indians;" so that the amendment shall read:

For defraying the expenses of continuing the removal, subsistence, and settlement of Indians in California, and for preserving peace with said Indians, $200,000.

Mr. GWIN. Now, Mr. President, it is at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to continue these settlements after this plan. I want to give him the entire power. I want him to have the control of this fund, for the purpose, in his judgment, of benefiting the Indians and the people of California to the greatest possible extent. My whole object is to have the appropriation made as efficient as possible to do good, without trammeling it too much by legislation.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I paid some attention to the reading of the amendment to the amendment, and I think the effect of it is obviously misconceived by the Senator from California; and I know that my friend from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] who made some remarks rather in favor of it, misconceived its object. It involves, I think, unequivocally, a clear abandonment of the system adopted at the last Congress; and if it is adopted, all the provisions of the amendment of the committee conferring authority on the President to make reservations at all, are abandoned; all restriction as to the quantity of the reservations is abandoned; all the provisions authorizing the superintendent to buy out the conflicting titles of claimants on the reserves are abandoned, and you will have the system just as it was before—at sea, without compass or rudder, for the guidance of the superintendent. It may not be the object of the Senator from California to destroy the system; but I am certain that it is the inevitable effect of his amendment.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment of the committee, before the question is put on the proposition of my colleague. I move to strike out "twenty-five," and insert "ten," so that the amendment will read "said reservations not to contain less than five, nor more than ten thousand acres." I do not know how the reservations were originally fixed at twenty-five thousand acres. I am very sure it never received the sanction of my judgment. At the last session I endeavored to fix the maximum at ten thousand acres, and supposed that the provision in that form had passed the Senate; but afterwards, on an examination of the law, I discovered to my astonishment, that the Executive was authorized to make the reservations extend to twenty-five thousand acres.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will not be now in order, unless the pending amendment, offered by the colleague of the Senator to the amendment of the committee, be withdrawn.

Mr. GWIN. I withdraw it for the present, for that purpose.

Mr. WELLER's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I now renew my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I either do not understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, or I think the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs does not. I do not understand it to be an abandonment of the policy of reservations, but as leaving it discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior whether he will expend the money upon the reservations, or in some other mode. It may be—and it was to meet that contingency that the amendment to the amendment was offered—that, owing to the action of California, or other circumstances, it may be found that we cannot carry out the policy of reservations. If so, something must be done with the Indians; some provision must be made for them; we cannot tell in what shape it ought to be made, and the best disposition of the matter seems to be to leave it at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior. There is a word inserted in the amendment to the amendment with an express view to enable him to carry on the plan, if it should turn out to be practicable and best to continue the reservation, viz: the word "settlement." It is true it does not force him to expend the money in carrying out the policy of reservations and in no other way; and it seems to me that it would be improper to do so, because it may turn out that he cannot carry out the policy. The State of California may interpose and object. It may be, too, that when he obtains more information, he may find that the system has not worked as well as some are inclined to think it has done. All these things are uncertain; and in view of this uncertainty, and in order to obtain a practicable provision, one which may be established in any state of the case, I have thought that it was best to concur with the Senator from California, and leave this discretionary.

Suppose, sir, the State of California should refuse to cede the jurisdiction; suppose she should interpose other objections; what can be done with the appropriation under the amendment of the committee? Nothing; no provision can be made for the Indians. Suppose, on the other hand, it should turn out that the Secretary of the Interior may be able to make some other provision with the State of California for taking care of them—something short of the cession of the absolute jurisdiction—some arrangement with her by which, with the concurrent action of the State and General Governments, some provision may be made for the Indians—would it not be better to leave him the power and authority to do so, and not confine him to one mode, and one mode only? I do not understand this as forcing the abandonment of the reservations.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I believe it is the intention of the Senator from California, as I am sure it is that of the Senator from Virginia, to confer upon the Department a choice of systems, and not a compulsory abandonment of one without the adoption of anything in its stead; but by reading the amendment to the amendment, you will see that so much is stricken out that the bare insertion of the word "removal" does not save the old system at all. I will state to the Senate why it is a compulsory abandonment of the old system.

Superintendent Beale states in his report, that he has been unable to make the five reservations contemplated by law, because he could find no portion of the country in which there were not intervening so many preemption and Mexican claims, that he could not make the reservation out of the public domain of sufficient size at all; and we must, of necessity, abandon the system, unless we greatly reduce the size of the reservations, and authorize him to purchase up the conflicting claims. Therefore, if we make no provision giving him authority to buy up the conflicting claims, and requiring the cession of jurisdiction by the State of California over these, you will cut him off from the use of the reservations, except the one which he now has, because all that part of the amendment which makes provision for the removal of these obstacles is proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the Senator from California. In that way it works as an abandonment of the system, because it confers no power for the removal of the obstacles which are in the way.

Mr. HUNTER. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question? Does not the amendment of the Senator from California give the Secretary of the Interior general authority to do all this? Does it not give it to him, not specifically, but generally? Under this amendment he would have the authority, as I understand it, to continue the reservations, if he found that policy to be the best and most practicable.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. If the term "settlement," by force of the words employed, gives the general authority to make reservations and buy up the lands of individuals, and obtain the cession of jurisdiction from the State of California, if it embraces all this complicated idea, then the Senator is right.

Mr. GWIN. There are acts on the statute-book in connection with this system, and the object is to give as enlarged a power to the Secretary of the Interior as possible, to continue the system, if that is best. But if he cannot get the consent of California, (for it will, of course, be optional with that State, and there is no evidence yet that that consent will be refused; we have no such evidence, because there has been no legislation on the subject,) and cannot adopt the system, we ought to give him a discretion, so that he may go on and prevent the Indians there being destroyed.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the amendment of the honorable Senator from California will not be agreed to. The result of it will not only be an abandonment of what I regard as the only means of preserving the Indians, but it will be introducing another and new system in that section of the country, which will lead, in my judgment, to a much larger expenditure, and no good will be accomplished by it. With regard to the mooted question of jurisdiction, in my judgment it amounts to nothing. Gentlemen, I think, are alarmed without cause upon that subject. The Constitution of the United States gives Congress the right to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes. That is all the jurisdiction that is necessary. All the jurisdiction you want over one of these reservations, when you settle the Indians on them, is to keep out traders, persons who carry whisky, and injure and demoralize the Indians. That jurisdiction you have by the Constitution of the United States.

There are two different systems which have prevailed on this continent in regard to the Indians. The English Government recognized their right of occupancy, and treated with them, and purchased their lands. It was very good on principle; but what has the practice shown? The Spanish Government, on the contrary, did not recognize the right of the Indians to the soil. They took possession of it when they chose, and did not recognize any right in wild Indian tribes to the soil. When they became civilized, they settled them down in pueblos, and admitted them to a kind of semi-citizenship. What has been the result of the honest principle on which we started out to buy Indian territory? We have purchased Indian territory sometimes when it was not needed, even at exorbitant prices; and we have given annuities, and what has been the result? Why, sir, it has fastened a set of vampires on the Indians, a set of gentlemen who live off the Treasury of the United States. That is your policy. There are a few honorable exceptions to it, but, as a general rule, that is your policy. The traders get around the Indians, and they must have annuities paid to the Indians. The result is that they do not work. They have done nothing at all. The same system was commenced in California. Appropriations were made for Indian purposes soon after California was admitted; and what was the result? Fifteen or twenty treaties were made with José Maria, and every Indian chief they could find in the mountains, looking to the expenditure of millions of dollars in the way of annuities. Where would those annuities have gone, if the treaties had been agreed to? Would they have been a benefit to the country? Not at all. Would they have benefited the Indians? Not at all. They would have benefited a few traders, a few vampires on the Indians—men who are ready here, with every imaginable claim, to get appropriations which they can divide among themselves.

Then this other system was adopted, of making an appropriation, and furnishing the Indians with stock, furnishing them with farming implements, settling them down upon the land, and learning them to work for themselves. Now, it is a mistake to suppose that Indians cannot learn to work. The Choctaws, and various other nations, learn to work, and, as a general rule, they have almost as good farmers among them as we have. These Indians in California have gone and settled down upon one of these reservations, and now do work. I have good evidence for saying that they have now several thousand acres in cultivation. They have more land in cultivation now, and are raising more to live on at this moment, under this arrangement, than I expected they would up to this time. If you abandon this system, you will have twenty treaties at the next session, providing annuities to be paid out of the Treasury, and these annuities will give rise to great squabbles with the Indians and traders.

Mr. PRATT. Before the vote is taken on the amendment of the Senator from California, I desire to offer an amendment. I ask the Senate to agree to strike out this proviso:

"Provided, The State of California shall cede the necessary jurisdiction in such cases."

As I said before, when I had the honor to address the Senate, I do not conceive that it requires the assent of California to give to this Government the right to place upon the reservations the Indians whom we propose to place there. I therefore ask that that proviso be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it; and I desire to make a single observation. Unless the amendment which I propose be adopted, the whole appropriation will become entirely useless. In the first place, you are to require, before the provision goes into effect, the assent of California, that you may place upon your own land, reserved by this Government, these Indians. Of course, until the Legislature shall have met, (and it is not yet elected,) you cannot attempt to appropriate the money. Thus a delay of several months, I do not know how long, perhaps ten months, will elapse before, by possibility, even if the State should give its assent, this appropriation can go into effect. Then after the Legislature, which is to be elected, shall have met, it has to act upon it, and to give the exclusive jurisdiction for which you ask.

Now, as I have already said, we do not want the exclusive jurisdiction. The land is ours. It belongs to this Government, and we have a right to place the Indians there. If they should commit any offense under the laws of California, they would be tried by the tribunals of California; and that is the whole result of the absence of this exclusive jurisdiction. I shall vote against the whole appropriation, unless the words to which I refer be stricken out. If the provision which I seek to strike out remain as it is, it will render the whole appropriation entirely useless.

Mr. WALKER. It was to perfect this particular point that I offered the amendment which I withdrew a short time ago. The argument of the Senator from Maryland would be well enough if we had no information as to what has been the practice of the Government in such cases. I can inform him, however, that, practically, the Government has asked for the consent of the States—deeming itself disqualified to locate the Indians permanently within their limits without their consent; and I will instance the case which I before mentioned of the Menomonees of Wisconsin. They were turned over to the Legislature of Wisconsin before anything was done. The Legislature gave consent that they might be located on a certain reservation, and they were located accordingly. The Senator will find that this has been the practice of the Government.

Mr. PRATT. I suppose it was done in that case because of some such provision as is contained in this amendment.

Mr. BELL. I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Wisconsin a question. When those Indians were turned over to the mercy of the State of Wisconsin, in settling the question whether they should be driven out of the boundaries of that State altogether, or whether they should find a home there, had they not ceded every foot of land which they owned there?

Mr. WALKER. Certainly.

Mr. BELL. Then those Indians did not own one acre of land in that State, and had not even a possessory right. There was a clear case where the consent of the State was necessary. But that is not the case in California.

Mr. WALKER. Let me apprise the Senator from Tennessee of this fact: after the Indians ceded their land, it became the land of the Government.

Mr. BELL. I understand that; but the two cases are not parallel.

Mr. WALKER. That case is parallel to the present one, in my view. It is alleged by the Senator from Maryland that this land, being the land of the Government, the Government can do as it pleases with it, so far as the location of the Indians is concerned.

Mr. BELL. The title of the Indians in California has not been extinguished; and I agree with the Senator from Maryland, that we have the power to locate them on the public land if we think proper, because the Indians there have never parted with their possessory rights according to our policy.

Mr. HUNTER. But will they not be subject to the laws of California? It is the opinion of the Senator from Maryland that if we locate them without the cession of jurisdiction from California they will be subject to the laws of that State.

Mr. BELL. But have these Indians no rights of possession, no usufructuary rights? Is that the law of California now? I do not understand it to be so, for the laws of the United States have been thrown over that territory, and we have attempted to treat with them. If they are members of the State of California, we cannot treat with them.

Mr. PRATT. I may be entirely wrong, but my notion is this: the Government of the United States has pursued the policy of Great Britain in reference to the Indians. We have conceded that the right to the soil was in the Indians, and that this Government could only acquire the right to the soil by treaty or acquisition from the Indians. Now, California was Spanish territory, and the Spanish Government differed entirely from the English Government on this point. The Spanish Government never recognized the right of soil in the Indians; consequently, I did not attempt to argue that the Indians possessed in California any right to the soil.

Mr. BELL. They have the same possessory right which the Indians west of Missouri had—the same right that the Indians had in Florida—the same right that they had in the old cession of Louisiana. So that, if the Senator's view be correct, we have been acting upon false principles all the time. The Government has carried out its policy in all these cessions, though the civil law applied in all the French and Spanish settlements. Whenever territory has been ceded to the United States we have carried our own policy there, and allowed the Indians to have this possessory right, and treated with them as having a claim to it. That is our public law adopted in relation to the Indians. Then I contend that we have a perfect right, in conformity with the principle of our quasi public law in relation to the Indians, to treat with them in California precisely on the same footing in regard to any rights of possession which they have in the district of country over which they roam, as we have treated with the Indians in other territories.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland will not prevail. It raises a very nice and delicate question, and involves, in my opinion, the germ of a second Georgia war. Just concede the right, upon the part of this Government, to reserve, in the State of California, and within a few miles of its seat of government, a given extent of country, and you involve, at once, a serious difficulty, because the settlements will soon press upon the Indians. It is right that we should make the attempt, and continue to make the attempt to the last, if possible, to civilize and Christianize the Indians; but, sir, these reservations will become eye-sores to the whole people. They will be productive of the greatest difficulty, and if you concede the right of this Government to reserve large bodies of land within the heart of that State, you at once plant there the germ of war and difficulty. As a State rights man, I cannot sanction the amendment. I believe it will result in the exercise of a high power which Georgia and other States have exercised to protect themselves from that sort of interference with their rights.

Mr. GWIN. I think the Senator from Maryland is mistaken as to the bearing of this amendment. The amendment of the committee is:

"For defraying the expenses of continuing the removal and subsistence of the Indians in California to five military reservations, in accordance with the plan submitted by the superintendent of Indian affairs of that State, and approved by the President, the sum of $200,000."

There is a proviso then in regard to sub-agents, that there shall be only five, and but one appointed to each reservation; that the reservations shall contain not exceeding ten thousand acres; and then the amendment of the committee goes on:

"And the said superintendent is authorized to apply, out of the sum hereby appropriated, not exceeding $25,000 in the extinguishment of conflicting titles and rights to said reserved lands, at a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre, for a valid and indefeasible right to the lands so purchased:

And provided, The State of California shall cede the necessary jurisdiction in such cases."

Now, that applies to the case of purchases, if I read it properly. These purchases are to be made, and a perfect title to be given to the land, and an amount not exceeding $25,000 is appropriated for that purpose. That is, in purchasing private property. The Government of the United States can reserve its own property; but the superintendent of Indian affairs says they cannot get Government land sufficient. Then it is proposed that they shall buy, at a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre; and the State of California has certainly a right to assert her jurisdiction, when private property is purchased for Government purposes within her limits. Why, sir, you cannot build a custom-house; you cannot build a court-house on private property purchased by the United States; and you cannot get the jurisdiction to the United States for such purposes, except by a cession of the Legislature. If I read the amendment properly, according to my understanding, it is that this jurisdiction of the State of California which is to be given, is to that private property to be purchased by the United States, to an amount not exceeding twenty-five thousand acres.

Mr. PRATT. Then, to carry out the Senator's view, instead of striking out the proviso, as I proposed, I suggest the addition at the end of the proviso of the words, "in reference to lands so purchased," so as to require the assent of California only in reference to the lands so purchased for this purpose.

Mr. GWIN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, that amendment will be made.

Mr. PRATT. I withdraw my call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland is considered as unanimously adopted. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN.]

Mr. WELLER. I shall be compelled to move another amendment to the amendment. When this plan was originally adopted, as I said awhile ago, it was understood that the reservations were to be made, not only in California, but in Utah and New Mexico, not exceeding five in number. The amendment of the committee proposes to make all the five reservations in the State of California. In my judgment that is unnecessary; and it is too large a number in that State. I move, therefore, to strike out the word "five" and insert "three," so that there shall not be exceeding three reservations in the State of California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment cannot be received now, unless the pending amendment to the amendment be withdrawn.

Mr. GWIN. I withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. WELLER's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER. I move a corresponding amendment, to strike out $25,000 and insert $15,000, so that $5,000 shall apply to each reservation. The amendment of the committee provides that $25,000 shall be appropriated for the purpose of extinguishing the outstanding titles, if any exist, to these reservations. It contemplated doing so for five. The number has now been reduced to three. I desire a corresponding reduction in the amount of money, and therefore move that $15,000 be inserted in lieu of $25,000.

Mr. WELLER. I see no propriety whatever in that amendment, for the reason that we have limited the quantity of acres and the price to be paid per acre. If, for instance, you make the appropriation $25,000, the restriction you have on the expenditure of that money is in the quantity of the land, and the price fixed for payment, $1 25 per acre. But it may possibly be that there will not be more than a single reservation in the State of California, where it will be necessary to purchase private claims in order to get a perfect title. At all events, I can see no necessity for reducing this amount, because you already have a limit on the expenditure in the price you are to pay, which is not to exceed $1 25 per acre.

Mr. COOPER. The Senator does not, I think, comprehend my views, or else he does not comprehend the intention of the committee. It was intended that the $25,000 should extinguish the title to the whole of the fifty thousand acres in the five reservations. Now, the reservations have not been enlarged in quantity, but they have been reduced in number. I say, therefore, that a corresponding reduction in the amount of money is necessary, or you will appropriate a larger sum, namely, $3,333, instead of $5,000, for extinguishing the outstanding titles to each of the reservations.

Mr. GWIN. Only one has been selected.

Mr. COOPER. This is intended to apply to all. I have no objection, if you make it $8,000. I only mean to make the amendment correspond with itself.

Mr. COOPER's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on Mr. Gwin's amendment to the amendment, it was rejected.

The first clause of the amendment of the committee, as amended, was agreed to; as follows:

For defraying the expenses of continuing the removal and subsistence of the Indians in California to three military reservations, in accordance with the plan submitted by the superintendent of Indian affairs of that State, and approved by the President, the sum of $125,000: Provided, The sub-agents created by this act shall be appointed by the superintendent, subject to confirmation by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed one for each reservation, nor five in all. Said reservations to contain not less than five, nor more than ten thousand acres: And the said superintendent is authorized to apply, out of the sum hereby appropriated, not exceeding $25,000, in the extinguishment of conflicting titles and rights to said reserved lands, at a price not exceeding $1 25-per acre for a valid and indefeasible title to the lands so purchased: And provided, The State of California shall cede the necessary jurisdiction in such cases, in reference to lands so purchased: Provided, also, That no portion of this amount shall be paid over to the present superintendent of Indian affairs, until he shall account satisfactorily for the amount already drawn by him, out of the former appropriations; and that hereafter no more than $20,000 shall be drawn by the said superintendent, or be in his hands unexpended, at one and the same time.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the second clause of the amendment, to insert:

"For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, embracing expenses of travel of the superintendent and agent, &c., $25,000."

Mr. SEBASTIAN. This amendment is offered by the committee, upon the recommendation of the Indian Department. There is a similar fund to this, ranging from $10,000 to $15,000, for the Territories of Washington, Oregon, New Mexico, and Minnesota. There is a class of expenditures in every Territory paid out of this fund, and it is only made a little larger here than in some others. I think in New Mexico it is just the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 2, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to what I believe to be a privileged question. The committee of conference appointed upon the disagreeing votes between the two Houses, upon the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy at West Point, for the year ending June 30, 1855, have met and agreed to a report. The report does not require any action upon the part of this House, as it merely recommends that the Senate recede from their disagreeing votes.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, and laid upon the table.

The report was then read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman to the condition of this report, if no action is taken upon it by the House. The Chair thinks it is usual to accept the report of the committee of conference by a vote of the House. It is true the committee have recommended that the Senate should recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, but the Chair thinks it should be either approved or disapproved.

Mr. JONES. Perhaps that course would be the proper one.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the report be adopted. If no action is taken upon it, it will go upon the Journal as unfinished business.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have a single remark to make to the House.

Mr. BENNETT. I rise to a privileged question. I wish to know if the consideration of the bill distributing lands to the several States does not come up as the regular business during the morning hour, or does the territorial business take precedence as a special order?

The SPEAKER. The special order will take precedence.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I ask that the bill to which I have referred may be postponed until three weeks from to-day.

Mr. DISNEY. I object.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to ask the unanimous consent to withdraw certain papers from the files of the House, for the purpose of having them referred at the Departments. They were sent here, I understand, by mistake.

There was no objection, and it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers relating to the tonnage duty imposed upon the bark Asa Packer, on her trip home from Calcutta, December, 1851.

On motion by Mr. BANKS, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers and petition in the case of Burton Pickett, for the purpose of reference in the Senate.

THE LAND BILL.

Mr. BENNETT. I now desire to inquire of the Chair if I have not the right to make my motion to postpone the land bill?

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. So long as the bill is not regularly before the House for consideration, no motion to postpone, nor any motion of any description for the disposition of the bill, is in order.

Mr. BENNETT. Is not the bill before the House as the regular order of business during the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. It is not. If the House should dispose of all the business relating to the Territories upon the Speaker's table, and should then refuse to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of territorial business, the gentleman's bill would then be before the House for consideration. In that form, and in that alone, the motion to postpone would be in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Am I not entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. For these privileged motions of course I yield the floor, but not further. I desire to ask the Chair what bill is now before the House for consideration?

ROADS IN THE TERRITORY OF MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER. It is the bill entitled "An act making appropriations for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department."

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to allow me the floor for a single minute.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS BILL.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I cannot give way further. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement in reference to this bill which will not take two minutes. It was the understanding expressed by me, and acquiesced in by the House, when this week was set apart for territorial business, that no business should come up except such as relates exclusively to the organized Territories. Such is my desire now. But in connection with this subject, I wish to say a word in reference to another thing. At an early day of the coming week I shall move to bring the bill to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas to the consideration of the House. This statement is now made that gentlemen may be advised we are not trying to steal any march on them.

Mr. COBB. At what time next week does the gentleman propose to bring the subject to our attention?

Mr. RICHARDSON. On Monday of next week. The friends of the bill, I may say further, intend to resort to every fair and parliamentary means, for the purpose of bringing the question to the consideration of the House, and if we fail to bring the bill up for consideration, the Committee on Territories can report a bill for action.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will allow me, I will submit a single suggestion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly, sir.

Mr. COX. I do not know that I ought to claim any participation with the peculiar friends of this measure. Certainly I have had no intimation of the intention to bring it to a vote at the time indicated.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman misunderstands me. The object is not to bring it to a vote, but only to bring it up for consideration.

Mr. COX. Before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I shall move to go into Committee, and lay aside all other business, and take up the House bill to organize the Territories.

Mr. COX. I shall agree to that most heartily. I know several gentlemen who desire to express their opinions on the subject. I will say, while I am up, that I am most heartily a friend of the measure, and that I shall so express myself if I get an opportunity. I have no objection to its being brought up for consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman seems to be laboring under a misapprehension. I desire a discussion, a full discussion, of the bill itself. If we fail in that, there are other means by which, at the proper time, we can bring it before the House, and have a vote on it.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That will not be done until a fair opportunity for full and reasonable discussion has been afforded to gentlemen on this floor.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. In what way does the gentleman propose to bring the bill up for the consideration of the House?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will advise the gentleman when I am ready to do so. I have now said all that I desired. My intention was only to give the notice which I have.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the regular order of business.

THE STEAMSHIP CITY OF GLASGOW.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask that the resolution which I submitted a few moments ago be read for the information of the House.

There was no objection, and the resolution was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to send out, immediately, one or more steam or sailing vessels, with three months' provisions on board of each, together with blankets and clothing for four hundred persons, to search for the missing steamship, City of Glasgow, which is supposed to have met with some accident, in either machinery or spars, and is now among the ice, which has lately been in such quantities in the north Atlantic ocean.

If the Secretary of the Navy has not Government vessels at his disposal, he is hereby authorized to freight or charter suitable vessels for the purpose, to be paid for out of any money not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

The following bill reported yesterday, with an amendment, from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, then came up for consideration: House bill No. 164, "making further appropriations for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question on that bill.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was first on agreeing to the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert as follows:

That the following sums of money be, and they are hereby, appropriated for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, to wit:

For the continuation of the road from Point Douglas, on the Mississippi river, to the mouth of the St. Louis river, of Lake Superior, $20,000.

For the continuation of the road from Point Douglas to Fort Gaines, now Fort Ripley, $10,000.

For the continuation of the road from the mouth of Swan river to the Winnebago agency, $3,000.

For the continuation of the road from Wabashaw to Mendota, $15,000.

The continuation of the construction of said roads to be made under the direction of the Secretary of War, pursuant to contracts to be made by him, or under his direction: Provided, That so much of any former acts as require the first-mentioned road to terminate at the falls or rapids of said St. Louis river, are hereby repealed.

The question was put; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, it was subsequently read the third time.

The question now being, "Shall the bill pass?" Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. ORR called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and HAMILTON were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 43.

So the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the passage of the bill reported by the Committee of the Whole, on yesterday, without amendment, entitled "A bill authorizing the appointment of an additional number of Indian agents."

Mr. ORR. That is the bill which the committee agreed to report to the House, without recommending any action upon it. I move that the bill be laid upon the table, inasmuch as it has already been anticipated by the Senate.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Orr's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the passage of the bill reported by the committee on yesterday with an amendment, entitled "A bill to provide for the extinguishment of the title of the Chippewa Indians to the land owned and claimed by them in the Territory of Minnesota and the State of Wisconsin, and for their domestication and civilization."

Mr. ORR. I move the previous question upon it.

The previous question was not sustained.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the amendment to insert after the word "treaties," in the twenty-first line, the words "with the consent of the said Indians."

The question was then taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment is to insert after the word "territory," in the thirty-seventh line, the words "in Minnesota."

The question was put; and the amendment was adopted.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on Territories have directed me to report back a petition asking for an appropriation of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Fort Wayne, Indiana, to Council Bluffs, in Iowa, and to ask to have the same referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

It was so ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on Territories have directed me to report back a bill to enable the people of Oregon to form a constitution and State government, and to provide for the admission of such State into the Union. I move its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. And that is he printed?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; it has already been printed.

The bill was so referred.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred a resolution offered by the Delegate from Utah, [Mr. BERNHISEL,] have directed me to report the following joint resolution:

The resolution was read by the Clerk. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to appropriate the sum of $500 for the purchase of territorial libraries for the Territories of Minnesota, Oregon, Utah, and New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that that joint resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

It was so ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on Territories have directed me to report back a resolution directing the committee to inquire into the expediency of putting the clerks of the Legislative Assembly of Utah on the same footing as those of New Mexico and Minnesota. The committee, in making that report, say that it appears to them that no necessity occurs for the increase of the number of clerks in Utah, as it did in relation to New Mexico. The House will remember that in New Mexico it was necessary to have a double set of clerks, because they had to have what was spoken in Spanish translated into English, and what was spoken in English translated into Spanish, so that the business might be properly transacted. That is the reason why they have two sets of clerks in New Mexico; but the committee do not think that that necessity exists in Utah; and therefore I move to lay the resolution on the table.

There being no objection, the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move, as there are no other reports to be made, that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the special order of the House.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of local territorial business.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, at its last session, and when it rose, had under consideration House bill (No. 162) to increase the salaries of executive and judiciary officers in Oregon and New Mexico. An amendment, which was submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. KERR,] was then pending; and, upon a division upon that amendment, tellers were demanded. The amendment will be reported by the Clerk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, &c., That each of the judges of the Territories of Oregon, Minnesota, Washington, Utah, and New Mexico, who have not heretofore been furnished, shall be supplied with a complete set of the reports of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the United States Statutes at Large; and Alden's Index to the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, for the use of themselves and their successors in office.

Mr. KERR. I have been conversing with some of the friends of this measure since I offered the amendment which has just been read, and I am inclined to think that the effect of it will be to embarrass the passage of the bill; and, therefore, with the consent of the House, I will withdraw it.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

No further amendment being offered, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The next bill which came up for consideration was House bill No. 232, entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to settle and adjust the expenses of the people of Oregon from attacks and hostilities of Cayuse Indians in the years 1847 and 1848,' approved August 21, 1852."

The CHAIRMAN. This bill was reported back by the Committee on Territories with an amendment. The Clerk will read the original bill and the amendment proposed by the committee.

The bill having been read, the amendment was read, as follows:

That the further sum of $30,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the provisional government of Oregon, in defending the people of said Territory from the attacks and hostilities of the Cayuse Indians, in the years 1847 and 1848; and that the Secretary of the Treasury pay out of said appropriation, or so much thereof as may be necessary to liquidate said claims, according to the reports of the Governors of Oregon, or the commissioners, or either of them, appointed under the authority of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon to audit and allow said claims now on file in the Treasury Department.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered to allow reasonable compensation to the commissioners who have adjudicated the Cayuse war claims under the authority of the Legislature of Oregon, if the awards of said commissioners shall have been sanctioned by Congress, and also to the clerk employed by Governor Gaines to transcribe the records and proceedings of the commissioners for the Treasury Department, to be paid from this appropriation, on due proof.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered to re-examine any award that has been made, and to reduce the amount, if, in his judgment, founded on proof, it should be too much.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. This bill, as originally introduced, provided for the appropriation of an amount about equal to the expenses of that war, now unpaid. The Committee on the Territories have reported a substitute, which strikes out the original appropriation of $75,000, and inserts another of $30,000.

At the time they reported the amendment which is now pending before the committee, there were on file in the Department awards which had been allowed by the commissioner appointed for that purpose, which probably would not exceed that amount. In other words, the committee provided for the awards then on hand. But since that time awards have been received in addition, amounting to about $14,000. Awards, however, have been allowed, amounting to $75,000. Of that there can be no doubt. The commissioner appointed to examine and allow these claims certifies over his own signature that awards have been allowed to that amount. Now, if we are to provide for the unpaid expenses of that war, we must appropriate $75,000.

An amendment of the Senate to the deficiency bill, now pending before the House, appropriates the whole amount, $75,000, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of this Cayuse war. That amendment, after being referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, was approved of by them. They recommend the passage, therefore, of this whole appropriation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am unwilling to consume the time of the committee, and will detain them but a moment longer. If this passes, there will be no need of the adoption of the amendment to the deficiency bill, to which I have alluded; and again, if I could be sure that the deficiency bill would pass, and that the amendment making appropriations for paying the whole of the unpaid expenses of the war, there would be no necessity of the passage of this bill. But if the committee prefer to pass this bill, it will be necessary for them to reject the amendment of the Committee on the Territories, or to amend it, if they desire to cover the entire unpaid expenses of the war. Unless this is done, the matter will have again to come up for our consideration at some future time. The appropriation in the amendment of the committee is entirely insufficient; and, I repeat, that unless the whole $75,000 be granted, further legislation will be necessary.

If I believed the deficiency bill would pass, either immediately or at any period of the session, I should recommend that the committee should pass this bill by for the present; but I will suggest to the committee, that if they pass this bill, the Senate will pass it without difficulty, and that it will be the quickest way of disposing of the matter. The people of Oregon have long tried to get what was due them.

I am inclined to think, Mr. Chairman, that it would be better to pass this bill, non-concurring in all the amendments of the committee from the first to the fourteenth line, and concurring in the balance. Then it would appropriate $75,000, and submit all doubtful claims to the consideration of the Secretary of the Treasury. If, in his judgment, any are not just, he can refuse to satisfy them.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would suggest to the gentleman to make a motion to that effect; after the statement which he has made, such a motion, it appears to me, would be proper.

Mr. LANE. I make the motion to strike out what I have already indicated.

Mr. HAVEN. With the permission of the gentleman from Oregon, I will submit a substitute for his amendment, which, I believe, embodies as well the views of the Senate as those of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. LANE. Let it be read.

The Clerk then read the substitute, as follows:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the further sum of $75,000 to pay the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the provisional government of Oregon, in defending the people of the said Territory from the attacks and hostilities of the Cayuse Indians in the years 1847 and 1848; and for such allowances for the expenses of adjusting the claims on that account as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem proper; and that the Secretary of the Treasury pay out of said appropriation so much thereof as may be necessary to liquidate said claims according to the reports of the commissioners heretofore appointed for ascertaining said amounts, communicated to Congress; and no claims shall hereafter be allowed, on account of this war, which are not presented to the Treasury Department of the United States within the next fiscal year.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all of said claims and accounts not heretofore adjusted, shall be settled and adjusted at such place and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered to re-examine any award that has been or may be made of said claims, and to reduce the amount, if, in his judgment, founded on proof, it should be too much.

Mr. HAVEN. I do not desire even to make an explanation. The substitute corresponds with the view taken by the other branch of the legislature, as well as that of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. LETCHER. There is part of that amendment of which I do not approve; and that is, that authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to decide how much is to be paid to the parties who are to be engaged in this business.

Mr. LANE. It is to be a reasonable compensation.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not care whether it is reasonable or unreasonable. It seems to me that the Congress of the United States ought to fix the compensation for those employed in the discharge of public duties imposed on them by its own act. Now I have not the greatest respect for the Secretary's judgment about these things. If he acts in regard to making an allowance that he may deem reasonable compensation for these services as he does in regard to the construction of custom-houses, there is no telling how much it will cost. I think it is our duty to fix the compensation here, and leave him no discretion about it. We can do it as well as he can.

Mr. HAVEN. I will simply say, in reply to my friend from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] that no provision has been made on this subject, for the reason that the Secretary of the Treasury has sent up to us the certified and sworn accounts of the commissioners who have been engaged in this business; and the Committee of Ways and Means thought that they were reasonable. The accounts are at the rate of five dollars per diem; and I suppose that the Secretary of the Treasury, if he adjusts the accounts, will adjust them on the basis of those sworn and certified accounts sent up.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, if that is the estimate, I do not think the compensation is unreasonable. But do not let us leave discretion to this officer to fix the salaries of persons employed under the Government. Let the House fix the compensation. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman will amend his amendment so as to fix such compensation as the Committee of Ways and Means think a fair and just equivalent for the labors performed.

Mr. SMYTH, of Texas. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying the bill.

The Clerk read the report.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "proper," the words, "not exceeding five dollars per day to each commissioner."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman is not in order at this time, as there is already pending an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] and I propose my amendment as a substitute for the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment reported by the committee is in the nature of a substitute, and if the gentleman from New York will withdraw his amendment, the question can now be taken upon the adoption of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HAVEN. I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAVEN. I now propose the amendment which was reported to the committee a few minutes since.

Mr. COBB. I desire to offer the following amendment: to strike out of the second section the words "such place," and insert in lieu thereof "the city of Washington."

I will explain, in a very few words, my object in offering this amendment. I am opposed to creating any more officers than we can possibly avoid, for carrying on the affairs of the Government. According to my construction of the language here used, it would be necessary for the Secretary to send some person to Oregon. I hold that these matters should be adjusted with the Treasury Department here; and I am opposed to creating any more new officers.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. The gentleman from Alabama, in my opinion, misapprehends the matter entirely, and I will make an explanation which I think will satisfy him. The Territory of Oregon took measures to ascertain the expenses of the Cayuse war, and for that purpose appointed a board of commissioners, who entered upon their duties, and allowed to each individual who served in that war a fair compensation for his services.

The amounts thus certified to were then sent here to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury. All that service has been performed, and awards to the amount of $175,000 have been made. The sum of $100,000 has been disbursed, leaving a balance of $120. That is, that much of the original appropriation of $100,000 is now on hand. But there are accounts already filed, which have been heretofore allowed by the commissioners, to the amount of $35,000; and, in all probability, the balance will be up here before this bill becomes a law. So that there is no further action at all necessary to ascertain the expenses of that war. That has all been done.

The awards are sent here, and paid in Washington. In the appropriation required now, we ask that the persons holding awards in their favor, may be paid at home. But if the awards heretofore allowed, or that may be hereafter allowed, shall not amount to $75,000, then, Mr. Chairman, the balance will be in the hands of the Treasury, and will not be disbursed. This act of Congress, on this measure, will be the last act of legislation necessary for the ascertainment of the expenses of the Cayuse war. I hope, therefore, that the gentlemen of the committee will let it pass.

Mr. COBB. I move so to amend the bill as to provide that payment be made in the city of Washington. By adopting this amendment, we will not run the risk of sending persons to Oregon to pay up these awards.

Mr. HAVEN. With respect to that matter, I think I would be satisfied with the amendment of my friend from Alabama, but for the fact that, if there are any further claims hereafter arising from this war, the commissioner that has been appointed by the Governor or Legislature of Oregon will be regarded as the agent of the Secretary of the Treasury in ascertaining claims; and hence it is in accordance exactly with my amendment. The Secretary of the Treasury has given us this information in a letter communicating the facts. I will read the following extract from his letter:

"The manner in which these claims have hitherto been audited and allowed, should, in my opinion, be changed, by providing that they should be transmitted to the Treasury for adjustment, together with the rolls and other vouchers in support of them."

"It would also be desirable to fix a time for the presentation of these claims, after which none should be allowed; and if the committee determine to propose the appropriation, I have respectfully to recommend that it may be made subject to these conditions. The appropriation will probably be sufficient to pay the balance of expenses of the war, as well as the compensation and expenses of the commissioner; but it will be proper to give authority to make these allowances, as none now exists."

Now, the committee thought it would be better to leave the Secretary of the Treasury to make that order, and have them so transmitted for adjustment, according to his suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, to strike out the words "at such places," and insert in lieu thereof the words "in the City of Washington."

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] which was put; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The next bill to be disposed of is House bill No. 274, which is a bill for the payment of the civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico while under military government. The Clerk will report the bill to the committee.

The first section was then read.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. COX. I should like to have the gentleman who may have particular charge of this measure, inform the House whether or not these civil officers, whose payment is provided for in this bill, were military officers at the same time, and were receiving their salaries as such?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say to the gentleman that the bill was reported from the Military Committee by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] who was in his seat a few moments since, but whom the Chair does not now see.

Mr. BISSELL. I would state to the gentleman from Kentucky, that the member of the committee who reported this bill is not present, and I am not as well prepared as he is to explain its provisions.

Mr. OLDS. I move to lay the bill aside informally.

Mr. BISSELL. I think there is no necessity for doing that. I ask that the bill may be read through.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that there is an executive report, setting forth the names of the persons who performed the duties, and showing that those persons were not in the military service of the country.

Mr. BISSELL. I ask that the bill may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read through, and also the first section; and the Chair was about to announce that the bill would be laid aside and reported to the House, if there were no amendments to be offered.

Mr. COX. Is the report, to which the Chair referred, at the Clerk's desk?

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose it is not. It was made during the last Congress.

Mr. BISSELL. I recollect that this fact appeared before the committee, that the appropriation which was set apart for the payment of certain officers there did not extend so far as to comprehend military officers.

Mr. PHELPS (who temporarily vacated the chair) said: If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] will allow me a moment, I will remark that I recollect some things in relation to these civil officers in New Mexico. I am acquainted with several of those officers, as some of them have been here. General Kearny reached New Mexico in 1846, and promulgated a code of laws for the government of the people of that Territory. That code of laws was compiled by two gentlemen from Missouri, then engaged in the military service of the country. It provided for the appointment of a civil governor, a secretary, an auditor, and a treasurer. It also provided for the judges of a district or circuit court—I do not recollect which—for a prosecuting attorney; perhaps some other county officers were provided for in that code of laws which was promulgated by General Kearny.

The Territory of New Mexico was, from that time, governed under this code of laws, and by officers who were appointed to discharge the duties which, by law, were imposed upon them. There was also an attempt made to collect some money, and a small sum was collected from the traders, who resorted to that Territory from the western parts of the United States, and engaged in merchandise there; but the amount was far short of paying the expenses which were incurred.

Those officers, under the appointment thus made by Kearny, continued to discharge their duties, until the organization of the territorial government in 1850, and perhaps until 1851, until which period, according to my impression, the government did not go into full effect. With some of those officers I had an acquaintance, and my recollection is that none of them were employed in the military service of the country. They were, most of them, American citizens, residing in New Mexico at the time of their appointment by General Kearny. One of them, the Governor of the Territory, was massacred by the Indians during an insurrection in 1847. The circuit attorney was also massacred by the Indians during the same insurrection. But, sir, I do not desire to detain the committee, and with these explanations I will close.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri, who has just addressed the committee, to the provisions of this bill, particularly to the second section. The first section of the bill provides that the difference between the amounts received by the civil officers in New Mexico, and the amount of salary allowed under the organic law of the Territory, shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

It seems that some $13,000 or $14,000 were paid to these civil officers out of the treasury of the Territory, from a fund that had to be collected there. But the second section of this bill, if I understand it, provides that we shall pay the entire amount which was paid as compensation to these civil officers during that time. I should be glad to have the gentleman from Missouri give some information upon that point, and at the same time point out, if we agree to that section, the distinction in principle, if there be one, between the provision made in that section and the payment of the civil fund of California.

Mr. COX. I do not understand the explanation of the gentleman from Missouri as going so far as to say that this bill provides for the whole amount designed to be paid to these civil officers. Now, a single statement, if the gentleman knows the fact, would meet the suggestion which I made. I desire to know whether any of these civil officers were also military officers in the service of the United States, and whether they were receiving their regular salaries at the time, as of course they did, as they were military officers of the United States?

Mr. PHELPS. My recollection does not serve me perfectly in reference to the fact suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky. I cannot, therefore, answer definitely his question. It may be that one or two of these civil officers had been in the military service of the United States, and perhaps were, at the time. I am not certain as to the fact, in reference to the other officers; but I know the Governor and secretary were not in the military service of the country.

In relation to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] I will say, that I did not allude to the second section of the bill when I was addressing the committee a few minutes ago. I spoke in reference to the first section merely. Of the second section, to which the gentleman from Alabama specially objects, I am not prepared to express a definite opinion. I certainly am not at all satisfied that it ought to be adopted. There was an erroneous estimate made in the report of the Secretary of War, in which he showed that a certain sum of money had been advanced by the Territory, money which had been made up of taxes levied upon the merchants of the Territory, and that certain other sums had been paid out of moneys, raised in some other manner—perhaps by taxation upon the inhabitants themselves. But, so far as the payment of the amount which may be due these persons who discharged the duties incumbent upon them, and the greater part, at least, of whom were taken from civil life is concerned, I think it is the duty of the Government to make allowance for it, and I am, therefore, in favor of the adoption of the first section of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I move, if it be in order, that this bill be passed over for the present to enable us to obtain more accurate information in relation to these matters.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think that the committee is in a condition to vote on the second section, at all events. That section involves a very important principle, a fact doubtless apparent to every member. We ought not, therefore, to pass it by now, after it has received so much consideration; for it may hereafter come up, when our attention shall not be so fully drawn to it.

Mr. BISSELL. Allow me to say a word. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Faulkner,] who reported this bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, is not now present. He may have had very good cause for inserting that second section, which does not now appear to us. I confess that I have not a very distinct recollection of the features of the bill, nor the principles on which it was drawn; but as it is proposed to lay it aside informally until the gentleman from Virginia shall come in, I would suggest that no exception be made, and that the whole bill be laid aside until he has made his explanation.

Mr. HOUSTON. The difficulty is, that it may come up at a time when it cannot receive our attention so fully as it should.

Mr. BISSELL. Our attention has been sufficiently called to it now.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his motion, I will move to strike out the second section, so that, if postponed, it will be with that motion pending.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw my motion for the purpose indicated.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I move to strike out the second section. If the committee choose, it alone can now postpone the bill with that amendment pending.

Mr. BISSELL. Does the gentleman propose to take a vote on his amendment now?

Mr. HOUSTON. I would rather do so; but my proposition is only to have that motion pending if the bill be laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be informally laid aside.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The next bill on the Calendar for consideration is House bill No. 315, entitled "A bill to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the bill through.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill by sections for amendment. The first section was reported, as follows:

"That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a surveyor general for New Mexico, whose power and authority, duties, compensation, and allowances for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, &c., shall be the same as now provided by law for the surveyor general of California; and he shall locate his office from time to time at such places as may be directed by the President of the United States."

Mr. HAVEN. I have not examined this bill very closely, but I object to the mode of measuring the compensation of the surveyor general as provided in it. I move to strike out that portion of the section that relates to his compensation, and to insert the specific sum merely that the surveyor general of California receives.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York name the sum?

Mr. HAVEN. I know not what the sum is. If the gentleman who reported the bill is in the House, he can inform us what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill was reported by the gentleman from California, [Mr. Latham.]

Mr. HAVEN. I would, then, inquire of the gentleman from California what the compensation of the surveyor general of California is?

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman from California is not now in his seat; but I have sent to the library for the statutes, which will give us the desired information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the salary of the surveyor general of California is $4,500.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to strike out the words indicated by me, and to insert that sum, although I do not profess to know whether it is a proper sum or not.

Mr. DISNEY. I would remind the gentleman from New York [Mr. Haven] that this section provides for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, &c., the same as are now provided by law for the surveyor general of California.

Mr. HAVEN. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio, I beg to remind him that I am not finding fault with the amount, but with the mode of measuring the compensation of this officer, so that we can never know what it is without referring from one statute to another.

Mr. ORR. I understand from the Chairman that the salary of the surveyor general of California is $4,500. The salary of the surveyor general of Oregon is but $3,500. I suppose that it is not more expensive living in New Mexico than Oregon. I think the California standard is not the true standard to be adopted by the committee; and I suggest, therefore, that we fix the salary of this officer at $3,500.

Mr. HAVEN. Will the gentleman allow me to state another fact, that the salary of the surveyor general of Iowa is but $2,500? With that suggestion, I will accept any reasonable sum which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Orr] will name.

Mr. ORR. I will suggest $3,500.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York prepare his amendment in writing? The manner in which this section is drawn will require something more than a mere insertion of the amendment indicated by him.

Mr. HAVEN. I propose to strike out the words indicated by me, and insert "$3,000," or "$3,500." I do not care which.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will see the necessity of submitting an amendment in a different form from that indicated by him, if he will examine the following language:

"That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a surveyor general for New Mexico, whose power and authority, duties, compensation, and allowances for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, &c., shall be the same as now provided by law for the surveyor general of California."

Mr. HAVEN. I will prepare an amendment which I think will meet the case.

Mr. ORR. Before the amendment is announced, I would suggest to the gentleman from New York to say $3,000 as the salary of the surveyor general. I understand the Governor's salary is only $3,000.

Mr. HAVEN. I have no objection to that. The Clerk will so modify my amendment.

The amendment was reported by the Clerk, as follows:

"That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a surveyor general for New Mexico, whose salary shall be $3,000 per annum, and whose power, authority, and duties, and allowances for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, &c., shall be the same as that now provided for by law for the surveyor general of California."

Mr. DISNEY took the floor.

Mr. ORR. Before the gentleman from Ohio commences his remarks, I would suggest another amendment to that of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Haven.] I propose to amend his amendment by striking out the word "California," and substituting "Oregon."

Mr. HAVEN. I accept that amendment.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, before the committee reported this bill, we had full consultations with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and with the Delegate from New Mexico, and from all the information we obtained, and all the light that could be thrown on the subject, we came unanimously to the conclusion that the expense of living was about the same in New Mexico as in California—that it is quite as expensive to live in one place as in the other. I would here remark to the committee, that I had no idea the bill under discussion would be reached to-day, and therefore did not come prepared to discuss it.

Mr. Chairman, it will be observed, by reference to the accounts, that the compensation of the surveyor general of California is $4,500 per annum, as salary. Then there is allowed to him for clerk hire $11,000 per annum. It is provided that the salary of a clerk shall not exceed $2,500 per annum, and that for office rent, fuel, and other incidental expenses, such sum as may be necessary shall be allowed by the Secretary of the Interior; such sum, however, not to exceed $10,000. These, Mr. Chairman, are the sums provided for, and allowed by the statute in reference to the office of surveyor general of the State of California. I mean the sums allowed by the existing law. I repeat, that after a full and free consultation in regard to the matter, and after full discussion, both the head of the Land Office and myself came to the conclusion that it was right and proper to allow the same amount to the officers in New Mexico. The conclusion was based upon a statement of facts presented to us, to the effect that the expenses incident to an office in, and incident to living in New Mexico, would be as high as in the State of California. If this were so, we could not perceive why a mode of payment should be adopted in one case different from that which prevailed in the other. Nor can I perceive any reason yet. It is manifest, then, that if we were right in regard to the facts, we were right in the conclusions we arrived at. The committee would do injustice, then, by making the salaries so low as not to command abilities adequate to the performance of the duties of the office.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I desire to make only one remark. I should like to have the gentleman from New York [Mr. Haven] so modify his amendment as to provide that the salary shall be $2,500, and not $3,000.

It is contended by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Disney,] if I understand him, that the allowance to the surveyor general of New Mexico should be equal to the pay of the corresponding officer in California, because the expenses of living in the former place are as great as they are in the latter. Well, sir, if you will look at the provisions of this bill, you will find that the surveyor general of New Mexico is to have an allowance for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, &c., to the same extent as are provided for similar officers in California. And after all these things are supplied, there is a compensation, as the gentleman says, of $4,500. Now, sir, I submit to the committee, that with all these incidental expenses allowed, $4,500 is too large a salary for California; and if too much for California, it is too much for New Mexico. The gentleman from New York proposes to give $3,000 and all these allowances. I suggest that he should reduce it to $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make that motion as an amendment?

Mr. TAYLOR. I offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DISNEY. I simply desire to remind the House, by way of answer to the remarks which have just fallen from the gentleman from Tennessee, that these items of allowance do not go into the pocket of the surveyor general. They are matters of expenditure appertaining to his office; and no matter what the amount may be, whether more or less, they do not, in any part, inure to his individual advantage, as I remarked when I spoke before. The allowance for clerk hire is some $11,000 per annum. The allowance for fuel and other incidental expenses is set down at $10,000 more; but when the gentleman speaks of these incidental expenses as if they inured to the personal benefit of the surveyor general, and increased his compensation, I think he takes an entirely erroneous view of the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will allow the Chair to interrupt him, he will state that the question now pending before the committee is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee to strike out $3,000 and to insert $2,500.

Mr. DISNEY. I was aware of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman's remarks were to another point.

Mr. DISNEY. No, sir; I was aware of the amendment pending, and I desire to speak to that amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. At this precise point I desire to say a single word to the gentleman from Ohio. The allowances which the gentleman has read were under the law as it originally passed. Since that time, however, by the law, that amount has been changed. The law of March, 1853, appropriating $11,000; the estimates for the next fiscal year is $14,000; and this is the amount upon which the gentleman should base his estimates. I doubt, however, exceedingly whether he has furnished the proper construction of that branch of the law.

Mr. DISNEY. I do not know to what the gentleman alludes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will explain. This bill proposes, if I understand it, that the surveyor general of New Mexico shall have the same power and authority, and the same compensation, as the surveyor general of California. It also proposes that he shall receive the same allowance for clerk hire. Now, I suppose the intention of the bill is to give to each clerk employed the same amount of compensation. The law, however, adds a provision that the salary of no clerk shall be more than $2,500. Now, it strikes me that this bill does not make any direct appropriation for that purpose; if it does, it is exceedingly objectionable in that respect.

If we are to construe this bill as the gentleman from Ohio seems to think it should be construed, it will make a continuing permanent appropriation. If this construction be placed upon it, and the provision be adopted, and hereafter you should find good reasons for increasing the allowance for these expenses to $20,000 or $30,000 for California, the very fact of making this increase would, without any further legislation, carry a like increase for the surveyor general of New Mexico.

I say, then, that if this be the proper construction, the bill is liable to the objection of making a permanent and indefinite appropriation, and will become an expenditure which will not be estimated for by the Departments, and of which Congress will never know anything, unless it be by computing the amount by that allowed to the surveyor general in California. I shall propose, at the proper time, to strike out that clause which makes provision for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, &c., so as to obviate this difficulty, and to have the proper allowance made as such allowances are made to any other Territory.

Now, sir, one word more. If the arguments of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. TAYLOR,] and of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] be conclusive upon the points to which they were directed, they will also apply with equal force to allowances for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, &c.; and if these arguments are correct, then the surveyor general of New Mexico is not entitled to a compensation of $4,500, nor should clerk hire and other incidental expenses be so high.

I agree with the gentleman from New York, that it is not true that office rent and clerk hire need be as high in New Mexico as they are in California; but if they are, then both should receive the same consideration, and should receive the same appropriation.

Mr. DISNEY. I cannot agree with the gentleman from Alabama. He talks about the construction which I seem to give the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will ask the gentleman a question that will settle the point between us. Does the gentleman construe this to make a permanent appropriation for the expenditures under the head of clerk hire?

Mr. DISNEY. Why, a law making allowances is not an appropriation. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means gets up here, and asks me whether a bill making allowances for a definite sum is not an appropriation? Why, sir, an appropriation is an entirely different thing. It is consecrating and setting apart of a particular amount in the Treasury to be applied to a particular purpose. A thousand statutes making allowances do not make one appropriation. Pass one hundred such bills as the one now pending before the committee, and yet no appropriation would be made. What, then, does the gentleman from Alabama mean by talking about what will be required by this appropriation? Does not the law in reference to the surveyor general of California make the same allowance? Is not the same officer allowed a particular sum? Does that obviate the necessity of making appropriations subsequently, during each and every succeeding year? Unquestionably not. I again ask, then, what does the gentleman mean? None can differ about the matter; and if the gentleman had read the law a little more carefully, he would have perceived that, while the allowance is made of $1,000 for the purpose of defraying the expenses of clerk hire, it goes on to say, "or so much thereof as may be necessary." It recites the sum to be fixed in each and every year by appropriation.

Well, sir, look for one moment at the enormous amount of labor to be imposed on this officer in the Territory of New Mexico, in addition to that imposed on the surveyor general of California. He is required by the bill to be an active commissioner in regard to the land titles in New Mexico. He is required to take depositions, to take testimony, and to set in judgment on these cases—not finally, to be sure; but he is to be charged with all the duties of a land commissioner in addition to the general duties which will devolve on him as surveyor general of that land district.

I come again and say that I am perfectly satisfied, from all the information which I could get in relation to it, that the expenses of every sort in the Territory of New Mexico are quite as high as they are in the State of California. Why, sir, look at the condition of that country, removed a thousand miles in the interior beyond all your settlements, with no means of communication with the Atlantic settlements and possessions. Every article carried there is attended with enormous cost for transportation. Let the gentleman from Alabama look at the charges to which the Government is now subject for supplies there. Let him look at what we have to pay for the support of our Army in New Mexico, and he will be enabled to form some accurate idea of the actual expenditures necessary in order to support the officers of Government.

The whole point turns on the fact whether the expenses necessary to support the individual in the Territory of New Mexico are as great as they are in the State of California. And, in regard to that point, all I have to say is to repeat what I have already said. I have looked into the matter, and am satisfied that the cost is as great. Now, gentlemen may state here otherwise, without having looked into it. They may vaguely entertain an idea that the case is different; but I undertake to say that, if you reduce the salary down to $2,000, or $2,500, per year, no man can be had to hold the office. You may as well strike it out altogether. I say again, that the whole point of this case turns on the expenses of living in that Territory; and that fact alone should determine the amount to be allowed. I have been satisfied that the expenses necessarily existing there require the amounts provided for by this bill; and hence, the bill declares, in general terms, that the allowance for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, and the compensation of the officer himself, shall be the same as that allowed in California.

But the gentleman from Alabama speaks of this as a permanent appropriation. It is no such thing. It is an allowance fixed by law, or so much thereof as may be found necessary, in each and every year, to be appropriated for by a specific act at the time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY.] I did not propose to take part in this debate. I only intended to furnish some facts for the gentleman from Ohio, who, although he framed the bill, and fixed the compensation of this officer the same as that of the surveyor general of California, seemed not to be able to answer the question when it was put to him, what the surveyor in California gets. And yet he seems astonished that everybody else does not know everything about the matter.

Mr. DISNEY (interrupting) here made a remark which the reporter could not hear.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman, I think, is mistaken again. He says the language of his bill is similar to the language of the law in relation to California. I do not understand it so, and the committee cannot understand it so. The law in relation to California gives the surveyor general a salary of $4,500, and then it provides that there shall be allowed for clerk hire in the office of the surveyor general the sum of $11,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary; provided, that the salary of no clerk shall exceed the sum of $2,500 per annum; and for office rent, fuel, and other incidental expenses of his office, such sum as shall be found necessary by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding the sum of $11,000. Now that language of the law specifies the salaries of the surveyor and his clerks, and then it makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior—to do what? Why, to report the amounts that may be necessary for rent, fuel, and other incidental expenses of the surveyor's office. But such is not the language here. The effect of the language used here is to provide that whatever is allowed in California shall be allowed in New Mexico.

Mr. DISNEY. Exactly.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman assents. Now, suppose it should turn out that the expenses in California, in the possibility of events, should become double what they are in New Mexico; under this law, we must still continue to pay the same in New Mexico as we pay in California.

A friend near me suggests that this bill is loosely drawn. It occurs to me that it is very strangely drawn. Look at this phraseology: "He shall have the same power and authority," &c. Now, what power and authority is meant there? Why, the same power and authority that the surveyor general in California has. And when you look to the law in relation to California, what does it say? Why, that the surveyor general of California shall have the same power and authority as the surveyor general of some other Territory has. These continued references from one law to another make it almost impossible for any gentleman to trace out what the power and authority are. Well, sir, the gentleman asks me if I want a specific enumeration of the powers of the surveyor general. It seems to me that it is the duty of a committee of this House to give us in the bill the specific powers and duties, or to be able to tell us what the general reference means and includes. A committee of this House that has examined this matter, as I am sure the Committee on Public Lands has done, should never be at a loss to tell us what the bill means, and what it does cover.

Now, I differ with the gentleman again about another thing. He says that this is not an appropriation of money, but that an appropriation of money is where you set apart a certain sum for a specific purpose. The gentleman nods assent to the definition. I should like to know what a permanent appropriation is? He understand by an indefinite appropriation? He says that it is no appropriation at all. What, then, does he understand by a permanent appropriation?

Mr. DISNEY. It is a standing order, directing that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay so much of the public money as is necessary to meet certain contingencies provided for in acts passed by Congress.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman says that a permanent appropriation is a standing order, directing that so much of the public money shall be paid as is necessary to meet certain contingencies. But you direct here, in this bill, that just the same amount shall be allowed this officer in New Mexico as is allowed the same officer in California. Is that not a standing order? Is it not continuing an appropriation just as much as if it was a permanent appropriation? An indefinite appropriation is to cover an expenditure, the amount of which is not known. But the gentleman says that an indefinite appropriation is no appropriation at all. In that he is mistaken; because we often make appropriations of money to meet expenditures, the amount of which is not known.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman from Alabama seems to be laboring under the idea that this allowance is an appropriation. No money can be drawn from the Treasury except by law. An individual may have a claim against the Government of the United States which is legitimate, and recognized as such, but unless a specific appropriation of money be made to discharge that debt, the Secretary of the Treasury cannot pay it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I take the gentleman's correction to be—

Mr. DISNEY. I only desire to ask the gentleman one question, and that is, if this bill become a law, whether the salary, or this allowance, can be paid to the parties indicated, without a specific appropriation by law, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay it?

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman will recollect that I commenced my remarks by differing with him in the construction of this provision. I understood him as indicating that this was an appropriation of a gross amount, and I questioned the correctness of that construction. But he says that I will not recognize the difference between an appropriation and the language of this section. Suppose there is no appropriation made in this bill; what is the bill then? Why there is an obligation to appropriate money, and you are bound to make it. The gentleman himself acknowledges that it creates an obligation to the amount of the sums specified for this officer in California. It could not be in any other way. That is the express language; and we simply give the power, and authority, and compensation to the surveyor general of New Mexico, such as the existing law confers on the surveyor general of California; and, in addition, we say he shall have the same allowances for clerk hire as the surveyor general of California. Now, you cannot draw any distinction between them; and if, at this session of Congress, you appropriate $50,000 for the surveyor generalship of California, I would like gentlemen to tell me whether, under the terms of this amendment, the like officer in New Mexico would not be entitled to the same sum?

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the gentleman from Alabama how he can make that appear? So far as the salary of the surveyor general is concerned, that is fixed by the terms of the act. So far as the salaries of the employees of the surveyor general are concerned, that is a matter of contract between him and the employees. And no matter what further allowances the House may pass for the office of the surveyor general of the State of California, does that give any right to one of the employees of the surveyor general of New Mexico on which to base a demand for additional salary or allowances?

Mr. HOUSTON. To elucidate more clearly my objection, I will make this point. The surveyor general of California employs twenty clerks. Now, I would like to know if the surveyor general in New Mexico can also employ twenty clerks? And could we control him by an appropriation, whether he might need such a number of clerks or not? The estimate is not made with respect to the wants of New Mexico, but it is simply a proposition that that Territory shall have what California has in reference to the office of surveyor general. Whether the clerks are necessary or not, whether these incidental expenses are necessary or not, the surveyor general of New Mexico would have a right to charge the same sum for rent, fuel, and incidental expenses, as that allowed to the same officer in California. In my opinion, that sort of legislation is exceedingly objectionable.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Chairman, I have put my amendment into a form a little more grammatical than that reported. I have sent it up to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have it read.

The amendment was accordingly reported, as follows:

That the President, by and with the advice of the Senate, shall be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint a surveyor general for New Mexico, whose annual salary shall be $3,000, and whose power, authority, and duties shall be the same as those provided by law for the surveyor general of Oregon. He shall have the proper allowances for clerk hire, office rent, and fuel, &c., not exceeding what now is, or what hereafter may be allowed by law to the surveyor general of Oregon; and shall locate his office, from time to time, at such place as may be directed by the President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] proposes to strike out "$3,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

Mr. LETCHER. If I am correct in my recollection, the Governor of New Mexico receives $3,000 a year, $1,500 as Governor, and $1,500 as superintendent of Indian affairs. My impression is that it is $3,000, but a gentleman behind me thinks it is $2,500. If the Governor of that Territory, who is the chief executive officer in it, who is bound, to some extent, to keep open house for the accommodation of all who choose to call upon him, can live upon a salary of $3,000, why cannot the surveyor general live upon a like salary? The only reason which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] assigns why the surveyor general cannot live upon $3,000 is, that the expenses of living there are exceedingly high, and, as far as he has been able to collect information, as high as they are in California. I apprehend that in this the gentleman is entirely mistaken. What ran up prices in California? Did not the prices run up there from the fact alone of the discovery of gold? No such consideration applies to New Mexico. If I am correctly informed, corn and wheat can be raised in New Mexico, and the inhabitants thus supply themselves with their own bread. To a great extent, too, they can supply their own meat; and I cannot understand what it is that multiplies the cost of living there, so that the surveyor general cannot live upon a salary equal to that which is given to the Governor of the Territory.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Governor does not receive $2,500 for his services as Governor, as the gentleman seems to suppose. He receives $1,500 per annum as Governor, and $1,000 as superintendent of Indian affairs.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman from Alabama corrects me. The gentleman says he receives $1,500 as Governor, and $1,000 as superintendent of Indian affairs, and it is proposed to increase it to $3,000 for the performance of both duties. I cannot imagine how this House can come to the conclusion that a subordinate officer needs a larger salary for his support than the chief Executive officer. He does not have to entertain one third the number of visitors which the Executive does, and he cannot have near as many charges upon him as the Governor of the Territory must have.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, (in his seat.) It demands a higher order of talent to be surveyor.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not know about that. The gentleman says it requires a higher order of talent to perform the duties of surveyor general than it does to perform those of the Governor.

Mr. DISNEY. Does the gentleman suppose there is any sort of comparison between the labors of the Governor and those of the surveyor general, who has to superintend the surveys of all that vast country, look to the discharge of the complicated duties connected with it, provide the returns, &c., &c.? Does the gentleman imagine there is any comparison?

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman displays his accustomed ingenuity in dodging out of a hard place, and trying to secure a better one. In his former remarks, this salary was to be increased because the expenses of living required it; but now that the gentleman is pressed upon that point, he abandons that ground, and says it is to be done because of the great amount of labor which he has to perform.

Mr. DISNEY. I abandon no ground which I have taken.

Mr. LETCHER. Then the gentlemen is not to be understood by the expressions which he uses upon this floor. I take the gentleman's views from what he says; but that is not the rule by which he wishes his position interpreted. He abandons the only point which he has presented throughout his whole argument, and presents a new point, and yet says he has not abandoned the ground he previously occupied. I do not think that many of us will agree in that conclusion.

But so far as this question of labor is concerned, I would ask what is the labor of all these officers? Is not a day's labor of each officer of the Government the same, whatever may be its character? In the case of the surveyor general, of whom we are speaking, he has his assistants who perform his duties, and relieve him from a vast amount of labor. But is there no labor to be performed upon the part of the Governor, who has to travel over the Territory, visit the Indians, and negotiate and arrange treaties with them? All these things are required to be performed by him, and it strikes me that these labors imposed upon him, as superintendent of Indian affairs, are as great as those of the surveyor general.

But here, again, the gentleman says that if you fix the salary at $3,000 you will get nobody to take the office. I wish I could see the time come when somebody would refuse to take an office because the salary was only $3,000!

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. So do I.

Mr. LETCHER. I have heard that here in Washington the salaries are exceedingly low, and yet we have not only all the offices filled, but we have those who endeavor to get others turned out that they may take their places.

Now, sir, I say that $3,000 is a compensation too large for the services of this officer. I hope the House will not go on increasing indefinitely the salary of every man who comes up here and makes application, to such an extent that you draw off his affections and his allegiance from his State. I see no reason why you should pay your Federal officers higher salaries than the States where they are located can afford to pay for services of like character and dignity. Sir, I repeat, the effect is to draw off the affections and allegiance of men from the States, and center their affections upon the Federal Government and the Federal Treasury. You draw their attention to the central Government, and make them careless and indifferent as to what is going on in their own States. Sir, by this increase of compensation you withdraw them from their proper and legitimate callings at home, bring them here, and make them pensioners upon the bounty of the Federal Government. It tends to centralize and consolidate the power of the Federal Government, to weaken that of the States, and to break down their rights. Why should the officers of the Federal Government in the States be paid higher salaries than are paid to State officers having duties of an equal grade, and of as difficult a nature to perform? I see no reason, and I hope we shall conform our action in regulating these salaries to this standard, and not furnish inducements for men to leave home to come into Federal employ.

The question now being upon the adoption of Mr. TAYLOR's amendment,

Mr. ORR. I call for tellers, in order that we may have a quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and PARKER were appointed.

The question was then put on the amendment; and, on a division, there were—ayes 48, noes 54; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no quorum voting, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was then called, and the names of the absentees noted.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order—bills relating to the organized Territories—and finding itself without a quorum, had directed the roll to be called, and the names of the absentees to be noted; and had further directed him to report a list of the absentees, as follows, to the House, to be entered on the Journal:

Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barry, Bell, Bennett, Benton, Bliss, Bocock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Hugg, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chase, Chastain, Churchwell, Cook, Craige, Crocker, Cultom, Cumming, Curtis, Dawson, Dean, Dent, DeWitt, Dick, Dickinson, Dunham, John M. Elliott, English, Etheridge, Ewing, Faulkner, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hendrix, Hastings, Hibbard, Hiester, Hill, Hiltner, J. Glancy Jones, Kidwell, Kutz, Lamb, Lane, Lindley, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Morgan, Morrison, Nichols, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Packard, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Powell, Preston, Pringle, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Rowe, Russell, Sage, Shannon, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Solters, Frederick P. Stanton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Walley, Warren, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, and Yates.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and twenty-six gentlemen have answered to their names. A quorum now being present, the Chairman will resume his place.

The CHAIRMAN then resumed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee found itself without a quorum it was in the act of dividing on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. TAYLOR,] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York—to strike out $3,000 and insert in lieu thereof $2,500. The question was being taken by tellers.

Messrs. PARKER, of Indiana, and WHEELER, again took their places.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was disagreed to, the tellers reporting only 51 in the affirmative.

The question then recurred on Mr. HAVEN'S amendment; and it was adopted.

There being no further proposition to amend the first section of the bill, the Clerk reported the second section, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That to every white male American citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such, over the age of twenty-one years, who removed to and was residing in said Territory prior to the 1st day of January, 1853, there shall be, and hereby is, donated one half section, or three hundred and twenty acres of land, if single; but if married, one section, or six hundred and forty acres. And to each white male American citizen who shall have removed or shall remove to and settle in said Territory between the 1st day of January, 1853, and the 1st day of January, 1858, there shall, in like manner, be donated one quarter section, or one hundred and sixty acres, if a single man, or, if married, one half section, or three hundred and twenty acres, on condition of actual settlement and cultivation for not less than four years: Provided, however, That each of said donations shall include the actual settlement and improvement of the donee, and shall be selected by legal subdivisions, within three months after the survey of the land where the settlement was made before the survey; and where the settlement was made after the survey, then within three months after the settlement has been made; and all persons failing to designate the boundaries of their claims within that time, shall forfeit all right to the same.

Mr. EASTMAN. I move to amend that section by striking out the word "said," and inserting in lieu thereof "any organized," so that the section will read:

"That to every white male American citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such, over the age of twenty-one years, who removed to and was residing in any organized Territory, prior to the 1st day of January, 1853, there shall be given," &c.

The object of the amendment is to make the provisions of the bill apply to all the organized Territories of the United States—Minnesota, Washington, Utah, New Mexico, and Oregon.

Mr. ORR. I would inquire of the Chair if that amendment is in order? My impression is that it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is for the purpose of establishing the office of surveyor general in New Mexico, and to grant donations to actual settlers therein. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, if the Chair understands it, is to make donations to actual settlers in all the other organized Territories.

Mr. EASTMAN. The object of my amendment is to extend the provisions of this bill over all the organized Territories.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, is not in order.

Mr. EASTMAN. Will the Chair state why it is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Because it is not germane to the bill under consideration.

Mr. EASTMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask for tellers on the appeal.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. COBB. I now rise to perform a duty which I suppose to be imperative upon me, and that is, to move to amend this bill in a very essential feature.

I propose so to amend the bill that it may read as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That to every white male American citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such, over the age of twenty-one years, who removed to and was residing in said Territory prior to the 1st day of January, 1853, there shall be, and hereby is, donated one hundred and sixty acres of land. And to each white male American citizen who shall have removed, or shall remove to and settle in said Territory, between the 1st day of January, 1853, and the 1st day of January, 1858, there shall, in like manner, be donated one quarter section, or one hundred and sixty acres, on condition of actual settlement and cultivation for not less than four years," &c.

The object I have in view in offering this amendment is to make the grant of land one hundred and sixty acres in every case where provision is made in this bill for grants of lands to actual settlers. When we had the homestead bill under consideration in the Committee on the Public Lands, the question came up whether we should grant more land to citizens of the Territories than those of the States. We determined then to put them both upon the same footing.

This bill proposes to grant one half section, or three hundred and twenty acres of land, to every single man, and one section, or six hundred and forty acres, to every married man, who shall have removed to, and was residing in, the Territory prior to the 1st of January, 1853. I think we should confine the grant to one hundred and sixty acres, and make it conform to the provisions of the homestead bill. I see no good reason why we should make a grant of three hundred and twenty acres to single persons, and six hundred and forty acres to heads of families in New Mexico, when, perhaps, we have but few American citizens there. This provision is, no doubt, incorporated into the bill upon the precedent set in the case of Oregon Territory, where a quantity of land, equal in amount to that proposed in this bill, was donated to the settlers of that Territory. It is evident to every one who has been in Congress for any length of time, that a greater necessity existed for making such a grant at that time than could possibly exist in the case of any Territory at the present time. The great object then was to settle a distant country entirely isolated from American settlements, and we held out great inducements to secure it. Shall we continue to make these large grants in the case of new Territories, or shall we make the grants to actual settlers in the Territories the same as is provided for in the homestead bill? If one hundred and sixty acres do not prove a sufficient inducement to encourage emigration to New Mexico, I trust no inducement will be offered exceeding that amount.

We shall soon have before us another bill relating to the Territory of Utah; and I shall then feel it my duty to speak of the merits of the bill, and especially of the grant of land to heads of families, in a manner that may not be entirely satisfactory to some who may hereafter read what I may say in relation to the matter. The question which I now propound to the committee is, whether you will make the grants in this bill in every case one hundred and sixty acres, or will you make them three hundred and twenty and six hundred and forty acres?

That proposition now is brought into a nutshell. Will you provide for them as the bill provides? The matter is now for the committee to determine. If they think it best to increase the quantity from one hundred and sixty to three hundred and twenty acres, of course the committee can do so. But it will not be to my satisfaction. I shall propose to amend the section still further.

[The Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary; which was laid on the Speaker's table.]

Mr. HOWE. I rise to inquire of the member of the Committee on Public Lands who reported this bill, what object the committee had in using the peculiar phraseology that appears in the second line—"white male American citizens of the United States?" [Laughter.]

Mr. DISNEY. Well, what of it?

Mr. HOWE. I should like to know why the word "American" is used here? And it goes on: "or who have declared their intention to become such." Now, it strikes me that this language is somewhat unusual. I propose to strike out the words "white," in the first line, and "American," in the second line, so as to leave the sentence to read, "male citizens of the United States, or any persons who have declared their intention to become such."

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania again indicate the words which he proposes to strike out?

Mr. Howe repeated as above.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] is, that the latter part of the section be stricken out. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Howe] will take precedence of that proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was then put on the adoption of the latter amendment; and a division was called for.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the Chair be good enough to state the amendment precisely to the committee? I think it is not understood.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will now be reported to the committee.

Mr. HOWE. I propose to modify my amendment, so that it shall read:

"That to every male citizen of the United States, or to such person as shall declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States," &c.

Mr. DISNEY. I need hardly call the attention of the committee to the point really involved in this amendment, because it is discoverable at a glance. The point of the amendment offered by the gentleman is simply that of the introduction of negroes. The question is agitated in the House whether negroes are not recognized in some of the States as citizens.

Mr. HUGHES, (interrupting.) I understand this section, as it now reads, requires that there shall be given "to every white male American citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such," &c., [laughter:] that is, his intention to become a male citizen, &c. [Laughter.] So it reads now. It is wrong; and yet to correct it may appear hypercritical. I do not understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Howe] as intending to give the rights secured in this bill to negroes. I suppose his amendment was designed simply as a correction of language which is evidently wrong. It should read, "to every citizen of the United States, or to every person who shall declare his intention to become such," &c. That I understand to be the design of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. If I am wrong in my supposition he will correct me.

Mr. HOWE. That is it.

Mr. HUGHES. As the language now is, all that the party has to do is to declare his intention of becoming a "white male citizen of the United States," and he will be embraced within the purview of this act, however impossible it may be to become such, notwithstanding his declaration of intention. The gentleman from Pennsylvania gives his assent to the view I have taken of his intention in this matter, that it was not to revive the question whether these lands should be given to negroes.

Mr. ORR. Why not leave the word "white" in, then?

Mr. HUGHES. I trust this amendment will prevail, and particularly as I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania intended by the amendment what I supposed he did.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to the word "white" being there at all. In this far-off Territory, where the color of the inhabitants is more or less mixed up, why should we make this odious discrimination against this particular color? This region is not strictly an American territory. The people are made up of those from almost every nation; and it does appear to me that this House should occasionally legislate in a manner that the colored man will have some spot upon the face of God's earth where he can stand.

Mr. ORR, (sotto voce.) Let him go to Rhode Island.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, in this Territory of New Mexico, where there are comparatively few inhabitants coming from any of the States—where there are all sorts and conditions of people—is there any reason why the colored man should be shut out? Is there any reason why he should not be permitted to go there, and enjoy the same rights and privileges as the white man? No, sir; whether a man is from the North or the South, I cannot see what difference it makes to him. I cannot see why you should not be willing that these people should have an opportunity to live somewhere. Are they not already reduced to a sufficient depth of degradation? Is not every condition that can be imposed upon them, both in the free and in the slave States, calculated to reduce them still lower, enough to satisfy gentlemen?

Sir, for one, as a member of this House, I solemnly and earnestly protest against this House identifying itself or this Government, with a movement to shut out this unfortunate race of men from participating in the same rights and privileges as other inhabitants of that Territory. As a member of this House, as an American citizen representing a free constituency, I protest, in the name of that constituency, against the citizens of any State being proscribed from going to this Territory of the United States, and from becoming citizens of that Territory. It is an infringement upon the spirit, if not an infringement upon the letter, of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I say it is a cruel injustice to that race to mark them wherever you find them; that you should seek to degrade them by placing every odious restriction upon them that you can invent. I trust that the members of this House, or at least a majority of them, will be willing to have this clause of the bill stricken out. I trust that we shall strike out this word "white," and make one small beginning towards doing justice to this class of men.

There is already a mixture of this blood in the people of that Territory—men born upon the soil—I will venture to say. And will you, by your legislation, permit men coming from any quarter of the globe, to come upon the land which these men have cultivated, and dispossess the occupants born upon the soil? If you do, you commit an act of the grossest injustice. These men have better rights to the ownership of the land than the mere stranger or foreigner who may emigrate to the Territory. Once more I say, that to exclude these men from the rights which you extend to others, is to do the cruellest injustice to them. I hope the word "white" will be stricken out, and that we shall permit all to go there upon a standing of equality.

Mr. KEITT. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. It is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to give notice that whenever an opportunity occurs, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio, that only one amendment is now pending, and that an amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. DISNEY. I move to strike out the words "or who has declared his intention to become such," and to insert after the word "years," the words "who has declared his intention to become a citizen;" so that if the amendments prevail, the section will read:

"That to every white male American citizen of the United States, or to every white male over the age of twenty-one years, who has declared his intention to become a citizen," &c.

That corrects the English, and retains the principle.

Mr. MILLSON. Is the question divisible?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out and insert, is not divisible.

Mr. KEITT made some remarks in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was put; and, on a division, there were fifty-three in the affirmative.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL, and JONES, of Louisiana, were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 47.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bills relating to the organized Territories, and had directed him to report bills No. 162 and 232 to the House, with sundry amendments.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I understand that there is a message from the President of the United States, and I call for its reading.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to receive the message?

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

The SPEAKER then laid before the House a message from the President, transmitting the correspondence between the United States chargé d'affaires at Vienna, Austria, and the State Department, in regard to the case of the Rev. James Cook Richmond; also the correspondence which has passed between the same, in regard to the rejection of the exequatur upon the commission of the United States consul, appointed for Trieste.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, the communication was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The House accordingly adjourned, at twenty minutes past three o'clock, till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 3, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BROWN presented documents in relation to the claim of Morgan McAfee, to remuneration for a certain tract of land purchased by him from the United States, and which he subsequently lost by the decision of the Supreme Court in favor of an adverse claimant; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of citizens of the United States, professing the Jewish religion, praying that measures may be taken to secure to American citizens abroad a just degree of civil and religious freedom; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the memorial of the Brotherton Indians, praying for a final settlement of their claims; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. TOUCHEY presented a petition of ship-owners and others, residing in Clinton and Westbrook, Connecticut, praying that those towns may be attached to the collection district of New Haven; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented a memorial of the Governor and Secretary of the State of Iowa, and the Mayor and Aldermen of Dubuque, praying for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Dubuque to the northern boundary of said State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the memorial of Alexander Mitchell, praying an extension of his patent for screw-pile iron light-houses; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Patience Hurd, praying a pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Lewis Humbert, praying an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, by direction of the same committee, asked to have recommended to the Committee on Pensions, the memorial and report in the case of Mary Baury, widow of Louis Baury, an officer during the war of the Revolution; which was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate, directing that committee to consider the expediency of providing by law for the appointment of a commission to revise the public statutes of the United States, to simplify their language, to correct their incongruities, to supply their deficiencies, to arrange them in order, and to reduce them to one corrected text, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, to repeal part of an act entitled "An act to provide for the safe-keeping of the acts, records, and seal of the United States, and for other purposes," reported it back without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill to provide for the construction of a suitable building for the accommodation of the district court of the United States, at Key West, in the State of Florida, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Asa Andrews, praying payment of the amount found due him from the United States by the verdict of a jury, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF RULE.

Mr. BRIGHT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the 30th rule of the Senate be amended by striking out the words, "although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate," and inserting, "unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law, or a treaty stipulation."

The rule now stands as follows, the words within brackets being those stricken out:

30. No amendment, proposing additional appropriations, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution, previously passed by the Senate, during that session, or moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, [although the same may have been previously sanctioned by the Senate,] unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law, or a treaty stipulation.

BOOKS TO NEW MEMBERS.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the joint resolution of the 24th of February, 1854, for supplying new members of the present Congress with all "such books of a public character, and in the same proportion as were furnished to members of either House during the last Congress," embracing "Mayo and Moulton's edition of the Pension and Bounty Land Laws," &c., in the proportion of eight copies to each of said new members; and that the Secretary of the Senate shall so understand and execute the said resolution.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BROWN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for carrying the mail according to time.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BRODHEAD, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Jonas P. Levy and José Maria Jarrero; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. BRODHEAD. As this bill has been recommended by the Select Committee on Mexican Claims, which recently made its report to the Senate, I ask that it may go on the Calendar without a reference.

It was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had passed bills of the following titles:

A bill making further appropriations for continuing the construction of the roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department; and

A bill to provide for the extinguishment of the title of the Chippewa Indians to the land owned and claimed by them in the Territory of Minnesota and the State of Wisconsin, and for their domestication and civilization.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled joint resolution:

A joint resolution for extending an existing contract for carrying the mail in Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. signed the same.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill from the House of Representatives, making further appropriations for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The bill to provide for the extinguishment of the title of the Chippewa Indians to the lands owned and claimed by them in the Territory of Minnesota and State of Wisconsin, and for their domestication and civilization, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill for the construction of certain military roads and wells in the Territory of New Mexico, was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

MAISON ROUGE GRANT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion submitted by Mr. JOHNSON, on Thursday, April 27, to reconsider the vote by which the bill to amend an act entitled "An act to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers and settlers on the Maison Rouge grant, in the event of the final adjudication of the title in favor of the United States," approved January 27, 1851, was passed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will explain the object of my motion to reconsider. There was a mistake in the bill as passed, which it is very necessary to correct. In consequence of that mistake, the wrong act was extended. I will read to the Senate so much of the act which should be extended as applies to the case. The title of the act which I wish to have extended is, "An act to extend preemption rights to certain lands therein mentioned;" and the portion of it which is material to this case, is in these words:

"And provided further, That any settler who has settled, or may hereafter settle, on lands heretofore reserved on account of claims under French, Spanish, or other grants, which have been, or shall be hereafter, declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be invalid, shall be entitled to all the rights of preemption granted by this act, and the act of 4th of September, 1841, entitled 'An act to appropriate the proceeds of the public lands, and to grant preemption rights,' after the lands shall have been released from reservation, in the same manner as if no reservation existed."

Thus that act which was passed on the 3d of March last, gave a right of preemption to all settlers on French or Spanish grants, the title to which had been, or might thereafter become invalid by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The object which I have in view is simply to extend the preemption right which was granted under that act of the last Congress, so as to embrace the actual improvements of the settlers. It may, perhaps, be as well to state now, though it was explained before, that under the terms of that act, any man who had any description of improvement on one of these grants, though it were but an acre, would, upon proving that fact, and complying with the terms of the act, be entitled to a preemption to one hundred and sixty acres. Still, at the same time, a man might have expended his whole fortune upon a tract of land, and might have made improvements to the extent of three hundred, or four hundred, or five hundred acres, and yet, under the provisions of the act, he would only be entitled to preemption for one hundred and sixty acres.

The object is to remedy this evil, and to give the United States exactly the amount at which they value their lands, $1 25 an acre for all which one of these settlers may have improved, though it may be more than one hundred and sixty acres. That will be effected by the amendment which I shall propose to the Senate. This was the object of the bill as proposed the other day, but, as I stated before, there was a mistake in that bill in regard to the act proposed to be extended, and therefore it is that I have moved the reconsideration.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and the Senate again proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting the following:

That the right of preemption, granted by the act of the 3d of March, 1853, entitled "An act to extend preemption rights to certain lands therein mentioned," shall be, and the same is hereby, extended, so that the settler or occupant on the Maison Rouge grant, entitled to the benefits of said act, shall be entitled to enter at the minimum price every quarter subdivision on which he has made improvements: Provided further, That whenever any part of the improvements of two or more settlers or occupants is on the same quarter section, the same shall be entered in their joint name, and their rights shall be proportioned to the value of their improvements thereon.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. JOHNSON, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "An act extending in certain cases the provisions of the act entitled, 'An act to extend preemption rights to certain lands therein mentioned,' approved March 3, 1853."

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855.

Mr. STUART. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair as to the place in which the amendment, which I offered yesterday to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, in regard to the reservations in California, stands. My suggestion was that it should follow the figures $125,000.

The PRESIDENT. As the amendment stands it will be read, if desired.

Mr. STUART. As reported, my amendment does not stand as I mentioned.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will inform the Senator that it stands in the place which he suggested.

Mr. WALKER. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following amendment:

To the Creek nation of Indians, in full for all demands against the United States, the sum of $500,000, in payment for eight million acres of land at six and a quarter cents per acre, taken from the friendly Creeks without compensation, by the treaty or capitulation of Fort Jackson, of August 8, 1814.

Mr. WALKER. The proposition now before the Senate is one of considerable importance, so far as regards the amount involved, and evidently of a great deal of importance to the nation of Indians interested in it. This matter was brought to the attention of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs upon the memorial of, what is termed in the memorial, the Muscogee or Creek nation of Indians. That memorial has been printed in very considerable numbers, and I presume each Senator has received a copy of it. It has been my individual duty to investigate this case. I have done so to the utmost of my ability, and I must say in its investigation—being unfavorably impressed with it in the commencement—I have bestowed upon it more time than I ever have in the investigation of any other case, and believe I have had about as much trouble with it as with all the other cases which I have had to investigate.

The subject was before the Committee on Indian Affairs at the last session of Congress. There was then, in my estimation, and in that of the committee, and finally in that of the Senate, not time sufficient to investigate the matter to its foundation, and trace the claim to its source and to its merits, if it had a source or merits.

The memorial then presented was a very long, and, I must say, a very abstruse document. I took it home with me, and I there gave it all the examination I could; but I found myself without the documents referred to, so that I could not make the examination at all satisfactory. When I returned to the present Congress, the case was again committed to me by the committee, and I have now a lengthy report upon it. That report, however, having been very recently completed, has not been printed.

This claim of the Creek Indians has its inception as far back as 1813. It will be borne in mind that, during what was called the Creek war of that year, the nation divided itself into two parties. The one, or the lower Creeks, as they were called, took the part of the United States. They were friendly, and fought with the troops of the United States, not only against the other party, which assumed a hostile attitude, but also against the enemies of the country—the soldiers of Great Britain. All the evidence, sir, referred to in the memorial of the Indians, I have found to be strictly correct; and, if gentlemen have read the memorial, I can only add to it my personal assurance that, after a careful examination of all the documentary evidence referred to, I have been unable to find an error, except in the paging; and I regret that it will be found in the memorial that the figures referred to as the paging of the documents are, in several instances, incorrect. However, upon ascertaining these inaccuracies, and tracing the matter up, I have found that the documents referred to, are, in every instance, correctly referred to, and contain the subject of the evidence alleged in the memorial in favor of the rights of the Indians.

As I remarked, the friendly or lower Indians took the part of the United States. The upper, or hostile Indians, which were not properly a part of the Creek nation by their nativity, but were branches of other tribes, ingrafted into the Creek nation by adoption, and permitted to settle the Creek lands, assumed a hostile attitude. They were seduced by the great warrior Tecumseh and his prophets, to take up arms not only against the United States, but against the friendly Creeks who had treated them with so much hospitality, and permitted them to ingraft themselves upon the nation, and settle upon their lands. The lower, or friendly Creeks, were depredated upon to a very great extent. It is in the recollection of the Senate that a portion of the depredations—those upon their property, their houses, their towns, their cattle and stock—has been compensated for by appropriations by Congress.

When peace came to be made, a strange occurrence took place; and I can but glance at its general features. While the lower Creeks, or those friendly to the country, had fought, and fought bravely, had borne the hardships of the war, and had had to stand the attacks of their own people, to defend, as it were, the frontier of the State of Georgia, when peace came to be made, they were made to assume the attitude of opposition, of enemies; but that was only when peace came to be made. They were not permitted to stand side by side with the people for whom they had fought. They were not permitted to stand in the attitude of friends of the country, and defenders of the country; but for the purposes of a treaty they were made to assume a hostile attitude to the country, and were placed in the singular predicament of a people capitulating to the Government. That this may be understood, I will refer to the history of the matter, as given in the commencement of the memorial presented, showing the foundation of the claim:

"Before any white men settled in Georgia, nearly the whole country afterwards erected into the great States of Georgia and Alabama, belonged to the Muscogee confederation, more commonly called the Creek nation."

"This nation was always composed of two parts, called at a later day the upper and lower Creeks."

"The lower Creeks inhabited the country on the Chattahoochee river, and were the original Muscogees, always friendly with the whites. Their principal towns were Coweta and Cussetah. They alone owned the national lands, and had a right to dispose of them."

Then, there is a reference to the documentary evidence to show this fact:

"The upper Creeks were composed of several tribes—conquered or amicably received by the Muscogees. They lived on the Coosa, Tallapoosa, and Alabama rivers, where the Muscogees had assigned them land. At an early day they were under French influence, and then under Spanish protection, and many of them were always hostile to the United States."

"The lower Creeks made several treaties with Georgia, ceding lands; among others, those of Galphintion, in October, 1785, and of Shouderbone, in November, 1785. Others were made with the United States, at New York, in August, 1790, at Coleraine, in June, 1796, and others in 1802 and 1805."

Now comes an important point, which I ask the Senate to bear in mind:

"The treaty of 1790 solemnly guaranteed to the Creek nation all their lands not then ceded."

Here, then, were laid down their rights. Their country was defined, and the Government of the United States, at that period, solemnly guaranteed their rights to this original country. Then, in the investigation, it has been found by the committee, that from 1790 they stood in the position of owners and occupants of the country which was afterwards taken from them by the capitulation of 1813, or Fort Jackson. There never was any dispute in regard to the ownership of it.

"The treaty of 1790 solemnly guaranteed to the Creek nation all their land not then ceded. This was done by express direction of General Washington, after taking the advice of the Senate."

"Up to the Creek war of 1813, the nation owned all the country between the rivers Ocmulgee and Altamaha, on the east, and the Tombigbee river and the Choctaw and Chickasaw possessions on the west; and between the thirty-first degree of north latitude, or the Spanish line, on the south, and the Cherokee country and Tennessee river on the north."

This, then, was the country solemnly guaranteed to them by the treaty of 1790.

"In the year 1813, a large number of Creek chiefs and warriors, principally of the upper towns, led away by the persuasions and arts of Tecumseh, and by the lying predictions and fanatical teachings of their prophets, commenced a vindictive and sanguinary war against the United States, and the friendly portion of their own nation. The war was waged by them equally against both. While they attacked the white settlements, and there burned, devastated, and murdered, they also destroyed the property of the friendly Creeks at the Hillabee towns, burned Kialagee, and shot its inhabitants, slew friendly chiefs at the old Coosa town, burned Hatcheehubba to ashes, and threatened Coweta, and took Tookabatcha and Kussetah."

"But the lower towns remained friendly, as did the principal chiefs of the upper towns. The hostiles came wholly from the upper towns. Of this, the volume of the American State Papers on Indian affairs contained the most ample evidence."

"The lower Creeks were a settled people, desirous of living peacefully with the whites, and wholly opposed to war. So it was solemnly declared by their council. The chiefs pursued and punished those who robbed and murdered the whites, putting many of them to death."

"Though their annuities were unpaid for 1812, 1813, and 1814, the lower Creeks remained friendly, applied to their agent, Colonel Hawkins, for assistance, collected for the purpose of self-defense, offered to join the whites with two hundred men and attack the hostiles, send a strong force to Tookabatcha, to aid the friendly upper chiefs, and remove them to Coweta, called for assistance in men and ammunition, concentrated at Coweta, extended strong patrols up the Chattahoochee, foraged as far as Tallapoosa, and sent out war parties, keeping the hostiles from attacking the Georgia frontier."

I advert to this for the purpose of showing, next, while this was their position, this was their attitude, how it is the Committee on Indian Affairs have deemed them to have been most unjustly dealt by, and now possessing most unequivocal grounds, in equity and justice, for the claim they set up.

"In response to their repeated and urgent solicitation for arms and ammunition, they succeeded in receiving at one time eleven rifles, ninety pounds of powder, and some lead and flints; and these were charged against their annuities; and at another, eight muskets, one hundred pounds of powder, and one hundred and sixty pounds of lead."

As I read this, I do not read the references to the documentary evidence which support the points made in the memorial; but, as I before stated, having examined them, I am prepared to say that, in every particular, the history and evidence in the matter fully sustain the allegations:

"In October, 1813, they were one thousand strong at Coweta, and refused to make peace with the hostiles on any terms. They aided in fighting the battles of Tallassee, Hatchie and Talladeja; four hundred of them fought under General Floyd at Autossee, and many were killed and wounded. They fought under General Jackson at Emuckfau; four hundred of them took part in the battle of Calabee, and a large body fought in the decisive battle of the Horseshoe, forded the Tallapoosa with Coffee, set the town on fire, and attacked the Red Sticks from behind, while General Jackson stormed the breastwork in front."

This, then, as the documentary history of the affair proves, was the attitude assumed and maintained by these Indians. And now we come to that portion of the case which shows the ground and foundation of their claim as now presented.

"On the 20th of April, 1814, General Thomas Pinckney arrived at Fort Jackson; and, being the senior officer of the southern Army, he assumed the command."

"On the 23d of April, 1814, he directed Colonel Hawkins to communicate to the hostile Creeks the terms on which peace would be granted to them."

I hope the Senate will bear in mind that when General Pinckney reached the country, and took the command, as it will be seen, he had authority to conduct this matter of capitulation. He directed Colonel Hawkins to apprise—who? Why, the hostile Creeks—the chief of the hostile Creeks—of what his designs were; and, also, to inform them of the terms upon which peace would be made:

"He said, as one of those terms, 'the United States will retain so much of the conquered territory as may appear to the Government thereof to be a just indemnity for the expenses of the war, and as a restoration for injuries sustained by its citizens and the friendly Creek Indians.'"

Now, bear in mind, that the country which was to be taken, according to the instructions of General Pinckney, was so much of the conquered country as would constitute an indemnity to the United States and the friendly Creeks, for the expenses of the war, and the spoiliations and devastations which had been committed by the hostiles.

"And he directed the terms to be communicated to the friendly Indians, and said: 'You may likewise inform them that the UNITED STATES WILL NOT FORGET THEIR FIDELITY, but in the arrangement which may be made of the lands to be retained as indemnity, THEIR CLAIMS WILL BE RESPECTED; and such of their chiefs as have distinguished themselves by their exertion and valor in the common cause WILL ALSO RECEIVE A REMUNERATION IN THE CEDED LANDS, and in such manner as the Government may direct.'"

Up to this time, so far as we could get at the history of the matter, the friendly Creek Indians never dreamed that by the term "conquered country" any portion of their acknowledged country—that guaranteed by the treaty of 1790—was meant at all. They had no idea of it; and it seems, really, at that time, neither General Pinckney nor the Creek agent, Colonel Hawkins, had any idea of that either. They supposed that the country lying north, inhabited by the hostiles, was that which was to be confiscated; and that the friendly Creeks were not only to be left alone and left in the possession of their country, but besides this, that they were to have indemnity made to them out of this country of the hostile Creeks, which might be confiscated, as indemnity for the expenses of the war and for depredations. But, in the further progress of this matter, we perceive that General Pinckney was superseded in command by General Jackson. Before coming to that, however, I will notice another point:

"The Secretary of War had instructed General Pinckney that one of the terms of peace with the hostiles, must be an indemnification for the expenses of the war by the cession of so much land as should be deemed an equivalent; and directed that the treaty should be in a form altogether military, and in the nature of a capitulation."

These, then, were the instructions of the Secretary of War to General Pinckney. General Pinckney caused them to be communicated to the hostile chiefs, and the further information communicated to the friendly chiefs, that such was to be the fate of the hostile chiefs; and at the same time, while the land of the hostiles should be confiscated, that out of it the friendly Creeks should be indemnified for the injuries and expenses that they had incurred.

"So that both the hostile and friendly Indians were distinctly informed that the hostiles were to capitulate and cede enough of their lands to pay the expenses of the war. Those lands were to be retained out of the conquered lands; the claims of the friendly Indians to any part even of the conquered lands were to be respected, their losses reimbursed, and their fidelity not forgotten. Out of the conquered lands so retained they were to be paid for injuries sustained by them, and such of the chiefs who had distinguished themselves were to receive a remuneration."

This, then, was in the contemplation of the Government; this was the character of the promise which was made to the friendly Creek Indians. It was according to these assurances that the friendly Creeks were met at the time, and negotiations were proposed. They were to be negotiators in the transaction—not so much as parties, parties to the negotiation in opposition, parties in fault—but they were to be witnesses, as it were, standing by to see the final consummation of peace, not only with the enemies of the country, but with the friendly Creek Indians; they were to stand by as interested parties; they were to see those who had shed their blood and devastated their country punished now at last for their improprieties and misconduct, and when they saw them thus punished, they had the gratifying intelligence communicated to them by their agent, under the authority of the Secretary of War, that they were to be indemnified for the sacrifices that they had made. It presents one of the most singular pictures in all our transactions with our Indian tribes, when we come to view the transaction constituted in the final settlement of these Indians.

We now come nearer the consummation, as it took place:

"On the 10th of July, 1814, General Jackson took the command. He fixed the 1st of August for a general meeting of the hostile Indians at Fort Jackson. When the time came, only one hostile chief was present. Thirty-six chiefs signed the articles or treaty at Fort Jackson, of whom thirty-five were friendly."

This evidence is found in the second volume of Indian affairs, pages 837, 838, and 493.

"When these chiefs met, General Jackson demanded the cession of seven eighths of the present State of Alabama, and of seven million eighty-four thousand and eight hundred acres in the southern part of Georgia. He admitted of no discussion, but ordered the chiefs to sign the treaty. These seven millions of acres in Georgia, and as much more in the southern part of Alabama, never belonged to the hostiles, nor were they conquered country. Neither General Jackson nor any white troops had ever been there. No hostile foot had trodden them. The friendly Creeks had demanded and maintained possession, without aid from any quarter, of their own country, and carried the war into the hostile country."

This, then, was the position and attitude of affairs when General Jackson went there. When there was none of the hostile chiefs assembled to treat with them, he demanded a capitulation from somebody, and strange as it appears—and it rests not merely on the word of any one, but it appears from the documentary history of the country—he demanded that those who had fought in amity with our country, and not only in amity with the country, but under his personal command, side by side with him at the battles where he fought, should become a capitulating party, sign the capitulation, and cede the country, which was never in contemplation in the instructions of the Secretary of War, but was land about which there had been no question of title, land that had ever been in the possession, occupancy, or ownership of the friends of the country, and that too solemnly guaranteed by the country as far back as 1790.

Here the honorable Senator yielded the floor that a message might be received from the President of the United States.

INDIGENT INSANE BILL VETO.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary:

MR. PRESIDENT: I am directed by the President of the United States to return to the Senate the act making a grant of land to the several States of the Union, for the benefit of indigent insane persons, with his objections thereto in writing.

MR. FOOT. If the Senator from Wisconsin will yield the floor, I would like to have the Indian appropriation bill laid aside, for the purpose of considering the message of the President.

MR. PETTIT. For the purpose of hearing the message read?

MR. FOOT. For the reading of it.

MR. HUNTER. It can be laid aside by unanimous consent.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) If no objection be made, the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill will be suspended for the purpose of reading the message.

There was no objection; and the Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

The bill entitled "An act making a grant of public lands to the several States for the benefit of indigent insane persons," which was presented to me on the 27th ultimo, has been maturely considered, and is returned to the Senate, the House in which it originated, with a statement of the objections which have required me to withhold from it my approval.

In the performance of this duty prescribed by the Constitution, I have been compelled to resist the deep sympathies of my own heart in favor of the humane purpose sought to be accomplished, and to overcome the reluctance with which I dissent from the conclusions of the two Houses of Congress, and present my own opinions in opposition to the action of a coördinate branch of the Government, which possesses so fully my confidence and respect.

If, in presenting my objections to this bill, I should say more than strictly belongs to the measure, or is required for the discharge of my official obligation, let it be attributed to a sincere desire to justify my act before those whose good opinion I so highly value, and to that earnestness which springs from my deliberate conviction, that a strict adherence to the terms and purposes of the Federal compact, offers the best, if not the only, security for the preservation of our blessed inheritance of representative liberty.

The bill provides, in substance:

First. That ten millions of acres of land be granted to the several States, to be apportioned among them in the compound ratio of the geographical area, and representation of said States in the House of Representatives.

Second. That wherever there are public lands in a State subject to sale at the regular price of private entry, the proportion of said ten millions of acres falling to such State, shall be selected from such lands within it; and that to the States in which there are no such public lands, land scrip shall be issued to the amount of their distributive shares, respectively; said scrip not to be entered by said States, but to be sold by them, and subject to entry by their assignees, provided that none of it shall be sold at less than one dollar per acre, under penalty of forfeiture of the same to the United States.

Third. That the expenses of the management and superintendence of said lands, and of the moneys received therefrom, shall be paid by the States to which they may belong, out of the treasury of said States.

Fourth. That the gross proceeds of the sales of such lands, or land-scrip so granted, shall be invested by the several States in safe stocks, to constitute a perpetual fund, the principal of which shall remain forever undiminished, and the interest to be appropriated to the maintenance of the indigent insane within the several States.

Fifth. That annual returns of lands or scrip sold shall be made by the States to the Secretary of the Interior, and the whole grant be subject to certain conditions and limitations prescribed in the bill, to be assented to by legislative acts of said States.

This bill, therefore, proposes that the Federal Government shall make provision to the amount of the value of ten millions of acres of land, for an eleemosynary object within the several States, to be administered by the political authority of the same; and it presents, at the threshold, the question, whether any such act, on the part of the Federal Government, is warranted and sanctioned by the Constitution, the provisions and principles of which are to be protected and sustained as a first and paramount duty.

It cannot be questioned that if Congress have power to make provision for the indigent insane without the limits of this District, it has the same power to provide for the indigent who are not insane; and thus to transfer to the Federal Government the charge of all the poor in all the States. It has the same power to provide hospitals and other local establishments for the care and cure of every species of human infirmity, and thus to assume all that duty of either public philanthropy, or public necessity to the dependent, the orphan, the sick, or the needy, which is now discharged by the States themselves, or by corporate institutions, or private endowments existing under the legislation of the States. The whole field of public beneficence is thrown open to the care and culture of the Federal Government. Generous impulses no longer encounter the limitations and control of our imperious fundamental law. For, however worthy may be the present object in itself, it is only one of a class. It is not exclusively worthy of benevolent regard. Whatever considerations dictate sympathy for this particular object, apply, in like manner, if not in the same degree, to idiocy, to physical disease, to extreme destitution. If Congress may and ought to provide for any one of these objects, it may and ought to provide for them all. And if it be done in this case, what answer shall be given, when Congress shall be called upon, as it doubtless will be, to pursue a similar course of legislation in the others? It will, obviously, be vain to reply that the object is worthy, but that the application has taken a wrong direction. The power will have been deliberately assumed, the general obligation will, by this act, have been acknowledged, and the question of means and expediency will alone be left for consideration. The decision upon the principle, in any one case, determines it for the whole class. The question presented, therefore, clearly is upon the constitutionality and propriety of the Federal Government assuming to enter into a novel and vast field of legislation, namely, that of providing for the care and support of all those, among the people of the United States, who, by any form of calamity, become fit objects of public philanthropy.

I readily, and I trust feelingly, acknowledge the duty incumbent on us all, as men and citizens, and as among the highest and holiest of our duties, to provide for those who, in the mysterious order of Providence, are subject to want and to disease of body or mind, but I cannot find any authority in the Constitution for making the Federal Government the great almoner of public charity throughout the United States. To do so would, in my judgment, be contrary to the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and subversive of the whole theory upon which the Union of these States is founded. And if it were admissible to contemplate the exercise of this power, for any object whatever, I cannot avoid the belief that it would, in the end, be prejudicial rather than beneficial to the noble offices of charity, to have the charge of them transferred from the States to the Federal Government. Are we not too prone to forget that the Federal Union is the creature of the States, not they of the Federal Union? We were the inhabitants of Colonies distinct in local government one from the other, before the Revolution. By that Revolution the Colonies each became an independent State. They achieved that independence, and secured its recognition by the agency of a consulting body, which, from being an assembly of the ministers of distinct sovereignties, instructed to agree to no form of government which did not leave the domestic concerns of each State to itself, was appropriately denominated a Congress. When, having tried the experiment of the Confederation, they resolved to change that for the present Federal Union, and thus to confer on the Federal Government more ample authority, they scrupulously measured such of the functions of their cherished sovereignty as they chose to delegate to the General Government. With this aim, and to this end, the fathers of the Republic framed the Constitution, in and by which the independent and sovereign States united themselves, for certain specified objects and purposes, and for those only, leaving all powers not therein set forth as conferred on one or another of the three great departments, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial, indubitably with the States. And when the people of the several States had, in their State conventions, and thus alone, given effect and force to the Constitution, not content that any doubt should, in future, arise as to the scope and character of this act, they ingrafted thereon the explicit declaration that: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Can it be controverted that the great mass of the business of Government that involved, in the social relations, the internal arrangements of the body-politic; the mental and moral culture of men; the development of local resources of wealth; the punishment of crimes in general; the preservation of order; the relief of the needy, or otherwise unfortunate members of society, did, in practice, remain with the States; that none of these objects of local concern are, by the Constitution, expressly or impliedly prohibited to the States, and that none of them are, by any express language of the Constitution, transferred to the United States? Can it be claimed that any of these functions of local administration and legislation are vested in the Federal Government by any implication? I have never found anything in the Constitution which is susceptible of such a construction. No one of the enumerated powers touches the subject, or has even a remote analogy to it. The powers conferred upon the United States have reference to Federal relations, or to the means of accomplishing or executing things of Federal relation. So, also, of the same character are the powers taken away from the States by enumeration. In either case, the powers granted and the powers restricted were so granted or so restricted only where it was requisite for the maintenance of peace and harmony between the States, or for the purpose of protecting their common interests, and defending their common sovereignty, against aggression from abroad or insurrection at home.

I shall not discuss the question of power sometimes claimed for the General Government, under the clause of the eighth section of the Constitution, which gives Congress the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," because if it has not already been settled upon sound reason and authority, it never will be. I take the received and just construction of that article, as if written to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, in order to pay the debts, and in order to provide for the common defense and general welfare. It is not a substantive general power to provide for the welfare of the United States, but is a limitation on the grant of power to raise money by taxes, duties, and imposts. If it were otherwise, all the rest of the Constitution, consisting of carefully enumerated, and cautiously guarded grants of specific powers, would have been useless, if not delusive. It would be impossible, in that view, to escape from the conclusion, that these were inserted only to mislead for the present, and instead of enlightening and defining the pathway of the future, to involve its action in the mazes of doubtful construction. Such a conclusion the character of the men who framed that sacred instrument will never permit us to form. Indeed, to suppose it susceptible of any other construction would be to consign all the rights of the States, and of the people of the States, to the mere discretion of Congress, and thus to clothe the Federal Government with authority to control the sovereign States, by which the States would have been dwarfed into provinces or departments, and all sovereignty vested in an absolute consolidated central power, against which the spirit of liberty has so often, and in so many countries, struggled in vain. In my judgment you cannot, by tributes to humanity, make any adequate compensation for the wrong you would inflict by removing the sources of power and political action from those who are to be thereby affected. If the time shall ever arrive when, for an object appealing however strongly to our sympathies, the dignity of the States shall bow to the dictation of Congress, by conforming their legislation thereto, when the power, and majesty, and honor of those who created shall become subordinate to the thing of their creation, I but feebly utter my apprehensions when I express my firm conviction that we shall see "the beginning of the end."

Fortunately, we are not left in doubt as to the purpose of the Constitution, any more than as to its express language, for, although the history of its formation, as recorded in the Madison papers, shows that the Federal Government, in its present form, emerged from the conflict of opposing influences, which have continued to divide statesmen from that day to this, yet the rule of clearly defined powers, and of strict construction, presided over the actual conclusion and subsequent adoption of the Constitution.

President Madison, in the Federalist, says: "The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the Federal Government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments, are numerous and indefinite."

"Its" (the General Government's) "jurisdiction extends to certain enumerated objects only, and leaves to the several States a residuary and inviolable sovereignty over all other objects."

In the same spirit, President Jefferson invokes "the support of the State governments in all their rights as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns, and the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies;" and President Jackson said that our true strength and wisdom are not promoted by invasions of the rights and powers of the several States, but that, on the contrary, they consist "not in binding the States more closely to the center, but in leaving each more unobstructed in its proper orbit."

The framers of the Constitution, in refusing to confer on the Federal Government any jurisdiction over these purely local objects, in my judgment, manifested a wise forecast and broad comprehension of the true interests of these objects themselves. It is clear that public charities within the States can be efficiently administered only by their authority. The bill before me concedes this, for it does not commit the funds it provides to the administration of any other authority.

I cannot but repeat what I have before expressed, that if the several States, many of which have already laid the foundation of munificent establishments of local beneficence, and nearly all of which are proceeding to establish them, shall be led to suppose, as they will be, should this bill become a law, that Congress is to make provision for such objects, the fountains of charity will be dried up at home, and the several States, instead of bestowing their own means on the social wants of their own people, may themselves, through the strong temptation, which appeals to States as to individuals, become humble suppliants for the bounty of the Federal Government, reversing their true relation to this Union.

Having stated my views of the limitation of the powers conferred by the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, I deem it proper to call attention to the third section of the fourth article, and to the provisions of the sixth article, bearing directly upon the question under consideration; which, instead of aiding the claim to power exercised in this case, tend, it is believed, strongly to illustrate and explain positions which, even without such support, I cannot regard as questionable.

The third section of the fourth article of the Constitution, is in the following terms: "The Congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting, the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claim of the United States, or of any particular State." The sixth article is as follows, to wit: that "All debts contracted and engagements entered into, before the adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation."

For a correct understanding of the terms used in the third section of the fourth article, above quoted, reference should be had to the history of the times in which the Constitution was formed and adopted. It was decided upon in convention on the 17th September, 1787, and by it Congress was empowered to "dispose of," &c., "the territory or other property belonging to the United States." The only territory then belonging to the United States, was that then recently ceded by the several States, to wit: by New York in 1781, by Virginia in 1784, by Massachusetts in 1785, and by South Carolina in August, 1787, only the month before the formation of the Constitution. The cession from Virginia contained the following provision:

"That all the lands within the territory so ceded to the United States, and not reserved for, or appropriated to, any of the before mentioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American Army, shall be considered a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become, or shall become members of the Confederation or Federal Alliance of the said States, Virginia included, according to their usual respective proportions, in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever."

Here the object for which these lands are to be disposed of, is clearly set forth; and the power to dispose of them granted by the third section of the fourth article of the Constitution, clearly contemplates such disposition only. If such be the fact, and in my mind there can be no doubt of it, then you have again, not only no implication in favor of the contemplated grant, but the strongest authority against it.

Furthermore, this bill is in violation of the faith of the Government, pledged in the act of January 28, 1847. The nineteenth section of that act declares, "That, for the payment of the stock which may be created under the provisions of this act, the sales of the public lands are hereby pledged; and it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to use and apply all moneys which may be received into the Treasury for the sales of the public lands after the first day of January, 1848, first to pay the interest on all stocks issued by virtue of this act; and secondly, to use the balance of said receipts, after paying the interest aforesaid, in the purchase of said stocks at their market value," &c. The debts then contracted have not been liquidated, and the language of this section, and the obligations of the United States under it, are too plain to need comment.

I have been unable to discover any distinction, on constitutional grounds, or grounds of expediency, between an appropriation of ten millions of dollars, directly from the money in the Treasury, for the object contemplated, and the appropriation of lands presented for my sanction. And yet, I cannot doubt, that if the bill proposed ten millions of dollars from the Treasury of the United States, for the support of indigent insane in the several States, that the constitutional question involved in the act would have attracted forcibly the attention of Congress.

I respectfully submit, that, in a constitutional point of view, it is wholly immaterial whether the appropriation be in money or in land.

The public domain is the common property of the Union, just as much as the surplus proceeds of that, and of duties on imports remaining unexpended in the Treasury. As such, it has been pledged, is now pledged, and may need to be so pledged again for public indebtedness.

As property, it is distinguished from actual money chiefly in this respect: that its profitable management sometimes requires that portions of it be appropriated to local objects, in the States wherein it may happen to lie, as would be done by any prudent proprietor to enhance the sale-value of his private domain. All such grants of land are, in fact, a disposal of it for value received; but they afford no precedent, or constitutional reason, for giving away the public lands. Still less do they give sanction to appropriations for objects which have not been intrusted to the Federal Government, and therefore belong exclusively to the States.

To assume that the public lands are applicable to ordinary State objects, whether of public structures, police, charity, or expenses of State administration, would be to disregard, to the amount of the value of the public lands, all the limitations of the Constitution, and confound, to that extent, all distinctions between the rights and powers of the States, and those of the United States. For if the public lands may be applied to the support of the poor, whether sane or insane, if the disposal of them and their proceeds be not subject to the ordinary limitations of the Constitution, then Congress possesses unqualified power to provide for expenditures in the States by means of the public lands, even to the degree of defraying the salaries of Governors, judges, and all other expenses of the Government, and internal administration within the several States. The conclusion from the general survey of the whole subject is, to my mind, irresistible, and closes the question, both of right and of expediency, so far as regards the principle of the appropriation proposed in this bill. Would not the admission of such a power in Congress to dispose of the public domain, work the practical abrogation of some of the most important provisions of the Constitution? If the systematic reservation of a definite portion of the public lands (the sixteenth section) in the States, for the purpose of education, and occasional grants for similar purposes be cited as contradicting these conclusions, the answer, as it appears to me, is obvious and satisfactory. Such reservations and grants, besides being a part of the conditions on which the proprietary right of the United States is maintained, along with the eminent domain of a particular State, and by which the public land remains free from taxation in the State in which it lies, as long as it remains the property of the United States, are the acts of a mere land-owner, disposing of a small share of his property in a way to augment the value of the residue, and in this mode to encourage the early occupation of it by the industrious and intelligent pioneer.

The great example of apparent donation of lands to the States, likely to be relied upon as sustaining the principles of this bill, is the relinquishment of swamp lands to the States in which they are situated; but this, also, like other grants already referred to, was based expressly upon grounds clearly distinguishable in principle from any which can be assumed for the bill herewith returned, viz: upon the interest and duty of the proprietor. They were charged, and not without reason, to be a nuisance to the inhabitants of the surrounding country. The measure was predicated, not only upon the ground of the disease inflicted upon the people of the States which the United States could not justify, as a just and honest proprietor, but also upon an express limitation of the application of the proceeds, in the first instance, to purposes of levees and drains, thus protecting the health of the inhabitants, and, at the same time, enhancing the value of the remaining lands belonging to the General Government. It is not to be denied that Congress, while administering the public lands as a proprietor, within the principle distinctly announced in my annual message, may sometimes have failed to distinguish accurately between objects which are and which are not within its constitutional powers.

After the most careful examination, I find but two examples in the acts of Congress which furnish any precedent for the present bill, and those examples will, in my opinion, serve rather as a warning than as an inducement to tread in the same path.

The first is the act of March 3d, 1819, granting a township of land to the Connecticut asylum for the education of the deaf and dumb.

The second that of April 5th, 1826, making a similar grant of land to the Kentucky asylum for teaching the deaf and dumb.

The first more than thirty years after the adoption of the Constitution, and the second more than a quarter of a century ago.

These acts were unimportant as to the amount appropriated, and, so far as I can ascertain, were passed on two grounds: first, that the object was a charitable one, and secondly, that it was national. To say that it was a charitable object, is only to say that it was an object of expenditure proper for the competent authority; but it no more tended to show that it was a proper object of expenditure by the United States than is any other purely local object appealing to the best sympathies of the human heart in any of the States. And the suggestion that a school for the mental culture of the deaf and dumb in Connecticut, or Kentucky, is a national object, only shows how loosely this expression has been used when the purpose was to procure appropriations by Congress. It is not perceived how a school of this character is otherwise national than is any establishment of religious or moral instruction. All the pursuits of industry, everything which promotes the material or intellectual well-being of the race, every ear of corn or boll of cotton which grows, is national in the same sense; for each one of these things goes to swell the aggregate of national prosperity and happiness of the United States; but it confounds all meaning of language to say that these things are "national," as equivalent to "Federal," so as to come within any of the classes of appropriation for which Congress is authorized by the Constitution to legislate.

It is a marked point in the history of the Constitution, that when it was proposed to empower Congress to establish a university, the proposition was confined to the District intended for the future seat of Government of the United States, and that even that proposed clause was omitted in consideration of the exclusive powers conferred on Congress to legislate for that District. Could a more decisive indication of the true construction and the spirit of the Constitution in regard to all matters of this nature have been given? It proves that such objects were considered by the convention as appertaining to local legislation only, that they were not comprehended, either expressly or by implication, in the grant of general power to Congress, and that, consequently, they remained with the several States.

The general result at which I have arrived is the necessary consequence of those views of the relative rights, powers, and duties of the States and of the Federal Government which I have long entertained, and often expressed, and in reference to which my convictions do but increase in force with time and experience.

I have thus discharged the unwelcome duty of respectfully stating my objections to this bill, with which I cheerfully submit the whole subject to the wisdom of Congress.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

WASHINGTON, May 3, 1854.

Mr. FOOT. I rise to submit two motions to the Senate. The first is, that the communication which has just been read lie on the table, and be printed. It is usual also, I believe, to enter such communications on the Journal.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is the first thing to be done.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Vermont has made no motion for the printing of extra numbers. I wish to submit that along with his motion. We ought to have an extra number printed. That has always been usual in such cases.

Mr. FOOT. Will the Senator from Virginia designate the number?

Mr. HUNTER. I move that ten thousand additional copies be printed.

Mr. FOOT. The Senator can make that as an independent motion. If his proposition were to print a smaller number, say two thousand, I would accept it as a modification of my motion to print the message for the use of the Senate.

Mr. TOOMBS. I hope the Senator from Virginia will adhere to the motion to print the number which he has designated. This is a very important document, and should be generally diffused among the people. I look upon it as a matter of more consequence than any which we have had before us at this session. I trust the proposition to print ten thousand copies will be adhered to.

Mr. FOOT. That can be done, but I do not wish to accept that as a modification of my motion to print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The message will be entered on the Journal, as a matter of course. The first question is on the motion that the message be ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President,—

Several SENATORS. The question is not debatable.

Mr. BROWN. The motion to print is debatable.

Mr. HUNTER. The suggestion of the Senator from Vermont is, that I shall submit my proposition as a separate motion after his shall have been disposed of. I will do so.

The motion of Mr. Foot was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I now move that ten thousand additional copies of the message be printed.

Mr. BROWN. That is a debatable question, I presume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, of course I do not wish to say a word as to the number of copies of this message which should be printed. I would as soon vote for the printing of twenty thousand as for printing ten thousand copies. I have no doubt that every reading man in the country will examine the message, and examine it with great care. But I think it is due to those who voted for this bill that something shall go out with the message to arrest public attention, and induce the public mind to pause, before it comes to too hasty a conclusion, as to the correctness of the doctrines set forth in that paper. I certainly do not intend to undertake an answer to a carefully prepared State paper, upon merely hearing it read at the Secretary's desk. This, however, is not the first time that the subject of giving lands for the benefit of the insane has been before the Senate. It was here, according to the record which lies before me, in 1851, and, after an elaborate discussion, the bill then passed the Senate by a majority of more than two to one. I have the yeas and nays before me. On that occasion the yeas were 36, and the nays 16. That the Senate may understand who it was that voted in favor of the bill at that time, I ask leave to read the list of yeas and nays. The yeas were:

"Messrs. Badger, Baldwin, Bell, Benton, Berrien, Borland, Bradbury, Chase, Clark, Clay, Cooper, Davis of Massachusetts, Dawson, Dayton, Downs, Ewing, Greene, Hale, Hamlin, Miller, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Phelps, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Spruance, Sturgeon, Underwood, Upham, and Wales—36."

The nays were:

"Messrs. Atchison, Cass, Davis of Mississippi, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Felch, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Jones, King, Mason, Rheut, Turney, Walker, and Yulice—16."

It will be seen by an analysis of the vote that some of the most rigidly strict constructionists of the Constitution are recorded in favor of the bill; among them are two gentlemen who have received the highest mark of the President's consideration—Mr. Borland and Mr. Soule. They are strict constructionists of the southern school; and they have both been sent abroad on missions of the first class. I mention this fact simply that the country may be induced to pause before it comes to too hasty a conclusion in reference to this subject.

During the present session of Congress the bill has been under consideration in the House of Representatives. On its passage the yeas were 81, nays 53. It was discussed there. It was certainly not hastily passed. After having been before Congress for several years, and after being pretty elaborately discussed at this session, and at former sessions, it has passed the House, if not by a majority of two to one, certainly by a very heavy majority. My experience is, that in the House they divide pretty closely upon almost every question of general interest. I find among the yeas many gentlemen of acknowledged ability, strict constructionists of the Constitution, good Democrats, men who have never been suspected of faltering in the support of the Constitution, or of Democratic principles. The same bill was under consideration in the Senate during this session, and though the Senate then was not so full as it was in 1851, when the former vote was taken, the bill passed this body a second time by a majority of over two to one. The vote was 25 to 12. The yeas upon the occasion of its passage were:

"Messrs. Badger, Bell, Brown, Chase, Clayton, Dawson, Dodge of Wisconsin, Everett, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Jones of Tennessee, Morton, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, and Walker—25."

The nays were:

"Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Butler, Cass, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Mason, Pettit, Weller, and Williams—12."

I do not say, sir, that after these votes the President was bound to approve the bill against his views of constitutional propriety. I am very far from finding any fault with him for having sent in this veto. But again I say, that, looking to votes like these, the country ought to pause before it comes to a hasty conclusion in reference to the soundness of the views which the President has put forth. It is no light thing, for a measure after passing the Senate twice by a majority of more than two to one, and after passing the House of Representatives by a majority of nearly two to one, to encounter an Executive veto. If it had passed hastily, or without due consideration, it would not surprise any one if the President should arrest it. But the bill before us, as we all know, was discussed in both Houses of Congress, at this and at former sessions.

I said before that I did not mean to attempt an answer to the arguments of the President, after having merely heard his message read. Some of the arguments, I confess, struck me as having force in them. Some others seemed to me to have but little force. This, perhaps, arose from the fact that I had heard them on many occasions before, and having become accustomed to them, I did not regard them with the same consideration that I would something new.

The President, in the outset of the message, admits that this is a measure of great humanity, and one which commends itself to the warmest sympathies of his heart. I am glad he said so, because I apprehend that the sentiment will find a response in the heart of every American citizen, of every friend of humanity, whether he resides north or south, east or west. The President says that eleemosynary objects or purposes are not among those which are provided for in the Constitution. So they are not in express terms; but does Congress never legislate upon any subject in regard to which it has not been expressly authorized to legislate? If not, I want to know where we get our authority to legislate for school purposes? The President makes an argument to show by implication that we have the power to do that. All the grants that have been made from time to time for school purposes are sanctioned by the Constitution, according to his construction of it; and yet, sir, you may read the instrument from one end to the other, and find no specific power to make grants for school purposes. If the President will point to the clause which authorizes grants of land to colleges, I will show him the clause which authorizes the grant proposed in this bill.

But, says the President, if we legislate for the benefit of the insane, where are we to stop? Are we to carry our benevolence so far as to legislate for the protection of all other indigent or unfortunate classes? This, you will see at once, is not an argument which can touch the question of power, but it is simply an argument which reaches the question of the exercise of power. If you have authority to do this, it may follow that you have the power to do something else; but it does not follow that because you do this, you ought therefore to do something else. If you have the power to make an appropriation of land for the protection and benefit of the indigent insane, it may follow that you have the power to make an appropriation of land for the protection and benefit of the indigent who are not insane. But if you exercise the power in the one case, it does not necessarily follow that you must exercise it in the other.

The President seems to think that in this matter the States will be brought to bow to the authority of Congress. I do not think so. When my State and yours, Mr. President, (Mr. BRIGHT occupying the chair,) accepted donations of land for school purposes, for common schools, and for schools of a higher grade, did it ever enter into your head or mine that our States were thereby humiliated, and were bowing as paupers, and beggars, and mendicants, to the authority of Congress? No, sir; we felt that we were receiving a part of that which belonged to us, that we were not beggars, but that Congress was giving its assent to our exercising exclusive jurisdiction over a part of that which belonged to us in common with our fellow-citizens of all the States.

The President seems also to be apprehensive that if we go on legislating in this way, we shall dry up all the sources of benevolence in the States, and that the people of the States, instead of taking care of their indigent insane, their poor, their blind, and their lame, will habitually look to Congress for the protection of those classes. I think not. With as much justice might you say that, if you receive land from the Government for the education, in part, of your children, this will induce the States to look to Congress for the means of educating all the children. Did it ever enter into your mind, sir, when Congress granted your State the sixteenth section of land in each township for school purposes, that, by the State accepting it, you were in danger of becoming mendicants, begging Congress to make appropriations for the education of all the children in your State? I apprehend there is no more danger of our becoming beggars at the footstool of Congress for the support of our indigent insane, our indigent blind, and our poor of every class, if we accept a grant like this, than there has been that we should become beggars of Congress to educate all our children, because, in days gone by, we accepted aid from Congress to educate a part of them.

But, sir, the President further tells us that this bill is in violation of the public faith. And why? Because the land stands mortgaged for the redemption of our public debt. With all due respect for the President, I must say that this argument does not strike my mind with great force. You have more money in the Treasury now than will satisfy all the demands against it. Your Secretary of the Treasury is out in the market, constantly buying up, at a large premium, the bonds of the Government. Instead of being without money, and being compelled, in good faith, to keep the mortgaged property until you discharge the obligations which are resting upon it, you have more money than will satisfy all the demands against you.

I cannot conceive that the bill is in violation of the public faith, because in disposing of the lands as the bill proposes, you are not putting yourselves in a condition to avoid, or even to render dubious, the payment of your public debt. But, sir, when Congress passed a bill granting millions upon millions of acres of the public lands to your soldiers, the public domain was then under mortgage. The same sort of obligation rested upon it then as now. The same thing occurred when you passed the swamp land act. When you granted millions upon millions of acres of land for railroad purposes, you granted land which was under this same mortgage. It is true, an argument is made to prove that if you grant one section for a railroad, the next is doubled in value, and so nothing is given; but suppose the mortgagee does not think so; and suppose it does not turn out so; is the public faith violated? The President introduces the prudent proprietorship argument, to justify grants to railroads. It is one which we have frequently heard, and it always strikes me with great force.

But if Congress, as a prudent proprietor, may grant land for one purpose, saying "this is as I would dispose of it," where does the President get authority to say to that proprietor, "you shall not grant it for another purpose, because that purpose does not strike me as being proper." If a prudent proprietor may give land for school purposes, for railroad purposes, for internal improvement purposes, and for various other purposes, as you have done time and time again; and if the same proprietor concludes that he may give a little for the protection and benefit of the indigent insane, who shall dispute his right to do so, or restrain him in the exercise of his judgment? The people are the owners of the soil, and, I think, if their Representatives say, in their name, that this is a just and proper disposal of the land, they ought to be allowed to appropriate it in this way. That is my judgment.

One of the grounds on which the President justifies our giving away the swamp lands is, that, by so doing, we protected the public health. He intimates that the lands were subject to overflow, and produced miasma and malaria, and were exceedingly detrimental to the public health. To get clear of this nuisance, it was a prudent disposition to give the lands to the States, that the States might drain them, and thus secure the public health. This is the argument as I understand it. Where, sir, do we get power to protect the public health? Is that in the Constitution? If we protect the public health in a State, and do it constitutionally, I pray you, have we not the right to protect the indigent insane in a State, under the same clause in the Constitution? If Congress may do anything towards protecting the public health in the State of Arkansas, or Mississippi, why, by the same authority, may it not protect the indigent insane in Delaware, or Pennsylvania? I confess myself wholly unable to see how it can exercise the one power, and yet be constitutionally denied the right to exercise the other. I should never have thought, myself, of such an argument; but the President seems to rely upon it; and, therefore, I take it for granted there must be something in it more than I have seen.

I should not have said a word on the message at this time, but that I wanted the country to understand when they enter upon the investigation of this subject, that after mature discussion in this body, the bill has twice passed on the yeas and nays by a majority of more than two to one. I want that this point may be understood; that calm, dispassionate men shall, when they come to investigate the subject, take into account the fact that while the President has felt constrained to veto this bill on constitutional grounds, other gentlemen of high legal fame have taken different grounds; that there are arguments, in fact, on the other side of the question. A right minded man, a man of proper thought, ought, in justice to the Senate and House, before he makes up his mind, to examine and see what the arguments are that justified the vote, and then having taken the pros and cons into the account, having investigated both sides of the question, give such judgment as he feels he ought to render.

I voted for this bill when it was before the body; and upon hearing the message read my convictions of its constitutionality have not been at all shaken. I will read the message, and read it again. I have none of that sort of pride of opinion, that love of consistency, which will induce me still to stand by the bill, if, upon a careful investigation of the President's arguments, I shall be convinced that he is right and I am wrong. But I say that upon hearing the message read from the Secretary's desk, I have not been so convinced. The inclination of my mind now is, and it is strongly so, that I shall record my vote as I did before.

I trust, sir, that no one will suppose that in submitting these remarks, and in taking this position, I am becoming in any degree the antagonist of the President. He has his constitutional opinions about this question; I have mine. He acts upon his convictions; and I shall act on mine. I will make no attack upon him; far, very far from it. I have great personal respect for the President; great respect for him as a politician and as the head of the great party to which I belong; and I am sure he will not take it amiss if I say that I have yet a much higher respect for the distinguished office to which he has been elevated by the American people. These considerations, if nothing else, would restrain me from saying anything in the slightest possible degree unkind in regard to him, or of the paper which he has sent to us. But, sir, if all these considerations were out of the way, my own self respect would always induce me to speak of the President of the United States, and of any paper which he may send to either House of Congress with becoming respect and consideration.

Mr. FOOT made some remarks in reply to the arguments of the message. They are reserved for revision, and will appear in the Appendix.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Vermont proposes to postpone the consideration of this subject until Monday next.

Mr. FOOT. Immediately after the question on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to print ten thousand extra copies shall be disposed of, I will submit that motion; his, I believe, is a precedent motion.

Mr. HUNTER. Of course; therefore the present is not an occasion to enter upon the merits of the bill. When the day comes for the consideration of the question, the friends of the Administration, I think, sir, will be able, and they will, at least, be willing, to meet the gentleman upon issue which he tenders them, and if they shall not be able to vindicate the message, the fault will not be that of the President, or of the message, but of themselves.

Mr. President, I cannot permit the present occasion to pass away, without expressing my profound gratification at the course which the President of the United States has pursued in regard to this bill. In my opinion, the thanks of the people are due to him for arresting a measure which, as I am happy to believe, has few parallels in the past history of our legislation, and for interposing himself between the Constitution of the country and a blow, the mischievous effects of which it would have been difficult to over-estimate, or even to measure. Sir, the man who saves and preserves the barrier which the Constitution has imposed between the jurisdiction of the General and the State Governments, renders a service which entitles him to the grateful appreciation of the American people, for he makes good the only conditions upon which the experiment of free government, which we are now trying, can result happily and successfully. Sir, it may be that it is an ideal barrier, an abstraction, if you will; but I venture to say, that behind its boundaries lie, covered and protected, more of human happiness and human prosperity than ever were defended by ramparts of brick and stone. And, sir, he who succeeds in successfully defending and protecting these, the moral defenses of a country, is entitled more to the thanks of the people than the mere man of war who holds and maintains its military lines.

It is, in my opinion, the danger of the times, that in our eager pursuit after wealth and all those material objects in which we take so keen an interest, we are prone to forget the moral bases upon which rest our happiness and our security. I must be permitted to say, that in the whole course of my experience in legislative life, I think I have never known a period in which less regard was paid to the limitations imposed by the Constitution upon the powers of this Government. Nor need I go further for an illustration of that proposition than to the very bill which is now under consideration—a bill which proposes to make the States the agents of the General Government; which assumes to say upon what conditions they shall execute their own local and municipal powers, and those conditions to be prescribed by this Federal Government—a bill which is founded, if upon any principle at all, upon the assumption that the right to dispose of the public lands is an unlimited power vested in this Government, or that it is limited only by the positive prohibitions of the Constitution. So far as the public lands are concerned, this Government is supreme, and so far as they can afford the means, it may assume and exercise any power which is not positively prohibited by the Constitution.

But, as I said before, it is not my purpose at present to enter at large upon the consideration of the merits of this measure. I may do so at another time, when the whole question is fairly before us. I have felt, however, that it was due to the President to make my public acknowledgment to him for the manful discharge of his duty upon this occasion. I rejoice that we have an issue made upon principle, and that something has been done to awaken the American people to the consideration of the nature of the title and tenure by which they may expect to secure and perpetuate the happiness and the prosperity which they are now enjoying. I am glad that it is an issue of principle, a great moral and political issue, upon which the President and most, if not all, of his friends may be willing and ready to stake themselves before the country.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, I do not purpose to enter into a discussion of this question, until the Senate has at least signified its wish to take it up for consideration; but I desire to express my full and hearty concurrence in the message upon your table. It offers a prospect of hereafter administering this great national fund upon some sound constitutional principle. There seem to be two leading ideas in the message. The first is, that the public lands and their proceeds are subject to the same constitutional restraints in their appropriation by Congress as is any other fund or money in the Treasury of the United States. That I believe to be a sound principle. The second idea is, that in the administration of the land itself, we should be governed by the same rules by which a liberal and enlightened proprietor would be governed in the management of his estate for his own interest.

By observing these two sound principles which are enforced by the President, we shall settle this question upon a solid and proper foundation. I apprehend that many of the cases which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Foot] has cited as authorities, in contravention of the principles of the message, will be found to be in conformity to the one or the other of these two sound principles; and if not, if they fall without them, the burden will be upon the Senator himself—and a weighty and a heavy one it is—to show that they come within the Constitution of the United States. It is true there may be much excuse found in the loose,—the squandering I may term it in no offensive sense,—use of this branch of the public property of the United States. There may be even some excuse found for this bill, and for its being passed with full consideration, when it is remembered that we have departed, especially within the last six or eight years, from all sound principles in the administration of this fund. Very many of the cases which the Senator from Vermont has cited were violations and departures from principle which ought to be equally subject to condemnation with the bill, which has brought upon itself the condemnation of the President of the United States.

I am surprised at the Senator's apparent censure of the President of the United States, for sending in his veto under the circumstances. Whether the gentleman may consider that power to be wisely reposed in the President or not, it is given by the Constitution in as full, ample, and complete language as is the Senator's power to vote for or against the bill when it is before him. The Constitution provides that "every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a law, be submitted to the President of the United States; if he approve it, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it, with his objections." That is what he has done. I say, this power in the President is as full, ample, complete, and unrestrained (and was intended to be) as that of the Senator from Vermont, or any other member of either branch of the Legislature, to vote for or against the bill, according to his judgment of its constitutionality and expediency. The language of the Constitution is broad. It gives the President the veto power in as clear terms as it grants the legislative power to the two Houses of Congress.

I say, sir, that this message promises to put the administration of this great national fund, the public domain, upon the sound basis to which I have alluded. I trust the Senate will give it that deliberation which the Constitution intended that it should have. The effect of the veto is only to submit the bill to a more severe scrutiny, and a calmer consideration and deliberation of this body. The gentleman says it has passed the Senate twice; but this is the first time that it has been submitted to the President. This branch of Congress and the other may have passed it once before. I think it has passed, as a great many other measures have, which have not met my approbation, and that of a great many other gentlemen. Oftentimes, business is conducted in such a way that some of us cannot raise these great questions. The grave and important considerations which are urged by the President of the United States, have not been brought before even many gentlemen of this body. I doubt not that many of them, on a calm review, when the prospect is held out of putting the administration of the public lands on some sound, constitutional basis, will abandon their own previous course, and concur in placing it upon a basis more conformable to the Constitution of the United States. When the Senate think proper to take up this question, I shall desire to be heard fully in vindication of the principles set forth in the message.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not intend to discuss this subject, but I wish simply to say, what I believe is the fact, that the measure which has been brought to the attention of the Senate by the President of the United States, has never received the deliberate consideration of this body. I think that, considering its magnitude and the importance of the doctrines involved in the question, it has been less discussed than almost any measure of consequence. I doubt very much whether, at the time it was brought before the Senate, public attention could have been so far arrested as to have resulted in such a discussion as would produce much good. I say this much, in justification of the Senate, or rather of those Senators who may think proper to review their vote or decision, for judgment I will not call it. The President of the United States, as the trustee of all the people of the United States, has thought proper to exercise his acknowledged constitutional power, and it has brought a very grave issue before the Senate—one upon which, I think, it ought to pronounce its deliberate judgment, after a full discussion—what, in fact, I believe will be, for the first time, a full discussion upon this subject. I say this much in justification of the President: I do not think the subject has ever been discussed, either in this or in the other branch of Congress as fully as it should be. There have been so many tributary streams swelling the tide of Federal power in relation to the distribution of the public lands, that it is time, I think, some interposition should be made by some Department of the Government to arrest it. I do not know whether it will be arrested or not, but I hope it will. I do not believe the subject ever has been discussed as it should be in this body or in the other House; and when it shall receive a full discussion from those who honestly differ in regard to the doctrine involved in the message, I shall abide by the decision; but I have never been satisfied with the apparent judgment which has been pronounced by either branch of Congress on this measure.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter into any discussion of the principles embraced in the message which has just been read to the Senate, but I rise to move that its further consideration be postponed until Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a motion to print ten thousand copies, and that must be first disposed of.

Mr. DIXON. As I am up, I will remark that I do not concur in the views expressed by the President, or the reasons given by him for withholding his signature to the bill; and I shall take occasion, before the question is disposed of, to give to the Senate and to the country the reasons why I do not. The President has taken the ground that Congress has no constitutional power to give the public lands to the States for benevolent purposes, and contends that if Congress has the power to do it for one purpose it may for another, and that all such donations are usurpations of the Federal Government of the rights of the States. The power of Congress to dispose of the public lands is expressly given by the Constitution. It "may dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting, the territory or other property belonging to the United States." How the territories or other property belonging to the United States is to be disposed of, and for what purposes, the Constitution does not say. The territories or lands of the United States are held by the Federal Government in trust for the benefit of the States and for all the people of the United States; and any donation of them, which is for the general benefit, is not only strictly in conformity with the purposes of the trust, but unquestionably within the powers granted to Congress under the Constitution. I cannot perceive how it is that the donating the public lands to the States for purposes wise and benevolent can be considered by the President a usurpation of the rights of the States. To usurp is to seize upon something wrongfully which belongs to another; but when the bill proposes to give to the States, and not to take from them, I am wholly at a loss to understand how and upon what principle the President reconciles it to the idea of the Federal Government usurping the rights of the sovereign States—I have yet to learn that Congress has no power to legislate for the benefit of the people, or that all donations of lands or money for their benefit were in violation of State rights and of the Federal Constitution. There is no Senator on this floor who will go further to maintain the rights of the States, as reserved to them by the Federal Constitution, than I will; but to maintain that the Congress has no power to make, and the State governments no power to receive, such donations as are contemplated in the bill which the President has returned, with his objections, to the Senate, is, in my judgment, upholding the rights of the States with a vengeance. I am no latitudinarian in the construction of the Federal Constitution, and perhaps would go as far as any Senator on this floor in maintaining the constitutional rights of the States, and of keeping separate and apart the powers which properly belong to the Federal Government and those justly appertaining to the States. But I cannot understand how it is that, if the Federal Government can exercise the constitutional power of making a grant of lands for one benevolent object, it may not do it for another. It has appropriated lands for roads and canals; it has donated, in effect, a large amount of the public lands to assist a State in paying off her public debt; it has appropriated lands to educational purposes in the States in which the lands lie; it has given them to States within which they do not lie for similar purposes; it has appropriated large sums of money to the building of marine hospitals in different States, to minister to the wants and comforts of the unfortunate and wretched class of citizens described in the different acts making the appropriations. It has given, time and again, large sums of money, and large portions of the public lands, for other purposes—some benevolent and some speculative, and all without any express grant of power under the Federal Constitution; and now, when we are about to vote away thousands and thousands of acres of the public domain to all such as may settle on them, whether they be citizens or foreigners, we are gravely told by the President that a grant, by Congress, of a portion of this same public domain, for an object the most humane and the most benevolent, and which appeals most strongly to the sympathies of every heart capable of feeling for the misfortunes of the most unhappy of mankind, is interdicted by the spirit of the Constitution, and a violation of the rights and an encroachment on the sovereignty of the States.

I will, at a proper time, take occasion to present to the Senate the reasons why, in my opinion, the bill which has not received the sanction of the President is strictly in conformity with the Constitution of the country, and strictly in harmony with the uniform legislation of Congress. I think I shall be able to demonstrate this, at least I hope to be able to do so, and to show that this bill, benevolent in its purposes, is strictly in conformity with the principles on which this Government has heretofore acted, and strictly in conformity with the great principles upon which it should act under the Constitution of the United States. But, as I before remarked, it is not my purpose now to discuss the question. I merely wished to define my position in relation to it, as it is now presented to the Senate.

Mr. BELL. Mr. President, very great gratification has been expressed by two or three honorable Senators upon this occasion, and it has been said that now we may have some hope of bringing this Government within the pale and limits of the Constitution in disposing of this great common fund, the public domain of the country. One honorable Senator, I believe, alluded to what we have often heard stated upon this floor by several Senators, that our appropriation of the public lands heretofore has been wasteful. Either the same, or another Senator, has said to-day, that it had been upon no principle. The Senator from Virginia, now congratulates the Senate and the country that we are to have this question made upon some great moral principle, to bring back the exercise of the powers of this Government in relation to this great national fund within the limits of the Constitution, and in conformity with its principles. Now, I wish some of those honorable Senators to tell me in what has consisted this great, irregular, unconstitutional waste of the public lands; and upon what do they found this extraordinary gratification on this occasion at the prospect of having a change, for I suppose, from what has been said, that they propose a change in the practice of the Government in relation to the appropriation of the public lands.

I do not mean to cite the occasional appropriations which have been heretofore made of the public lands with a view to rely upon them; such, for example, as the township of land to Connecticut to found an institution for the instruction of the deaf and dumb in 1819, and a similar appropriation to Kentucky, at a subsequent period in 1826. Take out all these occasional appropriations, exclude them entirely from the argument, throw them aside as being irregular, and what do we find? I may say here, in passing, that such appropriations as these constitute a very small, and almost invisible fraction of the enormous amount of the public land which has been appropriated. I have not examined the reports of public document from the Departments in relation to the subject, but I know it is said that a hundred millions of acres of the public lands have heretofore been appropriated—not sold, and the money paid into the Treasury; but this large quantity of land has been given to the States in which the lands lie for the purposes of education, and for the purpose of aiding them in the construction of works of internal improvement. It was only a few years ago, as you know, sir, that we appropriated seven hundred and fifty thousand acres of land, with scarcely any debate or controversy in the Senate, for the construction of a canal around the falls at the Sault St. Mary—to overcome obstructions in the straits, between Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

The great mass of these appropriations has been for the support of internal improvements, and for laying the foundations of a system of schools and education in the new States. Then again they have received large grants of swamp lands; but take them out of view, regard them as not constituting one of the items about which the old States should complain; suppose they should amount to twenty or thirty millions of acres, still there would remain sixty or seventy-five millions of acres which have been voted away for the general purposes which I have enumerated—for internal improvements and educational purposes in the new States.

I say, that taking out of the calculation altogether the swamp lands, and the Connecticut appropriation in 1819, and the Kentucky appropriation in 1826, and similar appropriations, there still remain sixty or seventy millions of acres which it is contended have been improperly appropriated. This is the great national fund, as I understand, which gentlemen say has been wasted. The Senator from Georgia said this message is an attempt to ingraft a new principle upon which these public lands are hereafter to be appropriated, and it is therefore that he urges and others urge that a pause in the legislation of the country is to be made, and that we are at liberty now to consider whether we will not reform the practice of the Government, and its former course in relation to the public lands.

Mr. BROWN. Will my friend from Tennessee allow me, at this point, and in this connection, to state one historical fact?

Mr. BELL. With great pleasure.

Mr. BROWN. In the year 1803, I think, a law passed Congress, endowing a college in Mississippi with the grant of a township of land. That college was located in the southern part of the State. There were no public lands anywhere in the vicinity; but some twenty years afterwards the land was located, much of it two hundred miles away from the college, so that the existence of the college there could have had no influence whatever upon the price of the land, and that could not have been any part of the consideration in making the grant.

Mr. WELLER. That was in the Territory, and not in the State, of Mississippi.

Mr. BROWN. I suppose the power of Congress over public lands is the same in the States as in the Territories, if it be the proprietor. Mr. Jefferson was President at the time, and he approved that bill. It was among the earliest grants of public lands which were made. If he was not among the strictest constructionists of the Constitution, I confess I have never known or read of anybody who was.

Mr. BELL. There are, no doubt, numerous cases of that kind; but I was taking a brief and general view of the question, in order to extract, if I could, an answer, especially from the Senator of Virginia, to the inquiry which I was proposing. I remember that five hundred thousand acres were at one time appropriated for the benefit of the Cleveland canal in Ohio. I have not heard anything of that improvement for a long while. Another appropriation of five hundred thousand acres was made for Alabama, at about the same period of time. The inquiry which I was about proposing was this: what is it that it is proposed to check? What practice of the Government is it, what past course is it, that is so much deprecated? And why is this degree of gratification expressed at the veto of this bill, appropriating ten millions of acres for the benefit of the insane in every State of the Union, in as equitable a proportion to each as it is possible and practicable for legislation to accomplish? The complaint has been heretofore that the sixty or seventy millions of acres to which I have alluded, or, including the swamp lands, one hundred millions of acres, have been appropriated to objects exclusively within the new States. The old States have felt it to be a grievance, an injustice, a wrong in the practice of the Government, thus partially and unequally to distribute this great national property, which belongs to all the States, which was purchased by the common treasure of the country, for the equal benefit of all the States.

Does the honorable Senator from Virginia understand that the principles of this message will equalize the appropriation of the public domain hereafter as among all the States, and that this inequality which has been felt to be so great, and of which so many complaints have been made, is to be corrected? Is that the meaning of the honorable Senator from Virginia, in the very earnest and eloquent appeal which he has made on behalf of the principles of this message?

Are we to have another fifty millions, or one hundred millions of acres of public lands appropriated in the same way hereafter? Or, does he understand that the principles of the message put an end for the future to all such appropriations or donations to the new States?

I do not mean, now, to go into the argument of the question, whether that inequality is justified upon the principle alluded to by the honorable

Senator from Georgia, which seems to be satisfactory to himself; that is, that these grants to the new States are nothing more than what a prudent proprietor would do in making an expenditure for the improvement of his estate. I do not propose, now, to go into that inquiry, and see whether that be a solid ground for any distinction at all. I have myself, as it is well known, voted generally for those appropriations on great public and general considerations, regarding them as redounding to the benefit of the whole country, as well as to the advantage of the individual States, to whom these appropriations were made; for I hold that no railroad can be constructed throughout the extent of Illinois, or Missouri, or Iowa, or of Arkansas, which does not contribute to the general welfare, and the increase of the general prosperity of the whole country. But, nevertheless, when you come to the question of the power of Congress thus to discriminate, and when the President himself assumes the principle that when we appropriate land it is the same as though we appropriate money, the question becomes a much more important one. We all know that the accumulated volume of wealth that flows into every part of this Union, is added to by a public improvement made in any part of it; and yet we know, that the most considerable benefit is derived to the immediate neighborhood, locality, or State, or Territory in which these improvements are made. Does the honorable Senator from Virginia understand the principles of this message as being such as will, for the future, remove that objection to the mode in which the public lands have heretofore been so unequally disposed of?

I am not able to state the fact from any careful examination of my own, but I am told that all the moneys received into the Treasury of the United States from the public lands, taking them altogether, have not remunerated the common treasury of the country, or, at least, not more than remunerated it, for the expense of the purchase and acquisition of the public lands, and for the cost of surveying and selling them, without including the lands given to the several new States. This is a fact which should have some influence on us.

Now, sir, this question is becoming one of more importance, and one requiring much graver consideration than I had supposed, and I wish to ascertain, if I can, what is the understanding of honorable Senators, who, perhaps, have comprehended the principles upon which the President has proceeded, more correctly than I have in regard to it. I presume that, standing in the relation that the honorable Senator from Virginia does to the public administration of the country, he has ascertained what the principles of the message are, and has not been dependent upon a casual reading of the document to-day from the Secretary's desk, for a knowledge of its contents; but that its principles have been well considered and matured, and that he is aware of them. What I wish, if I can get at it now, is to know whether it is the understanding of that honorable Senator that no more land appropriations are to be made in the manner that has given rise to so much complaint in the old States. I should be pleased also, to hear from the honorable Senator from South Carolina on this subject. I make this request with great confidence, that I am not trespassing on any rule of propriety in propounding the question.

There has been great complaint on the part of the old States, on account of the enormous magnitude and quantity of the public domain given for purposes of local improvement in the States in which the public land happens to lie, while not an acre has been given to the other States, who are destitute of public lands, to aid in making their public improvements. The consequence is, that the new States, though the junior sisters of the Union, are far in advance of some of their older sisters in works of internal improvement, because the old States have not had this liberality extended to them by the General Government. I have no strict right, perhaps, to call on the honorable Senator from Virginia for an answer to my question, but after what has been said, I think it is due to the country that we should know what that honorable Senator understands to be the extent of the principle, or the limitation of the principle laid down by the President.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I did not intend, Mr. President, to engage in the general discussion of this question now, as there seemed to be an understanding on the part of the Senate that it should be postponed till next Monday. I hoped that when that understanding was arrived at, the discussion would have been entirely dropped until that time, so that we could have an opportunity of reading the message, and could go into the discussion after full preparation, and with a thorough understanding of its principles. But certain things have been said by some Senators here which I deem it proper to notice at this time. Much has been said about the extravagant, the wasteful disposition which has been made of the public lands in the grants to the new States. The Senator from Tennessee thinks that perhaps one hundred millions of acres have been appropriated for them, and that the rapid growth and advancement of those new States are attributable to the bounty of the Federal Government.

Mr. BELL. I said nothing on that subject. I said that in consequence of those appropriations of land they were far in advance in their systems of internal improvement.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Vermont talked about "unclean" legislation, and railroad grants, and land monopolists, and land speculators, as if there were something dishonorable and corrupt in that legislation for the benefit of the new States. Now, sir, I am not aware that the representatives of the new States here have ever advocated grants of land to them upon any other principle than that recognized in the President's veto message now upon your table; that is, upon the principle of what a landholder would do for the improvement and management of his own estate. My own State has received a very large grant of land for railroad purposes, it is true. Every Senator will bear me witness that I based its advocacy on that ground, and upon none other. I placed it upon the ground that you had lands here which you had offered for sale for from twenty to forty years at $1 25 per acre, and could not sell; but we said, if you would give us half the land on condition that we should construct a railroad, we would enable you to sell them at $2 50 an acre. Sir, the facts prove that the prediction has been realized. The lands have readily and rapidly sold at $2 50, where you could not get $1 25 for them before the grant.

Mr. BROWN. Will my friend from Illinois allow me a word?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. Does not the Senator know that within the last few weeks we have passed a bill authorizing a very considerable quantity of this same land to be taken at $1 25 per acre, and the President has approved it?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am not aware of the fact.

Mr. BROWN. I know it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. In Illinois?

Mr. BROWN. In all the States where we have made such railroad grants.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What is the bill?

Mr. BROWN. I forget the title of it, but its provision is that all who occupied the land, and who were on it at the time the President took it out of the market, whether before or after the grant, shall have their land for $1 25 per acre.

Mr. PETTIT. It is to secure preëmption rights.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is to say, it allows the settlers to do this if they had secured preëmption rights before the passage of the grant.

Mr. BROWN. I beg the Senator's pardon; the preëmption right was not secured. If the preëmption right was secured, there was no necessity for additional legislation. It was precisely because the settler had not secured his preëmption that you were compelled to come in and secure it to him.

Mr. TOOMBS. It was an inchoate preëmption.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I can only say, that if a law has passed reducing the price of any of these lands from $2 50 to $1 25 per acre in my State, it was unnecessary, and I should not have advised it to be done.

Mr. BROWN. I can assure the Senator that it has been done; and the President has approved the bill.

Mr. STUART. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me, I can explain what that is; and I think it will be seen that the honorable Senator from Mississippi is slightly mistaken.

Mr. BROWN. I should be glad to be corrected, if I am.

Mr. STUART. The law was intended, in the first instance, to apply simply to the State of Arkansas, for it was not known that any difficulty of the kind existed elsewhere in the United States; but upon a suggestion the bill was made general, and its effect is simply this: Where settlers were upon the public lands, occupying and cultivating them for purposes of preemption, prior to any grant at all having been made, and had not complied with the law in proving their preemptions, this law was made to remedy that evil, and the effect of it, as the Senator will see in a moment, is simply to be precisely what it would be if the land had been sold. It does not affect the terms on which grants are made at all. The principle remains unaffected.

Mr. BROWN. I understand it differently.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not think it is material to this argument.

Mr. BROWN. But I think it is—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will yield it.

Mr. BROWN. Unless the Senator is willing, I do not wish to say a word; but I understand the principle involved in the bill to be this, that if there was a settler upon the land before it was withdrawn from sale by the President's proclamation, either in anticipation of a grant or after a grant had been made, then, notwithstanding the grant has been made and his rights have been cut off, the act steps in and allows him to take the land at $1 25 an acre. If he had been entitled to the preemption, as I have said before, there would have been no necessity for the additional legislation. It was precisely because he was not entitled to the preemption that Congress stepped in and gave it to him. Therefore, if you have the right to take one quarter section of land which you had raised to $2 50 an acre, because you had given the adjoining quarter section for a railroad, and hence made it worth $2 50 an acre, and reduce it to $1 25, the original price of the land, the principle is established that you may reduce the whole of it, if you think proper, to the same standard; because if you can reduce one eighth, you may reduce the whole; your jurisdiction and power over the one eighth is your jurisdiction and power over the whole. Now I wish to say, lest there should be any misconception as to my position on the subject, that I approved that act. I voted for it most cordially; and if it should come here a thousand times, I would vote for it a thousand times over, justifying myself every time under that clause of the Constitution which gives Congress the power "to dispose of" the public lands, which I apprehend is a power unlimited, unless you undertake to dispose of them for some purpose inhibited by the Constitution.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I do not deem it necessary to make any reply to what the Senator from Mississippi has said, because it has no bearing at all on what I was proceeding to say, that the grants to Illinois for railroads were advocated upon the ground, and only upon the ground, that they would enhance the value of the public domain, so as to put as much, or more, money into the Treasury than you otherwise could have got if the grant were not made. The bill was passed upon that ground, and its practical operation thus far fully justifies the expectations of those who advocated its passage. The grant of land to which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BELL] has referred, for the Sault St. Mary canal, was advocated upon the ground that there were fifty, or perhaps nearly a hundred, millions of acres of land above those falls, which were inaccessible in consequence of the obstruction, and it was said that the granting of seven hundred and fifty thousand acres, by making the fifty millions accessible, would enhance the value of those fifty millions to a greater extent than the value of the grant.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish only to say a word as to that grant, if the Senator will allow me. I do not say that the Senator from Illinois has not given the reasons, but I say, in reference to the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] that the avowed ground upon which he asked for that appropriation of land was, that it was a war measure.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from South Carolina will discover soon, that he is slightly mistaken in the correction he makes. — The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] brought forward the proposition for a grant of money upon the ground that it was a war measure. I made a speech against the money grant, on the ground that it was not a necessary war measure, but that it was expedient for commerce, and for the enhancement of the value of the lands, and stated, if he would agree to strike out the money appropriation and make it a grant of land, I would advocate it. The money clause was stricken out, and the land grant was inserted upon that argument, and the bill was passed upon that ground—the war argument and the money appropriation being abandoned.

The position that I take is this—that the grants of lands to the new States, have been advocated upon the ground that they enhance the value of the residue of the public domain. Congress has passed them upon that ground. Whether the facts always turn out that the principle on which the grant was made is fully sustained by the result, is a different question. But, sir, we ask the grant on no other ground, and I supposed that when the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Foot] voted for these bills, he was voting for them upon that legitimate patriotic ground upon which their friends have acted. I did not suppose that he thought it was "unclean legislation" when he advocated it. When he brought forward a bill at this session, and advocated it strenuously for a railroad through Florida, I did not suppose that he thought it was "unclean legislation" or that he was the agent of land jobbers and land robbers, who were trying to fleece the public treasury for their benefit. I had no idea that when he advocated these measures, he confessed to any such principle of action. Sir, I deny that those of us from the new States, who have advocated these grants, have advocated them upon any such reason or grounds, as have been assigned or intimated by the Senator from Vermont.

Whenever the land grants which we propose for the West cannot be justified upon the principle that we are doing what a wise, honest, and judicious land owner would do in the disposition and management of his own estate, I do not wish the Senate to give their sanction and support to our measures. Hence it is unnecessary to cite these "vast" appropriations to the new State as an argument upon this bill. The President has drawn the distinction to which I have alluded. If these appropriations were a violation of that principle, then you may say that they do not sustain the assumption of fact made by the President. But the friends of these appropriations, so far as I know, place them upon that principle; and, as a general thing, I think the result has sustained practically the truth of that assumption.

Mr. BELL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. BELL. The Illinois bill, was, I believe, the model for the other bills; and it gave every alternate section six miles each side of the road, but if a sufficient number could not be found there on account of having been taken by settlers, by purchasers or preemption claimants, the company had the right to go fifteen miles in each direction, right and left of the road, and select the remainder of the lands. Now, upon any consideration of equivalents, of reciprocal benefits to the Treasury and the road, I would like the honorable Senator to state, as a specimen, to show the working of the principle upon which these donations are made—if it is upon that ground alone, the exercise of the privilege of a prudent proprietor—what proportion of the lands on either side of that road, or both sides, for six miles, remains to be sold at $2 50 an acre? Is it not very small?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I cannot answer specifically. Let the honorable Senator finish the question, and I will answer as I can.

Mr. BELL. I desire to know whether the amount is considerable? It is only within the zone of land of six miles in extent on both sides, that the alternate sections are doubled in price. What I mean to illustrate—the honorable Senator can illustrate it—is that it is only a principle assumed in name to get clear of the difficulty. I do not mean that it is altogether in name. But I desire to know whether practically and substantially the results are such that principle would seem to demand in the eye of a prudent proprietor, whether he is remunerated for the donation he has made, by any equivalent in the sale of the small quantity of lands that are sold at the increased value.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I cannot answer precisely what proportion of these lands were within six miles, and what were outside the six miles and within fifteen; but I can state the general course of that road was through prairie lands, distant from market and from timber, where, without the road, the lands would not have brought twenty-five cents an acre. You had had some of them in the market for forty years at $1 25 per acre, and could not sell them. If you could have sold them for $1 25 per acre when they were first brought into the market, the interest on the money would have been more than they are worth at $1 25 an acre now. Since you passed the bill, and the road has been put under contract, a large proportion of them have been sold, and every acre will be sold, I have no doubt, at the advanced price of $2 50 an acre.

But my object is not to defend railroad bills today. It is merely to repel the impression that is attempted to be put upon the public mind, that the new States of the Union have been getting more than their share of the public lands.

Sir, wherever you have granted them to us we have rendered you more than an equivalent. Take the grants of the sixteenth sections, if you please. You made a grant of the sixteenth section in every township in the State of Illinois, on condition that the State of Illinois would never, as a sovereign State of the Union, tax the remainder of your lands. Why, sir, the taxes in ten years on your lands would have been worth twice as much as the whole sixteenth sections you gave. We pay you, by that exemption from taxation, for the sixteenth sections, twice, three times, and in the whole period, before your title is extinguished, perhaps ten times as much as the lands would have been worth. Sir, do not tell me that they would not have been subject to taxation, but for that consideration; for I believe your courts have held that the property of the United States within the States is subject to taxation, unless it is exempted by special arrangement. Hence we find it necessary, when we make an appropriation for a custom-house in one of the cities, or for a court-house, to put in a clause by which the State shall consent to exempt it from taxation for all time to come, as a condition of its construction.

Then, sir, when you charge to our account the sixteenth section in each township of the new States, we ask you to credit the account by the amount of taxes that you would otherwise have had to pay us, and ought to have paid us for the land you owned in the State. We made a bargain with you. We agreed to exempt the lands from taxation in consideration of those granted lands. We have fulfilled our part of the agreement, and now you wish to taunt us as if it were a gift. You made the bargain with us when you had the power to coerce us into submission. We were a Territory applying for admission into the Union; and you would not let us come in until we agreed to that hard bargain which you imposed on us. We did agree to it. We kept it in good faith. We never taxed your property. We have been content with the terms of it; and now we are to be taunted, as if we had been grabbing and stealing all the public lands within our reach. It is only to repel these charges that I rose.

But, sir, without going into that, I say, as a western man, representing a new State, in which there are many millions of acres of public lands, that I am willing to abide by the principle that Congress shall dispose of those lands in such a manner as a prudent land proprietor would in the disposition of his own estate; and if we cannot bring any of our claims clearly within that principle, in the judgment of the Senate, we do not ask you to pass them.

But, this is a departure from the real point involved in this measure. It is not pretended that the disposition that is to be made in the bill of ten million of acres for the insane is designed or expected to enhance the value of the public domain. It is not put upon the principle of a land owner enhancing the value of his estate. It is put upon the principle of an appropriation for a charitable purpose; that the condition of the insane appeals strongly to our sympathies; that we have funds enough in the Treasury, and lands enough belonging to the United States; and that, therefore, we should either take those funds out of the Treasury, or vote the public property for this charitable purpose. Now, sir, I think when that proposition is made, we ought to stop and reflect as to its tendency and its consequences. I can see no reason, why, if you make an appropriation for the insane, as the message has well said, you should not make it for the deaf, for the dumb, for the blind, for the poor, for the destitute and needy, whatever their condition may be. The same humane impulses that would prompt us to do the one, would prompt us to do the other; and is it not a proposition, therefore, that all of these objects of charity, that all these matters which commend themselves to our humanity, shall be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the States, and brought within the power, and the influence, and the protection of the Federal Government. I think, sir, it is a proposition to usurp, if you please, or, if you do not like that term, to draw by your power and your wealth within the circle of this Government, that which properly belongs to the local authorities of the States, and which can be better managed by them. I think that is the great principle involved; and it is one that we must look distinctly in the face. But, I see no reason why, if this principle is to be carried out, we should confine it to the insane. Why not go further, and include every man who is destitute, or every man who is incapable of taking care of himself—the unfortunate and the infirm of every description?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Does he not believe in our constitutional power to give land to the homeless? Is he not in favor of the homestead bill?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not choose to bring the discussion of those other questions into this measure. The Senator will find out, when that bill comes up, whether I am for it or not; and I will be ready to meet him, if I do advocate it, upon the principle that I now advance; and I can tell him that, if I do not bring it within the principle I now lay down, I shall not be for it; if I can bring it within that principle, I shall be for it. But I do not choose to have my mind diverted from the present argument, by a reference to other measures which are hereafter to be acted upon.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope my friend will not get in a passion about it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Not at all. I was never in better humor in my life. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I know you are always in a good humor; and so am I. [Laughter.] But when the Senator asserted the principle laid down by him to-day, when I had supposed he was my friend and ally upon the homestead bill, I was afraid I was about to lose him; and I really wanted to inquire whether I was in danger of losing so valuable an ally. I am with him upon the homestead bill. I am for this bill; but, if Congress has no power over the public lands—

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the Senator allow me to ask which side of the homestead bill he is on?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am in favor of its passage. Which side are you on?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is unnecessary for the Senator to ask on which side I am, because he has told the Senate twice that he is with me.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I thought I was; but I wanted to find out.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And now I can tell him that, he being with me on the homestead bill, when that question comes up, I will give him reasons for his vote which he can stand upon and fear no danger.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will my friend allow me to ask him the question again? I am really at a loss to know whether he is for or against the mill-dam.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I can state to him at once. It is unnecessary to attempt to divert me from my argument.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no such desire, I assure the Senator.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think I was treading on his corns, and therefore he wanted to draw me off.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I beg the Senator's pardon, I have no corns to be trod upon, [laughter;] but still I would like to know whether he is with me or not on the homestead bill, for I am for it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am not so sure whether I am with him or not, because I am not so sure of his position; but as he has pledged himself to be with me, he has no right to ask further questions. I hold him to his terms, and will let him know his duty on the homestead bill time enough for him to vote accordingly.

I was saying, Mr. President, that this bill involves a principle which we must meet fairly in the face. The consequences to grow out of it are of vast importance. I do not believe that the condition of the insane, or of the deaf, or the dumb, or the blind, or the poor, will be benefited by withdrawing them from the jurisdiction of the States, and placing them under the Federal Government. Then, again, if we are to furnish the means for the purpose of building asylums, and hospitals, and poorhouses, and public buildings for these indigent persons, is it not proper that those means should be under our own jurisdiction? Whenever you establish the principle that one government is to furnish the means, and another is to expend the money, you will found a system of extravagance, the like of which you have not witnessed in any branch of this Government.

I hold that, if the means are to be furnished by this Government, the jurisdiction must be under it, and its officers must be responsible to it, in order that you may hold them to a strict accountability. But, sir, I am not willing to invade the States, and withdraw this class of people from their jurisdiction. I believe that their interests, their safety, their comfort, require that we should keep them where they are, under the protection of the State and local authorities. The States will do more for purposes of philanthropy, and humanity, and charity, if left to themselves, than this Government will, if we assume jurisdiction over the subject. Nearly all the States in the Union are now erecting hospitals and other charitable institutions. My own State has made large expenditures, and is establishing a good system of institutions for almost all these classes of people; and I believe nearly every other State in the Union is doing so. Wealthy persons also are establishing asylums for objects of charity. They are under the direction of the local authorities; they are managed by the local authorities; and those authorities will manage them more prudently and economically than this Government possibly can.

Why, sir, if this Government is to establish institutions for these purposes, how many are you to have? If only one or two, it would be more expensive to take the invalid to the institution, perhaps, than it would be to support him; and yet, if you are going to establish one at every neighborhood, or every county, where is your revenue to come from by which those institutions are to be erected and sustained? It opens a door to the extension of the power of this Government and its jurisdiction, in derogation of the rights of the States to a wider and more fearful extent than any bill or proposition which I have ever known to be presented. But, sir, that is the great principle, so far as I could judge from the hasty reading of that message, which the message involves. The remainder of it, in reference to the public lands, contains only observations, for the purpose of showing that the principle laid down in the message does not conflict with those grants which have heretofore usually been made to the new States of the Union. That great principle I wish to see discussed. I shall be glad to see a thorough and full discussion. I am prepared to maintain what I understand to be the principle of that message, by argument; and if the measures which I advocate cannot square by that principle, cannot stand upon it, then let them fall; for a sound and correct principle of this Government is more important to me than any mere matter of expediency, that lasts only for a day or for a year. But, sir, I will not go into this discussion now. I felt this much to be due to the State which I represent, and to my own section, in repelling the idea that we wish any other disposition of the public lands than that which a prudent land proprietor would make in the disposition of his own property.

Mr. WELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. COOPER. If the Senator will give way, I will move an adjournment.

Mr. WELLER. If the question is to be further discussed to-night, I prefer to be heard upon it now.

Mr. COOPER. If the Senator gives way, I will move an adjournment, so that he will have the floor.

Several SENATORS. Let us fix a day for its consideration.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Next Monday was the day agreed upon.

Mr. WELLER. If the Senate will agree to postpone the consideration of the question until Monday next, that course will receive the sanction of my judgment, because I think the whole of this discussion to-day has been an improper one. It is better far to discuss the questions involved in the message when we come to vote upon the question of reconsideration on the day that may be fixed. Every Senator who has spoken to-day has complained that he had but indistinctly heard the message read at the Secretary's table. We all want to investigate it, for all other things being equal, I apprehend a Senator can speak better on a subject about which he knows something. If the message be printed, it will be our duty to investigate it closely, and examine the principles involved in it, and then we shall be able to vote understandingly on the question of reconsideration. But here we have had a discussion to-day, a very general and comprehensive one, covering the whole message, upon a mere question of printing. And what is the object of printing? One object is, to enable every Senator to examine the question calmly and deliberately, in order that he may be able to vote understandingly.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Will the Senator from California allow me to ask him to what day he proposes to postpone the consideration of the subject?

Several SENATORS. Say Monday.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I should prefer Monday week.

Mr. WELLER. My object is to get a day now assigned for the reconsideration of this question. If the Senate will agree to take the vote on the motion submitted by the Senator from Virginia, I will yield the floor at once; and on Monday next we can enter into a full discussion of the subject. We can then have a fair field and an open fight on the old issue between strict constructionists and latitudinarians; and upon this question everybody knows where I stand, and everybody will know where my friend from Tennessee has always stood.

Mr. BELL. Will the Senator allow me? Will he wait until I can get an answer to my question from the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WELLER. I do not think the honorable Senator from Virginia is prepared to answer the question of the Senator from Tennessee until he has read the message; for to my knowledge, he was engaged in discussion with me at the very time the Clerk was reading it; and I take it for granted that he never saw it until it was read at the Clerk's desk. Now I want to give the Senator from Virginia an opportunity to examine the question. I have great confidence in his judgment, and I doubt not that, after examination, he will be able to give a satisfactory answer to my friend from Tennessee. He has also interrogated my friend from South Carolina on this subject. I have the utmost confidence in his judgment, and I would rather have his judgment on the question after he had investigated it than now, when, perhaps, he does not fully comprehend it. Now, having said this much, I have a little motion to submit, which ordinarily terminates discussion here, and that is that the Senate do now adjourn.

Several SENATORS. Let us take the vote on printing.

Mr. WELLER. I withdraw the motion, as there seems to be a disposition upon the part of the Senate now to fix some day for taking the question on reconsideration.

Mr. GWIN. What day shall be fixed depends very much with me, upon what disposition is made of another and a much greater question than this, which I propose soon to bring before the Senate. I should, therefore, prefer not to say Monday next.

Several MEMBERS. Monday week.

Mr. GWIN. Monday week would suit exactly.

Mr. WELLER. I do not know that the question to which my colleague alludes is more important than this, because the construction which is given to the veto message by some Senators will affect very much the important measure to which he alludes, and, therefore, it may be involved in this question.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of printing is yet undisposed of; perhaps there would be no objection to taking the vote upon that.

Mr. BROWN. Before that vote is taken, I desire to say that I had intended to ask the Senator from Illinois the same question which was propounded by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. Jones,] that is, as to whether he is an advocate of the homestead bill? I have always understood that Senator to be in favor of that measure; and when he had answered it, I intended to have followed it up by another inquiry, how he drew the distinction upon constitutional principles, between making grants of land for the benefit of sane people, and making grants of land for the benefit of those who are insane? I would have asked the question, but I did not conceive that I had got quite a courteous answer from the honorable Senator to my first inquiry; and when I do not get courteous answers, I am not apt to propound second inquiries; and inasmuch as the Senator from Illinois has declined to answer the question, I now propound it to the country in this form: If the country approves of the homestead bill, approves of the policy of giving land to the landless who are sane, how shall the country repudiate the doctrine of giving land to the homeless who are insane?

Mr. DOUGLAS. If there was anything in my answer to the honorable Senator from Mississippi that was uncourteous, it certainly was not so intended. I did decline going off into these remote questions which were put just at the time when I was making an argument upon the present question that was pinching gentlemen rather close. It looked to me as if these questions were put for the purpose of withdrawing my attention.

Mr. BROWN. It was not so with me.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Each time when I got to that point again, another question was asked, to withdraw my attention, and I saw there was a sensitiveness when I endeavored to approach the real question. Therefore I said, when the homestead bill came up, they would know my opinions; but there is no use in any disguise, as the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Mississippi say. They know, and all here know, that I am an advocate of the homestead bill; but I do not choose to go into a discussion of that question now, when I conceive that it is brought in merely to mystify this question, instead of discussing each one by itself, and each upon its own merits. If the homestead bill does not come within the principle which I advocate, I shall be against it. If it does, I shall be for it. I do not choose, therefore, to be drawn off; and I do not concede that it is the right of any Senator to try to destroy another man's argument by interruptions to withdraw him from the point he is discussing.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is very much mistaken if he supposes I was trying to destroy his argument. I wait in painful anxiety, as the whole country will wait, for the distinction between granting land to sane people and granting land to the insane. Sir, if you have no constitutional power to give land to the Senator from Illinois because he is a man of sense, you have no power to give it to some other man because he is not a man of sense; but if you have the power to give it to my friend from Illinois because he is a sane man, then, by the same rule of constitutional construction, you can give it to another man because he is insane. I do not understand these refined distinctions. I would not for the world charge the Senator from Illinois with being for sane men because they are voting men. I know he can be moved by no such consideration. But what construction will the country put upon this conduct, unless the Senator will deign to put some construction on it himself. I appeal to the Senator on his own account to define his position, and to tell us why it is he is ready to give land to sane people, and refuses to give it to those that are insane. Unless there shall be some distinction drawn why the thing can be done in the one case, and cannot be done in the other, unfavorable conclusions may be drawn; conclusions which, I state to you, sir, I think, will be exceedingly against the Senator. While I am no guardian of his reputation, I think, as his friend, I am quite justified in making such suggestions as will call him up in explanation on a point like this.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am amazed at the Senator from Mississippi. After drawing a parallel between the sane and the insane, and after I have expressly declined to go into the discussion of the homestead bill upon this question, because it was irrelevant, he goes on to make a suggestion, that it cannot possibly be that the Senator from Illinois would vote for the homestead bill because sane men can vote; and not for the insane, because they cannot vote; and then he says he does not impute any such idea, but the country will draw erroneous impressions. Sir, I have no fear that any honest man will draw any such construction. No man in America would ever have dreamed of it, if the Senator had not suggested it. Now, why suggest an unworthy imputation, disgraceful to me, which no honest man would ever have suspected, and, after that suggestion, disavow the application of it to myself? I am astonished. I cannot believe that the Senator meant to insinuate a charge of that kind against me, at the same time that he disavowed it. But, why the necessity of pursuing this thing personally, after I had expressly declined to be drawn from the main point of my argument to another? I feel bound to repel any apprehension that any man on earth will draw an unfavorable impression of my integrity or my motives from my action here. Though I regret to be compelled to reply in this way, I feel it is a duty to myself to do so.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, when I say anything, I mean what I say. I never deal in innuendoes, nor mean two things by what I say. I did believe, and I do yet believe, that improper constructions will be placed upon the conduct of the Senator in refusing to answer a plain question. He does not think so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What question have I refused to answer?

Mr. BROWN. You refused to answer the question as to whether you were in favor of the homestead bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator declined to put the question because I had not given a courteous answer to another question, as he said.

Mr. BROWN. I did not hear the gentleman refuse to answer. My attention was called off for a moment. He refused to answer the Senator from Tennessee. Ought I to have propounded the same question a second time, if there were no other reason?

Mr. DOUGLAS. That Senator knew, every man in the Senate knew, that not one week ago I had, in a speech here, declared my great anxiety for the passage of the homestead bill.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Mississippi, since he got up to ask me the question, said he knew that I was for that bill.

Mr. BROWN. I said I understood so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Tennessee says he knew it. There is not a man here who did not know it.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Not a man in the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. I stated that I had so understood it, but I wanted a distinct avowal from the Senator from Illinois that he was in favor of that measure, and then I was about to proceed to say what I honestly believe to be true; and I say it certainly without any sort of apology, notwithstanding the vehement manner of the honorable Senator, that I believed a refusal to give an answer which justified him in voting for a donation of land to sane people, and at the same time justified him in refusing to give it for the insane, might lead to improper construction. I qualified it at the same time by saying to the Senator that I was no guardian of his reputation. I know that he is quite competent to take care of himself; but if I am not greatly mistaken, notwithstanding the boisterous manner of the Senator on this occasion, he will hear of this thing again. I do not make the suggestion, as the Senator seems to think I did, that he shall hear from it again; but when the question is asked, and when the Senator now distinctly avows that he is in favor of the homestead bill, and that he is opposed to this bill—one making a grant of land for the benefit of the insane, and the other making a grant of land for the benefit of those who are sane—saying that one is constitutional and the other unconstitutional—I repeat again, that the country will wait in painful anxiety to know how it is that the Senator draws the distinction between the two bills. When he refused to give his reasons, the reasons which justify him in drawing this distinction, I ventured to suggest, in no spirit of unkindness, that improper conclusions, not very flattering to the Senator, might by possibility be drawn; and if the Senator thinks proper to lecture me for making a suggestion of this sort, in the kindest spirit, let him do so. I certainly did not mean to be unkind towards the Senator from Illinois; and I regret exceedingly that he should put such a construction upon my declaration. I say, too, that I think now, when the question is up, and when there is a proposition to postpone it for ten days, that the distinction had better be drawn now between the constitutional power to vote against a grant of land for the insane, as an unconstitutional proposition, and the power to vote in favor of the sane as a constitutional proposition. If the Senator does not think so, if he does not concur with me in this opinion, he certainly, as I said before, is the guardian of his own reputation, of his own fame, and may decline to answer if he thinks proper.

Mr. BAYARD obtained the floor.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to say only one word in reply to the Senator from Mississippi.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not yield the floor to the honorable Senator from Illinois. I have it; and I wish to make some remarks in reference to this question. I am sorry to do anything which he may consider discourteous. I do not consider these personal alterations in reference to public measures desirable either for the benefit of the Senate or of the country. The Senator from Illinois can resume the discussion as he pleases when I am through, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are not discussing the question before us at all. We are going into the consideration, every gentleman professing that he does not himself mean to discuss it, of the merits of the President's message vetoing the bill for the relief of the insane poor. The motion pending is to print the message, and the question recurs, is it not a matter of common courtesy to the President of the United States, when he has sent you a message, vetoing, or dissenting in opinion from your action on a great legislative measure, to print that message?

It is certainly improper to prolong this debate without determining to print the message, so that it may come before the Senate and before the people of the country properly. Are gentlemen afraid to let it go before the country, or do they mean to treat the President with discourtesy, and say that they will keep lying on their table, unprinted, his message, until they have fully, in their own opinions, answered the positions contained in it, before it can go before the country at all? That is something like the aspect of things as the debate has progressed in this case.

But there is another view of this question. On this motion to print, it seems to me, the proposition should be a plain one, to order on the part of the Senate that the message should be printed, in order that it may go before the country. The consideration of the message then becomes a subject of debate in the Senate. Gentlemen need not be afraid, unless they underrate the intelligence of the people of the country, that they are going in a hasty debate to make such an impression on the public mind that it cannot be answered hereafter. This question is not going to sleep with a mere debate to-day. It is a great question. We are coming back to something like a division upon principles, and gentlemen, I think, will find that the people of this country understand principles, though the idea seems to be entertained that if you can only, here in the Senate Chamber, in the first instance, enunciate a particular idea, afterwards it is a forgone conclusion and subsequent discussion can have no ultimate influence upon it.

If they have confidence in the principles which are to sustain this bill, they must be met hereafter before the people of the country, for the question is not going to stop here; and it is not going to stop here, as I mentioned to you, because, though when such bills as these are under consideration, and are objected to by individual Senators, questions which may be incidentally raised here are passed over, yet, when a veto comes from the President of the United States, the principles involved in that veto go home to the people of the country. They are met by calm consideration. After constant and repeated argument among the people of the country, as well as here in the Senate Chamber, I think you will find the same result will be experienced here as has been hitherto when the Congress of the United States has been disposed to trifle with the Constitution, when the people have, after consideration, and after strong majorities in favor of measures, been brought back to principles which are necessary for the maintenance of the Constitution.

Sir, I do not mean to enter into the principles connected with the measure; but I do say that we ought, in common justice and common courtesy to the President, direct the printing of the message, and then proceed to its consideration. I care not what day is fixed for the consideration of the bill which he has sent back to us, with his reasons for differing from us in opinion.

Mr. DOUGLAS obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the Senator allow me to say one word?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As the interrogatory which I propounded to the Senator from Illinois seems to have given rise to some debate and feeling, and as I desire neither to be misunderstood, nor to make any false impression on the mind of the Senator, or to evade any responsibility, I wish to state to him distinctly the ground upon which I propounded the question. I asked him whether he was in favor of the homestead bill or not. He says, I knew it, and everybody knew it. So I did, and I stated to him so distinctly. Now, the reason why I propounded the question was this: I am in favor of the homestead bill, and I am in favor of this bill, and I meant to kill off the argument of the Senator from Illinois upon this bill by rebutting testimony on the other side. That is exactly what I meant to do. I have no disguises about it, and I do not think that the Senator ought to have given himself any feeling about it, because he is, of all the men in the American Senate, just the very man to play that game on his adversaries. Have you not seen it here forty times? I can tell him, whenever I can get a chance to strike him that way, I shall be sure to strike him, as certain as I am a living man. [Laughter.] He need not attempt to escape.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I knew just as well before as I do now that that was the Senator's object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Certainly; I am a straight-out man.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And because he was playing that game on me, instead of meeting the argument I was then making, I was determined that he should not play it successfully. Hence I did not answer him, knowing that he knew how I stood. He then went on to say that he was with me on the homestead bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. So I am.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then if he knew that, there was no necessity for me to answer the question; for if he knew that I was for it, it was unnecessary, and if he did not know it, he showed that he was going with me on faith in my general accuracy and public course; and I had no idea he could give a better reason for his action than that faith. [Laughter.] Besides, as he was going with me on faith, and was sure to be right if he did, I did not choose to tell him on which side I was, for fear some fellow would get him wrong between now and the voting time. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am the happiest man in the world to go by faith, if you allow me, sir, but God save the mark when any man follows the Senator from Illinois by "faith." It takes "works" to follow him. I thought I had a right to call on that leader. I have followed him through some dark places, and I am afraid we shall have some darker ones before we get out. [Laughter.] But, sir, when I called upon that honorable Senator to know how he stood upon that question, he said I knew. So I did know; but at the same time I knew he was off upon a false scent, a false track, and I wanted to make Mr. DOUGLAS, of Illinois, a witness against the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Knowing that that was the object, I declined to allow him to play the game on me for this reason. I was making a point in the argument that I believed he could not answer; and now I infer he thought he could not, or otherwise he would not, have wanted to answer it in this way. I wished to discuss the veto message upon its own merits, to decide it upon its principles, and to bring into the discussion, to elucidate those principles, whatever is pertinent to it. Then, sir, when the homestead bill comes up, I am ready to meet that question upon the principle that lies at the bottom of it. I do not think that ad captandum arguments, or quoting a man on one question against him on another, is a right mode of settling a great constitutional principle. I think if the honorable Senator from Tennessee had as much confidence in the correctness of his opinion as I have in mine, he would be willing to meet me on the principle, in a fair argument in each case, without playing this game of quotations against one another. I had that confidence in the correctness of my opinion. I did not take the slightest exception to the Senator saying that he was playing a little game of brag. We both know how that game is played. I thought I would bluff back on him. The same was the reason in regard to the Senator from Mississippi, who put a question to me which I declined to answer, for the simple reason that I wished to discuss this question on its merits, and I was not willing to be drawn off so far from the line of debate as to answer questions intended, perhaps, to break the whole force of the remarks which I was making. I thought those gentlemen ought not to have pushed that question at me when I treated them kindly, and gave notice to them that I could not be drawn off on such a line of departure from the course of debate.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I sincerely do not mean to enter into this discussion; but my friends from Mississippi and Illinois have both assumed, as an undoubted fact, that insane people in the United States are not entitled to vote. Now, sir, I wish to say that I do not think that, by any means, a clear and certain matter; and I would put to my friends from Illinois and Mississippi particularly, and to the Democratic members of this body in general, this inquiry: If insane people are not entitled to vote, how did they succeed in getting here, or how do they expect to maintain their places? [Laughter.] That being a very important interrogatory, and extremely necessary to be answered in order to determine upon this question of printing an extra number of the message of the President of the United States, and requiring, as I think, a night's calm reflection, and an opportunity for this excitement to subside, I think it extremely proper now to move, having thrown out this suggestion for consideration before our meeting to-morrow, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 3, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER presented resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Kentucky, in relation to grants of lands to the children of soldiers who are adults; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Also, presented resolutions in relation to "the appropriation of a part of the public domain to the State for educational purposes," which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled "a resolution for extending the existing contract for carrying the mail in Alabama," which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WALLEY. Will the gentleman from Oregon allow me to introduce a petition to which there can be no objection?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] is strictly in order, and must be put, unless unanimous consent be given to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. WALLEY.]

Mr. HAMILTON. What is the character of the petition which the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to present?

Mr. WALLEY. It is a petition analogous in character to the resolutions presented by the Speaker. It is a petition of his Excellency Emory Washburn, Governor of Massachusetts, and three hundred and seventy others, members of the Legislature of that State, and merchants, and other of her citizens, praying Congress, in view of the great scarcity of seamen at the present time, and of the fact that our Navy must be manned from our mercantile marine, to patronize the enterprise of encouraging and educating seamen by establishing floating schools in the principal harbors of the United States.

Mr. LANE. I am very willing to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the petition may be received and referred without reading.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, the memorial will be received and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALLEY. I also, Mr. Speaker, ask leave to present a memorial from the Mayor of Boston and two hundred and three other citizens, with reference to a matter now under consideration in this House, praying that officers of the Army may be confined to their military duties, and that civil works may be placed under the control and superintendence of civilians.

Mr. PHELPS. I object. Let it be presented under the rule.

Mr. FLORENCE. In relation, Mr. Speaker, to the reference of the petition as to the floating schools, I would suggest that it would be better it should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs. There is a bill now before that committee affecting the subject of the apprenticeship; and it appears to me that that committee would be the proper reference for this memorial; or else let the bill to which I allude be withdrawn from the Committee on Naval Affairs and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania submit a motion to reconsider the vote by which the memorial presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts was referred to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. FLORENCE. Yes, sir, I do.

Mr. HAMILTON. Then I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. FLORENCE. Well, I do not desire to consume the time of the House; and since the gentleman from Maryland is disposed to be factious, I withdraw my motion. I only made it because it struck me that the reference I have suggested was the appropriate reference; and I deemed it my duty to submit it to the House.

Mr. DUNBAR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report a bill, Senate bill No. 316, and I ask that favor under peculiar circumstances. It is merely a bill to change the name of the vessel Abeona—which was partly burned at the mouth of the Mississippi river, and since rebuilt, and which is now owned by an American citizen—to that of Mount Vernon. I beg leave to state the circumstances under which—

Mr. LANE, of Oregon, (interrupting.) What disposition does the gentleman from Louisiana propose to make of the bill?

Mr. DUNBAR. I desire to have it passed.

Mr. LANE. Then I object.

Mr. ORR. I hope the gentleman from Oregon will withdraw his objection. It will not take five minutes to pass the bill.

Mr. DUNBAR. I trust the gentleman from Oregon will do so.

Mr. LANE. Very well, I yield, and withdraw my objection.

The bill entitled "An act to change the name of the bark Abeona to Mount Vernon," was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. DUNBAR. I ask to have the bill put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was read a third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon, moved the usual resolution to close debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill, No. 315, to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, to grant donations of land to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes, in thirty minutes after the committee shall have again resumed its consideration.

Mr. LETCHER. I would suggest to the gentleman from Oregon that it is hardly necessary to make that motion. It seems to me there is no use in so limiting the debate. We had no long speeches yesterday—

Mr. ORR, (interrupting.) Yes, but there may be some this morning.

Mr. LANE. I have never been inclined in my congressional life to shut out fair debate and discussion on any subject. But I would say this to my friend Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] that the business relating to my Territory has not yet been touched. It is at the foot of the Calendar; and if to-day is entirely occupied in the discussion of this bill, I would have no hope of reaching it this session. If the motion that I have made be agreed to, gentlemen can say all that is necessary under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The subject, gentlemen will recollect, is not debatable.

The question being upon the motion of Mr. LANE,

Mr. HAMILTON asked for tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 40.

So the motion was agreed to.

[Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled a bill of the following title; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending 30th June, 1855.

The question was then put; and the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union agreed to.]

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of local Territorial business.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee at its last session, and when it rose, had under consideration House bill No. 315, entitled "A bill to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes," to which an amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOWE] was pending to strike out the second section, the words "white" and "American," and so modify the clause as to make it read:

"That to every male citizen of the United States, or to such person as shall declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States," &c.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] moved to amend the amendment by striking out the words "or who has declared his intention to become such," and to insert after the word "years" the words "who has declared his intention to become a citizen;" so that, if the amendments prevail, the section will read:

"That to every white male citizen of the United States, or every white male over the age of twenty-one years, who has declared his intention to become a citizen," &c.

The question pending is upon the adoption of the latter amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I have not risen to make a speech. There are several subjects coming before us on which I wish to speak at considerable length. Among them are the Post Office and the Pacific railroad. Hence I do not feel at liberty to consume more than a few minutes on this occasion.

I have risen, sir, to say that I must vote against the bill in its present shape; and I wish my constituents to have my explanation for my vote. I cannot vote for the bill if the word "white" is retained in it.

I believe that every person is bound to esteem his religion above everything else. By his religion, true or superstitious, rational or spurious, he must give it this preference. My own religion is very simple. It consists in the aim to deal impartially and justly with all men. On the authority of the Saviour, the commandment to do unto others as we would have others do unto us comprises the whole sum and substance of Christianity.

I hold, sir, that we should regard the whole world as before every man, and every man entitled to seek his home in any part of it. If I wish to make my home in Africa, I am to be allowed to do so; and if I am there shut out from benefits and blessings made common to others, I am wronged, deeply wronged. So if a black man goes to New Mexico, and is there shut out from such common benefits and blessings, he is deeply wronged. Under the Jewish ceremony, even the fugitive servant (fugitive slave, as many render it) was to be allowed his choice of a home anywhere within the gates of Israel.

There is but one true standard of conduct, and that is the Divine conduct. We are to make our own moral character resemble that of our Maker as nearly as we can. But, surely, no one believes that our Maker can approve of the odious and guilty distinction under consideration. No one believes that the incarnate Son of God, were he among us, would vote for this distinction. Says the Apostle Peter—and I am sure that my learned and Catholic friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] will not disparage the authority of that Apostle, on whom his church is built—"God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." "In every nation"—in nations of red and black men as well as white men.

I often meet with gentlemen who appear to believe that black men have not the same nature, the same wants, the same sensibilities as white men. On such occasions, I am wont to recall the words of Shylock, the Jew: "Hath not a Jew eyes? Hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? Fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same summer and winter as a Christian is. If you prick us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you poison us, do we not die? If you wrong us, shall we not revenge?" How careful, sir, should we be, not to commit wrongs; seeing that revenge so naturally follows wrongs! And if we have committed them, how careful should we be to prevent revenge by repentance! Let it not be said, sir, that Shylock is poor authority, because he loved money. His having loved money is one proof that he belonged to the human brotherhood, and had experience of our common nature.

I would, sir, that some black Shylock might be allowed to enter this Hall, and to plead for the striking out of this word "white." He might be more successful in his plea than our white Shylocks. I would, sir, that that noble man, Frederick Douglass, could be allowed to stand up here, and pour out the feelings of his great heart in his rich, and mellow, and deep voice. I refer to him, sir, because I regard him as the man of America. He was held in cruel bondage until he was twenty-one years old. Then he escaped from his tormentors. He was never at school a day in his life; and now he is confessedly one of the ablest public speakers and writers in this country. I feel sure, sir, that, could he be heard, he would be able to bring the committee to repent of its purpose (if such is its purpose) to retain the word "white."

Shall we never cease from this prejudice. Born and bred, as I was, among negroes and Indians as well as whites, and respecting and loving all equally well, this insane prejudice is well nigh incomprehensible to me. I am happy to recognize in every man my brother—ay, another self; and I would that I could infuse my education at this point into every one who is without it.

But, sir, I promised not to make a speech. When on this prolific theme of our wrongs against the colored man, I hardly know when to stop.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, the inquiry which I propounded yesterday to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, from which this bill was reported, in regard to the peculiar and unusual phraseology employed, of "white male American citizens of the United States" was not made, as seems to have been apprehended in some quarters, in a hypercritical spirit. I supposed that the word "American," in that connection, was intended to have a meaning; and that it had been well considered by the chairman of the committee, who has the reputation of being a lawyer of ability. I therefore propounded the inquiry in good faith; for I was led to suppose it might have been inserted with the view of excluding from the benefits of the act certain persons, formerly citizens of Mexico, who were entitled, under the ninth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, "to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States." I did not suppose the word was inadvertently introduced, but that it was intended to carry with it a meaning full of significance at least to a class of persons introduced into the United States under the provisions of that treaty; and until this interpretation is disclaimed, I think it may well bear that construction. It would be unjust to discriminate against the class of persons to which I have alluded, whether they were of the pure Castilian blood, or whether they were of the mixed races, provided they were citizens of the Mexican Republic at the date of the treaty. And, Mr. Chairman, whether they were or were not citizens under the Mexican law at the time of admission, I, for one, should not be disposed to discriminate against them in our legislation upon this subject.

My amendment, Mr. Chairman, to strike from the section the word "American," was designed, therefore, to obviate the objection to which I have referred. But, sir, I proposed also to strike from the section the word "white," so that the benefits of the law might inure to all "citizens of the United States, and to such persons as have declared, or shall declare, their intention to become citizens." My object in this was to place all citizens of the United States, and all persons entitled under our laws to the privilege of becoming such, upon an equality as to the right of acquiring and holding property, and this without any discrimination as to caste or color.

In several of the States of the Union colored persons enjoy the privilege of citizenship, in others they do not; and my own State is of the latter class. But, Mr. Chairman, it does not follow that because we are unwilling to raise them to a social and political equality with the whites, that we are bound to withhold from them the right to live, and the means of procuring sustenance wherewith to support life. I am opposed to all such unjust discrimination; it is unworthy of the Government and the age in which we live.

I understand that colored persons are citizens in the State of Vermont, and so of Massachusetts, and other New England States; and, with certain qualifications, so also in the State of New York. Under the bill as I propose to amend it, these persons, I suppose, would be entitled to the benefits of the act. And why should they not be? While gentlemen are contending here for the enlargement of the area of slave territory, upon the plea that, while slavery itself would not thereby be increased, the condition of the slave would be ameliorated and his happiness promoted, is it right to say that the free colored man and his posterity shall be forever confined to the spot which he now inhabits?

It is repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution, which declares that "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States."

If it were in my power, Mr. Chairman, I would extend the provisions of our legislation upon this subject, so as to reach our whole population. I would deny to no man, whatever might be his color, the right to acquire a home for himself and his family.

Mr. DISNEY. All this discussion about the mere verbal phraseology of the bill is a very small affair. There were some inaccuracies of phraseology occurring in the bill when it was first drawn up. My health at that time was wretched; and when we had various discussions in the committee in regard to it, I requested a clerk in the Land Office to write and draw up a bill in conformity with the principles I suggested. The bill was so drawn up, but I found inaccuracies, and I sent it back, and it was again rewritten, at my suggestion.

But here is one solitary instance of a verbal inaccuracy, which gentlemen have pointed out, and that is easily remedied. It is not worth talking about. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOWE,] who has just taken his seat, has supposed that there was some covert, latent meaning in the use of the word "American," and that it might be intended to affect the rights of those emigrants who became citizens of the United States by virtue of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. The gentleman ought to know that it is not competent for Congress, by any act, to deprive men of the right guaranteed to them by a treaty, because our organic law expressly declares that a treaty shall be the supreme law of the land.

Mr. HOWE. I am well aware that no legislation of ours here can contravene a treaty stipulation. But when we are legislating to give grants of land to certain persons, it does not follow that we shall necessarily, by implication, under that treaty, extend them to all persons.

Mr. DISNEY. The real point of difference in the present discussion involves a mere matter of phraseology, which can be easily corrected. Something has been said about negroes being citizens of some of the States of this Union.

This is not the occasion for me to go into an argument upon this subject, but I shall content myself with the general declaration, that, in my judgment, it is not competent for any State of this Union to declare negroes citizens within the meaning of the term as used in the Constitution of the United States. Any of the States may extend to them the privileges of citizenship within the limits of their respective States, but those privileges can have no existence beyond the jurisdiction of these States. They cannot confer upon them those franchises and capabilities which will bring them within the meaning of the Constitution, and which will extend to them the right of citizenship within the other States of the Union.

I will say to the committee that I do not propose to discuss this point. It is sufficient for my purpose to call the attention of the committee to the facts. The only point involved now is, whether the provisions of this bill shall be extended to negroes or limited to white men? Now I, for one, believe, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. KERR] stated yesterday, that this is a Government of white men—carried on by white people, and for white people.

I have no disposition to enlarge the original objects of the framers of the Government. It is not law, nor policy to do so. And notwithstanding the fine moral essay which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] delivered here this morning—all of which is very fine in story, but very little of which has anything to do with the practical affairs of this life—I, for one, shall insist on the limitation of the original bill to American citizens. The amendment now pending before the committee proposes to exclude the word "American," and limit the advantages of the bill to white male citizens, and to those over twenty-one years of age, who have declared their intentions to become citizens, and who are in the Territory.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. HOWE. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] be kind enough to answer me an inquiry?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. I want to know whether, in the view of the gentleman from Ohio, all persons residing in the province of New Mexico are to be entitled, under the terms of this act, to the lands donated by the provisions of the bill? Or, in other words, will the bill operate practically to exclude all persons who were formerly Mexican citizens from the advantages of the act?

Mr. DISNEY. The bill, in express terms, extends to every white male citizen of the United States. It is for the Supreme Court to decide whether, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, these Mexican citizens are now citizens of the United States.

Mr. HOWE. I would observe to the gentleman that the amendment offered by him to my amendment, still retains the word "American."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOWE] that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] has modified his amendment by striking out the word "American."

Mr. HOWE. Oh, very well; I got the impression that I had from reading the report of yesterday's proceedings in the Globe.

Mr. DISNEY. Well, then, the report in the Globe must be wrong.

Mr. WADE. At the time the question was before the House and committee on the home-stand bill, I forbore to make any remarks justifying my vote, or what would have been my vote, if I had been in the House when the bill was finally passed, in opposition to that word "white." And

I take this opportunity now to express my views on that subject, which, I believe, correspond with those of nineteen twentieths of my constituents, of whatever party they may have been, or are still, members. It has been said here by gentlemen that they understood that this was a white Government. Well, I did not suppose that the Government had any particular color.

Mr. DISNEY. Oh, yes, it has.

Mr. WADE. I had myself supposed that it was rather a human Government; and, in my judgment, if it be a human Government, it must extend to all human beings. It was said by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. KERR] yesterday, and he opened his speech on this matter by saying, that this is a white man's Government, or words equivalent to that, and that he supposed it was made for the white people. Now I find, by examining the gentleman's district, that he represents thirty-three thousand and odd white people, and ninety-four thousand and odd colored people.

Well, sir, I do not understand what this Government, as a Government, has to do with the color of any man, because I do not know that I should be orthodox as to color, if the question were brought down to a question of strict church discipline, according to the opinions of the Democratic and Whig deacons here. I cannot tell how I should come out under such an ordeal.

But this one thing is certain, and that is, that the intent of this Government is to be gathered from the Constitution of the United States itself. Now, I deny that the most ardent strict constructionist can find anything therein which gives color to this notion that it is a colored government; that is, a white, or no-colored, Government, or a black colored Government. The Constitution says nothing about any tribe or race of men; it speaks of persons, and whoever bears that character is a member of the Government, if born within its territory.

Now, if gentlemen will convince me that a black man is not a person, then I will admit that he is not entitled to any of the privileges, or any of the benevolence of this Government. But if he is a person, then he comes within the purview of the Constitution of the United States; and if the Constitution has spoken of slaves, it has not spoken of them as colored persons. The Constitution throws its protection around the slaveholder as much when he gets a white man within his grasp as it does when he gets the black man—and that is no protection at all. It gives no countenance to slavery. There is nothing in the Constitution that has aught to do with the color of a free man, or with the color of a slave.

Well now, sir, what ought we to do in view of the fact that there are some five hundred thousand free people of color among us? What ought the slaveholder to do? To throw open these Territories, and permit the colored man to depart from the States which oppress him, and locate himself where he can have the opportunity to prove his equality with the whites, or make his inequality manifest beyond controversy.

Now, it is a strange thing to me that men of intellect, and men of benevolence—for I take it that we are such all of us—should be legislating to protect the strong and to oppress the weak. The strong man can take care of himself. If any one needs protection, it is the weak, not the strong. But how do you prove your superiority? Are not idiots your inferiors? Are not minor children your inferiors? Your legislation in respect to those unfortunates is humane, gentle, merciful—why then not treat the black at least with equal kindness.

But the colored man does not ask your benevolence until you have done him justice; nor for your mercy until he has subjected himself to some righteous penalty; and this bill is blacker with injustice than the negro's skin. It donates large tracts of land to the rich. The white man with millions, is the object of your bounty, while the poor black man is insultingly denied this simple gratuity. Sir, I cannot, I will not support a measure which thus outrages every sense of right.

There is another feature of this bill to which I object. It is to its exclusion of all foreigners from its bounty who are not now in the territory, and hence is but partial in its provision, and inadequate to the exigencies of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time at which debate was to be closed upon this bill, by an order of the House, has arrived, and no further discussion is in order.

Mr. WADE. In order to allow me to finish my remarks, I move an amendment, and that is, to strike out the word "white."

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is not in order. There are already two amendments pending—an amendment to an amendment. The question recurs upon the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOWE.] The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is to strike out the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and insert in lieu thereof the words "white male citizens of the United States, or every white male above the age of twenty-one years who has declared his intention to become a citizen, and removed to," &c.

Mr. ORR. I ask for tellers upon the question, as it seems to be a test question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MILLSON and CAMPBELL appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 76; a further count not being demanded.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the amendment, as amended.

Mr. COBB. I ask the Chair to explain the state of the question. Must not the question be taken upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOWE?]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moved to strike out the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to insert his own amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, therefore, having been adopted, that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is stricken out.

Mr. COBB. I do not see how that can be stricken out which has never been inserted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Is the amendment now amendable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is open to amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to strike out the word "white."

Mr. HENDRICKS. I rise to a question of order. I ask the Chair whether the word "white," having been inserted by the committee, it is in order to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order. It will be in order to move to add to the amendment, but not to strike out.

Mr. WASHBURN. I would ask the Chair respectfully, whether this amendment, having been inserted as a whole, it is not in order to move to amend by striking out some part of it? The committee have decided that they prefer the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, as a whole, to that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but they have not, as I understand it, decided that they prefer the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, as offered by him to that amendment, amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has not yet decided that it prefers the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the language of the original bill. That is the question which is now pending before the committee. When a motion is made and carried to strike out and insert, it is not in order to move to strike out any portion of that which has been inserted. It would be in order for the gentleman to move to add to that which has been inserted.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I move to add after the word "white," the words "or colored." I hope, Mr. Chairman, very much for the sake of right and justice, and something for the credit of Congress and the country, that the amendment will prevail.

Mr. SEWARD. Has not the general debate closed on this bill? If it has, is the gentleman in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The general debate has closed, and the five minutes debate has just commenced.

Mr. WASHBURN. The effect of the bill, if passed as amended by the gentleman from Ohio, will be to exclude, as I understand, many people who were born on the soil, and born free, from the rights of citizenship and from the rights which are granted to others, to strangers, natives of other States, and other lands.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 68.

And besides, sir, in many of the northern States, in, I believe, all the New England States, black men are freemen and citizens, entitled by the constitution and laws of such States to all the rights, privileges, immunities, and franchises of white men. The Constitution of the United States, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Howe] said, guarantees to the citizens of one State equality of rights with the citizens of any other State. I maintain that the bill, if passed in its present form, would be in derogation of the Constitution of the United States. Maine, Massachusetts, and Vermont, and other northern States have, by their laws, passed, in the exercise of their own sovereignty—as many of the gentlemen from the South like to call it—declared that black men may be citizens of those States.

We have heard, in the discussion which has taken place on the Nebraska and Kansas question, a great deal from southern gentlemen in reference to the doctrine of the equality of rights. We have been told often and again that the southern slaveholders have a right to go with what the Legislatures of their sovereign States have declared to be property, chattels, into the Territories of the United States. And they tell us that there is no power—no power in this Congress, in this Government in, the Territories—no power under the sun, which can exclude them from going with their property into the Territories of the United States, that which their local laws have made property. They say that if Congress pass laws for such exclusion, it invades their rights and insults their people; and yet they tell us that Congress shall, by law, exclude the citizens of our States, citizens by our laws, from going into these Territories—thus placing the man below the thing. This is equality of rights with a witness; and what a miserable humbug doctrine it is, as practically interpreted by those who invented it.

Mr. BOYCE. Are not free negroes excluded by the constitutions of several of the northern States from coming within their limits?

Mr. WASHBURN. That may be true; and if they are to be excluded from going within the confines of these Territories, what are you going to do with them? Are you going to drive them from God's earth? Where shall they live? Will you break those you have bent before?

Mr. KEITT. The gentleman from Maine asks, if you exclude these free blacks from the Territories of the United States, what are you to do with them? What does this demonstrate? That our rights have been violated, our slaves seduced from us under the pretense of freedom by certain persons in the free States; and then, after our slaves have been taken, we are asked by some members from these free States, to let them take the public land on which to settle them.

Now, sir, as to the question of property, made by the gentleman, the gentleman says we claim the right to carry our slaves to these Territories, and he asks upon what ground we can prevent these persons from going there as citizens. Why, sir, has the gentleman not sufficient subtlety of perception to perceive the difference between persons and property? Does he not perceive that we may have the right to take our slaves into the Territories as property, and yet deny the right of citizenship to the blacks as persons? Sir, if it is not plain enough without argument, argument cannot make it plainer.

Mr. WASHBURN. If the citizen of South Carolina has a right to go into the Territories of the United States with his negroes as chattels, by virtue of his local laws, I ask the gentleman by what right Congress, under the Constitution, can exclude citizens—made citizens by the laws of sovereign States of the North—from going there as citizens?

Mr. KEITT. I said, Mr. Chairman, yesterday, that this was a Government of white men. I believe in the sovereignty of the States, and I have no objection to any State making any one a citizen whom it pleases. But these Territories belong to the whole of the States. Here is an institution vital to us and our Government, based upon races. If then, you carry these colored persons into the Territories, giving them there the status of citizenship, you indirectly assail our institutions by affirming, through legislation, the equality of the races, which we deny in the very beginning. Any State may determine the status of citizenship within her limits, but the Federal Government can recognise none but whites as people. This property is common. If Maine chooses to establish black citizenship, I have no objection, and if Maine had any territory belonging to her exclusively, I should have no objection to her establishing that status there. But this territory being common to us all, and there being a fundamental difference in the South between white and black, socially and politically, to go no further, I do maintain that if these northern States insist upon black citizenship there, they violate the Constitution, and attempt to circumvent and indirectly destroy that institution which is vital to us.

And now let me ask a question of the member from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] who indulged in a homily just now. I want to know whether in the State of Ohio black men vote? I want to know, also, whether in the State of Ohio blacks and whites intermarry?

Mr. WADE. Why, it is just as they please about that.

Mr. KEITT. Well, the white man who marries a black woman must be so degraded that even such a connection will elevate him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must call the gentleman from South Carolina to order. The condition of affairs in Ohio is not under consideration.

The question was then taken on Mr. WASHBURN's amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "white" the words "or more than half white." [Laughter.]

I offer that amendment in behalf of a large class of individuals, who inhabit many of the States of the Union, and who have less than half colored blood in their veins. Among them are some of the most worthy Democrats in the country. [Laughter.] They are the direct descendants of Thomas Jefferson, the great apostle of American Democracy. Men and women, who are the direct descendants of that great statesman, are not permitted to go into this territory and take their land like other persons, or like common people. [A laugh.] Sir, let it be known that our Northern Democrats—the lovers of liberty, the admirers of this founder of their party—will now vote to shut out from this Territory his descendants.

In this city there are said to be several descendants of one as illustrious as a woman as Jefferson was for a statesman—grand-children of Martha Washington—who are as white as I am. Are we prepared to say they shall be excluded from participating in the benefits of this act? I beg gentlemen of the committee to consider, reflect, and pause before they attempt to make such an unjust exclusion as this. Why, it would almost depopulate some of your southern States, were they to exclude this class of people. They could not be represented here by as numerous a delegation as they now are—States that have a larger proportion of colored than of white people.

The gentleman over the way [Mr. KEITT] says that this Government is a Government of white people. Am I to tell that gentleman that the framers of the Constitution were elected by colored men in part; that one of the southern States of this Union sent Delegates here by the vote of colored, as well as white men. I deny the position assumed by the gentleman from South Carolina that this is a Government of white people. Those men, elected in part by votes given by colored men, declared that they framed the Constitution, which is now the great charter of our liberties, for themselves and their offspring—that is, the offspring of those who elected them, black as well as white men.

Mr. KEITT. No.

Mr. GIDDINGS. The gentleman is more than two thirds colored himself, if you take the color of the people of his district as the criterion of his complexion. [Laughter.] Why, sir, the delegation from South Carolina represent a greater number of colored than of white people. Now, will the gentleman be so ungrateful to the people, by virtue of whose existence he holds his seat here, as to exclude them from all participation in the lands of this Territory? I trust not; it strikes me as being cruel, inhuman, and unjust. The day has come when men are looking to humanity, and not to color; to the principles of justice and righteousness, rather than to low and unworthy prejudices; to the discharge of duties, rather than to the gratification of feelings of oppression, unworthy of a civilized people.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I desire to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks leave of the committee to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object, as I wish to say a very few words myself about this matter. I do not wish to participate in a discussion of this sort at all, but merely to say a word in reply to the jeer thrown out by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. KEITT,] who I understood as saying that the white race in Ohio would be improved by intermarrying with negroes. I desire to say, in behalf of the white citizens of the State of Ohio, that they are not in the habit of intermarrying with blacks, though it is there as it is in other States—a mere matter of taste. The gentleman from South Carolina, I suppose, thinks, as I confess I do, that it is a very high offense against correct taste to intermarry with blacks; and I merely rise—and I shall not consume much of the time of the committee in so doing—to put this inquiry to the honorable member: If the whites do not intermarry with the blacks in his district, in what way can he explain the fact consistently, with a correct state of morals, that there are so many mulatto people there? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] is out of order.

Mr. KEITT. I answer the gentleman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. KEITT] is out of order, as the debate has closed upon the amendment.

The question was then taken upon Mr. GIDDINGS's amendment; and it was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] yesterday.

Mr. COBB. The amendment applies to the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth lines of the second section. It is simply to amend the bill so as to extend its provisions to citizens by granting only one hundred and sixty, instead of three hundred and twenty acres.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, there is a fourth amendment which I wish to propose to the second section, and which takes precedence of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. It is to strike out of the fourth line the words "removed to, and," so as to make it read:

"Every white citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become a citizen, over the age of twenty-one years, who was residing in said Territory," &c.

The question was taken; and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOWE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the word "American" occurs again in the ninth line. I propose to amend—

Mr. PARKER, (interrupting.) I have an amendment to propose in the sixth line, which takes precedence of that which the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to offer. I propose to insert after the word "fifty-three" the words "and who may be still resident there." I do not know what was the object of framing the bill in this way; but I suppose it was to encourage the settlement of the Territory. I imagine that if an estimate had been made on the 1st day of January, 1853, it would be found that there was a large number of persons residing in the Territory of

New Mexico at that time who have since removed away. And it would certainly be wrong to allow to come now and obtain the privileges and benefits of this bill, individuals who thus left, and never expect to return. Under the provisions of this bill, these persons would have a right to come forward and receive these lands—a section in one instance, and a half section in another. If that was the object of the committee in framing this bill, it will not work well; but I suppose that it was not the intention of the framers to give any such privilege to the persons to whom I refer.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that the bill proposes only to donate to the parties who occupy and cultivate the land for not less than four years.

Mr. PARKER. Yes; but that, Mr. Chairman, cannot alter the state of the case. There is, I know, a phrase in the next paragraph in relation to the actual settlement and cultivation of the land for no less than four years. But this clause does not apply to the point. And the gentleman from Ohio will observe, on reading the bill, that this does not apply to the clause in which I propose to insert the amendment that I have sent to the Clerk's desk. The next paragraph applies exclusively to those who come there until the year 1858.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana. [Mr. PARKER.]

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. Is it in order, Mr. Chairman, to move an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. Then I propose to amend by striking out all the words between the word "what," in the fourth line, and the word "shall," in the tenth line.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion cannot be entertained. It is not an amendment to the amendment.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. PARKER; and it was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs now upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. [Mr. COBB.]

Mr. COBB. I wish to explain what my amendment is, that it may be fully understood. It relates entirely to the quantity of acres, and is to strike out "three hundred and twenty acres," and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and sixty acres," throughout. That is the object of the amendment.

I would remark, further, that as we have in the homestead bill fixed the time of actual occupancy and cultivation to five years, I think we had better make the provisions of this bill conform to that; and, therefore, that the word "four," in the sixteenth line of this second section, should be changed to "five."

Mr. DISNEY. The provision of the bill in relation to the quantity of land is one in the formation of which I had but little share. I assented to it because it brings this bill, in this respect, in conformity to like provisions in reference to other Territories of the Union. The same reasons which have heretofore induced Congress to make grants of this sort to other Territories apply with equal force to the Territory of New Mexico, nay, with more force than they did to those other Territories. The reason is this, that there are less inducements in that Territory to invite emigration within its bounds than there is in the Territory of Oregon. Less inducements, I say. On the other hand, again, the obvious policy of the Government is much more urgent to induce emigration to the Territory of New Mexico than to the other Territories. Whatever of population is there is mostly foreign born; and it is important to the Government to Americanize that Territory, and to infuse into it rapidly, and at an early period as possible, as large a portion of American feeling, American tendencies, and American instincts and disposition as possible.

In several points of view, then, it is the policy of the Government to hold out inducements to American emigration within the limits of this Territory. Hence the provisions of this bill granting donations to actual settlers only. I again repeat, that the natural inducements to emigration to New Mexico are infinitely inferior to those which exist in regard to Oregon. Look at the facts. What emigration has gone to New Mexico, or what emigration is now going there, in comparison to that which has gone to Oregon? The facts speak for themselves. They speak more eloquently and forcibly than anything which I can present to this House.

The military policy of the Government also demands an early Americanization of the population of New Mexico. And in the absence of the ordinary natural inducements, which operate to encourage emigration, there is an increased necessity of making these donations more liberal than those which have been made in regard to the other Territories.

One word more in regard to the question of time during which actual settlement and cultivation is required. Four years was the time fixed in reference to the Territory of Oregon, and the provision of this bill is precisely the same in that respect.

Mr. KEITT. A few moments ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL]—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must remind the gentleman that further debate is not in order upon this amendment.

The Chair would ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] if his amendment is to strike out "three hundred and twenty acres" wherever it occurs, and to substitute "one hundred and sixty acres" in lieu thereof?

Mr. COBB. That is my amendment.

Mr. KEITT. Is debate in order now?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The question must first be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. KEITT. I desire to offer an amendment. I move to strike out "one hundred and sixty" and insert "one hundred and forty."

The member from Ohio, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must inform the gentleman from South Carolina in the outset that he must confine his remarks to showing why "one hundred and sixty" should be stricken out, and "one hundred and forty" inserted.

Mr. KEITT. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, in my intercourse here and elsewhere, I am in the habit of being courteous to every man who understands the ordinary civilities of intercourse; but when an indecent inquiry is made of me, I treat it as such, and never do it in a manner to be mistaken. The member from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] asked me a question in relation to morals. My answer is this: If they are there, I might say that—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the gentleman from South Carolina to order.

Mr. KEITT. If they are there, I might say that Free-Soil schoolmasters and clock venders had much to do with the condition of things of which the member speaks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair again calls the gentleman from South Carolina to order. The gentleman must confine himself to an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. KEITT. Well, sir, if I cannot reply to the gentleman from Ohio, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh! I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will be allowed full latitude in his remarks, and that I may be permitted to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is bound to enforce the rules.

Mr. KEITT. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was about to object to the withdrawing of that amendment. I should like to hear all the gentleman may have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the gentleman from Ohio to order. The amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina has been withdrawn, and no discussion is in order.

The question was taken; and Mr. COBB's amendment was adopted.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I desire to add a proviso at the end of the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama which has just been adopted.

Mr. COBB. I desire to inquire, at this point, whether my amendment applies to more than one clause of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not.

Mr. COBB. I suppose the fourteenth line will have to be amended to conform with the amendment the committee has just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, such alterations will be made as are necessary to make the remainder of the section conform to the amendment which has been adopted.

There was no objection; and the order was made.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I now desire to add a proviso at the end of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment will be in order, unless there be other amendments to be offered to preceding portions of the section.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I have an amendment to offer to a preceding portion of the section. I move to strike out from the word "who," in the fourth line, to the word "shall," in the twenty-fourth line, as follows:

"Removed to and was residing in said Territory prior to the 1st day of January, 1853, there shall be, and hereby is, donated one-half section, or three hundred and twenty acres of land, if single; but if married, one section, or six hundred and forty acres. And to each white male American citizen who shall"—

So that the clause of the section would read:

"That to every white male American citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such, over the age of twenty-one years, who shall remove to and settle in said Territory between the 1st day of January, 1853, and the 1st day of January, 1858, there shall in like manner be donated one-quarter section, or one hundred and sixty acres, if a single man, or, if married, one-half section, or three hundred and twenty acres, on condition of actual settlement and cultivation for not less than four years."

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is in order.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the policy of the bill, or the reasons upon which the bill is based, which are likely to press themselves for the approbation of this committee, they are that the bill is intended to promote emigration to the Territory of New Mexico. If that is the object, I am not able to discover the propriety of making donations of lands to those who had emigrated to the Territory prior to the year 1853, or prior to the present time. If the amendment be adopted, the bill will provide for giving lands to those who may hereafter emigrate to the Territory of New Mexico. If the bill be so amended, I shall be willing to vote for it. It does seem to me that there is no propriety in giving large amounts of public land to those who have heretofore emigrated to the Territory.

Mr. DISNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. With the permission of the gentleman from Ohio, I will suggest an amendment in the ninth line, so that the bill will read, if it be adopted, as follows: "Every citizen of the United States, or every person who shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the States."

Mr. DISNEY. That is right. There is no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. LANE. If the amendment be adopted, will it be in order to move to amend the bill wherever it provides for a discrimination between married and unmarried men?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Oregon that the amendment adopted on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama does away with the discrimination to which he refers. The quantity of land to be granted has been reduced from six hundred and forty to three hundred and twenty acres.

Mr. LANE. I do not want to see any discrimination made between married and unmarried men. I am glad that it has been done away with as the Chair indicates.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] to make the section, in the ninth line, correspond with the first, second, and third lines, as they have been amended.

Mr. WASHBURN. Let that be my amendment, though the Chair does not exactly state it as I introduced it at first.

Mr. DISNEY. As the Chair stated it I think it is best.

The question was then taken; and Mr. WASHBURN's amendment was adopted.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to say but a word. I have spoken of the necessity of making donations to induce emigration to this Territory. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] has already reduced the amount of the donation made to those who emigrated to the Territory prior to 1853. The pending motion is to strike out that donation altogether. It seems to be natural that those who first encountered the perils, privations, and hazards, incident to an emigration to this Territory, should receive a larger donation than those who go there subsequently. But independent of all that class of considerations, there is another. I have already spoken of the absence of inducements to emigration to this Territory. I have already spoken of the obvious policy of inducing an emigration there; and certainly, if this be so, it is important to retain those immigrants who have already gone there.

Now, if the pending amendment be agreed to, and you refuse to make donations to those who are already there, so far as it will have effect at all, it will be to destroy the equality of inducement that is held out to the coming emigrant hereafter; the effect of it will be to lose what little emigration you have already got there. That is all I desire to say.

The question was then taken on Mr. ZOLLICOFFER'S amendment, and it was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 10, noes not counted.

Mr. COBB. I desire now to test the sense of the committee in relation to the time which the settler shall occupy the land before he obtains a patent. As the bill now stands, the time is four years. I move to strike out "four" and insert "five" in lieu thereof, so as to make this bill conform to the homestead bill.

Mr. DISNEY. I would suggest to the committee that four years is the time provided for by the law in relation to Oregon; and why make a difference between the Territories? I say again, for the sixth time, that there are more inducements for emigration to Oregon than there are to New Mexico; and if you impose more stringent regulations and conditions on emigrants to New Mexico, you diminish still further the inducements to emigrate to that Territory. The whole tendency of this policy is hostile to the interests of New Mexico.

Mr. COBB. I believe the gentleman has been occupying my five minutes; but I do not want to make a speech.

Mr. BISSELL. I desire to say a few words upon this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon it.

Mr. BISSELL. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has not expired; and, with his permission, I will occupy the remainder of it.

I desire to say that a distinction is to be drawn between this case and that of the homestead bill. In the case of the homestead bill, you were making a voluntary donation to men, for no other purpose but their own benefit. But in this case, we should hold out inducements to men to emigrate to the frontier. We want them for our purposes, and, therefore, I do not think that we ought to impose such severe terms as we do upon those who receive land as a gratuity, from whom we receive no gain except the general wealth and prosperity of the country, which is promoted in consequence thereof.

The question was then taken on Mr. COBB'S amendment; and it was rejected.

The question then recurred upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS.]

Mr. GIDDINGS. It is probably known to every member of the committee, that there is a class of Indians partially civilized in this Territory living in fixed habitations, and following the peaceful occupation of agriculture. While they were under Mexican authority, they were recognized as a part of the population of Mexico. Under these circumstances, it would be unjust and cruel to give to white people the lands which these Indians have resided upon and cultivated for years. I say nothing about their being citizens, but I say that they should be entitled to the benefits of this act, as I have provided in the amendment which I have submitted, which seems to me to be most just and proper in every sense of the word. While we are sitting here as legislators we ought not to allow white men to go on there and drive off the present occupants of the soil. We ought to give to them the privilege of holding the lands which they now occupy, inasmuch as they are engaged in the peaceful and permanent occupation of agriculture. We should do everything in our power to civilize and enlighten them. I hope that the amendment which I have offered will receive the support of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as well as the unanimous concurrence of the committee.

Mr. ORR. I cannot see the necessity for adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS.] The class of Indians to whom the gentleman refers are the Pueblo Indians, who already have in their possession a large tract of land, more than they can cultivate. They hold it, at the present time, by grant from the Mexican Government, and originally from the Spanish Government. Their title to this land is good and indefeasible; but there is more of it than their uses for agricultural purposes demand. I see, therefore, no possible necessity for the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS.]

The question was then taken upon Mr. GIDDINGS'S amendment; and it was rejected.

The third section was then read.

Mr. DISNEY. I propose to amend the third section, just read, by inserting, between the words "of" and "settlement," in the first and second lines, the word "the," and striking out the word "as," in the second line, so as to make it read, "That a proof of the settlement and cultivation required by the act," &c.

The question was put; and the amendment was adopted.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth sections of the bill were then reported by the Clerk.

The sixth section was read, as follows:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That when the lands in said Territory shall be surveyed as aforesaid, a quantity of land equal to two townships shall be, and the same is hereby, reserved for the establishment of a university in said Territory, and in the State hereafter to be created out of the same, to be selected, under the direction of the Legislature, in legal subdivisions of not less than one half section, and to be disposed of as said Legislature shall direct.

Mr. HENN. I move to amend the sixth section by striking out the words "and to be disposed of as said Legislature shall direct."

In this section, Mr. Chairman, a quantity of land equal to two townships is reserved for the use of a university, and the latter portion of the section provides that the Territorial Legislature shall dispose of it. I think that that line ought to be stricken out. I am sure it was not intended to give such power to the Territorial Legislature.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa proposes to amend the sixth section, which has been passed over. If there is no objection, the Chair will entertain the motion.

Mr. DISNEY. There is no objection to that. The question was then taken; and the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk then read the remaining sections of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further amendments, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Bill No. 294, for the payment of the civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico, while under military government, was yesterday informally laid aside.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. Will it be in order to move that the bill be further informally laid aside?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. LANE. Then I make that motion.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

The next bill which came up for consideration was House bill No. 316, entitled "A bill to amend the act approved September 27, 1852, to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, &c., and also the act amendatory thereof, approved February 19, 1853."

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with, and the bill will be read, and considered by sections.

The first and second sections of the bill were then read.

The second section is as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the proviso to the fourth section of the act of twenty-seventh September, eighteen hundred and fifty, above mentioned, by which all contracts for the sale of lands claimed under that law, before the issue of the patents therefor, are declared void, shall be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. COBB. I am going to offer an amendment to this section; and in doing so, I shall run against a "sawyer," I suppose.

In the first place, I will call the attention of the committee to the original act which this section proposes to repeal.

The original act is, in part, as follows:

"Provided further, That all future contracts by any person or persons entitled to the benefits of this act, for the sale of the land to which he or they may be entitled under this act, before he or they shall receive a patent therefor, shall be void."

This section of the bill proposes to annul that proviso. We first gave them six hundred and forty acres, which they have sold in whole or in part, made speculations thereby, and now ask that their contracts may be confirmed.

I move to strike out that section entirely; and if the gentleman from Oregon can satisfy the House of the necessity of the change in the existing law, they will, of course, sustain him, and refuse to strike the section out. I think, however, that it is at least susceptible of proof, according to the construction which I put upon it, that this change will open the doors for some magnificent speculations in these lands.

If I understand it, you have by a previous law provided for donating six hundred and forty acres to every actual settler who is a married man, provided he shall live upon it and cultivate it for a certain number of years. Now, many of these settlers have disposed of their lands without complying with the condition imposed upon them, in order to secure their patent for them; and now they come forward and ask us, and it is proposed by this second section, to repeal these conditions altogether, and make these sales, which have been made in violation of law, valid. But I do not desire to detain the committee upon the subject. If the gentleman from Oregon can satisfy them that this should be done, of course they will refuse to strike out this section; but if they agree with me that it is better to insist upon fulfilling the conditions of the law, and shutting out these speculations, they will strike out the section and allow the law in this respect to remain as it is. I ask that the section may be read.

It was read as inserted above.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama, it seems to me, has made out a case to suit his own convenience.

Mr. COBB. Pretty near.

Mr. LANE. And has come to his own conclusions. He states that in Oregon men have received, under the law, donations of six hundred and forty acres of land, and have sold out portions of their claims without perfecting their titles.

Mr. COBB. I took it for granted that it was so.

Mr. LANE. And now ask Congress to confirm their claims. Now, I will say to this committee that there is no single case in the Territory, where a man claiming land, under the donation law, has sold out his claim, or any portion of it, unless it may be town sites; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office has recently decided that all town sites are included under the provisions of the law of 1844, and do not come under the provisions of the donation law. But, aside from these town sites, I will undertake to say that there has not been a single claim, taken under the donation law, sold.

Mr. COBB. Then where is the necessity of making the change?

Mr. LANE. I will tell the gentleman what is the necessity: The act of Congress donating lands to actual settlers provides that all American citizens residing in Oregon, and such foreigners as should declare their intentions to become citizens, who had taken a claim, occupied and cultivated it for four consecutive years, should, if a married man, be entitled to six hundred and forty acres of land; if a single man, to three hundred and twenty acres; and such others as should take a claim previous to December, 1851, should be entitled to the same quantity upon the same terms, of occupation and cultivation for four years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, many persons were entitled to their patents as soon as the time this law passed, by virtue of four years' occupation and cultivation; and many others, who had taken claims one, two, and three years previous to the passage of the law, have complied with its requirements, and are entitled to their patents. But no patents have issued; consequently, they have not enjoyed the right to sell their claims, or any portion thereof. The repeal of this proviso would enable them to sell—a right they ought to have.

Now, sir, on account of the difficulty of obtaining accurate surveys, and from other causes, there are many, who have been in possession and occupancy of their claims ever since, and long before, the passage of this law, who have not yet received their patents.

Mr. COBB. Then they are entitled to their patents, and can recover them.

Mr. LANE. No, sir, they cannot. But I was proceeding to say, that these patents have not been issued, and these people have not come into legal possession of their lands; and would you have them compelled to wait for twenty years before they shall have the right to dispose of any portion of their claims?

Sir, the object of these donations was to induce people to settle upon these lands, to increase the population, and develop the resources of the Territory. Under the provisions of this law the country has been taken up in six hundred and forty acre claims; the law has been complied with, and on account of this odious provision, the settlers are deprived of the privilege of selling, greatly to the detriment of the good citizens, and inconvenience of schools, owing to the consequent sparseness of the settlements, which sparseness necessarily destroys facilities for sending their children to school. As it is, the schooling of children in Oregon is very expensive.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I want to know whether the gentleman's complaint is that we have granted too much land? Cannot we diminish the amount?

Mr. LANE. Too much land has been granted; but no power can now change the grant. We desire that the privilege shall be extended to sell a portion of it. Strike out that section of the bill, and you destroy the bill itself. The people of Oregon ask it, and they, it will be admitted on all hands, are an intelligent people.

Mr. COBB. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LANE. They know their interest.

Mr. COBB. Indeed they do very well. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANE. Repeat the proviso, and let them sell a portion of their claim. They have perfected their rights. They have lived there for the time required by the law. Why shall they not have the right to sell a portion of their claims?

Mr. COBB. The answer to a single question will satisfy me. Will not the provision contended for, apply to an individual who lived there only two years?

Mr. LANE. It will apply to all.

Mr. COBB. I have no objection to an amendment of the section so that the application shall be alone to those who have lived there until the patent issues. But, as at present, it will apply to those who have lived there one year and sold their land; it will apply to those who have been there only six months, three months, even for one day.

Mr. LANE. Any man who takes a claim under the donation law of Oregon is debarred from taking another. If he cannot occupy it, in God's name let somebody else. There is no sensible man who has lived in Oregon for twelve months, who will live in any other part of the Republic. [Laughter.] We particularly desire this section, not for the purpose of speculation. It grants three hundred and twenty acres of land to every married man—one half to himself, and the other half to his wife. He cannot, thank God, under this provision, sell his wife's half of his claim. If he wants to sell, he can sell his own one hundred and sixty acres to any individual, and he will, perhaps, sell his land to an individual who will cultivate it better than he would. The provision was a wise one; and but for the amendments succeeding in the New Mexican bill, I should have moved to amend that bill so as to make it conform to our law, viz: to grant half of the claim to the wife. In that way I expect to have a home. My wife is the better half. [Laughter.] She will not sell her claim, and I would be likely to give mine to any good man who will come and be my neighbor. Such a man will always be welcome to it. She would be, probably, more tenacious of hers.

There is nothing in this section which is wrong. It is right; and I hope that the committee will not allow the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] to regulate our interests in Oregon. I have great respect for him; and it is painful for me to oppose anything he wishes. When his views conflict with our interests, I must be excused from acting with him.

Mr. COBB. It is exceedingly painful for me to oppose anything the gentleman asks. I voted for the extra mileage.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the section?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The question now pending is the motion to strike out the second section.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to insert the words "for town sites," after the word land, in the fourth line, so that the section will read as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the proviso to the fourth section of the act of 27th September, 1850, above mentioned, by which all contracts for the sale of lands for town sites, claimed under that law, before the issue of the patents therefor, are declared void, shall be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. LANE made a few remarks, but in so low a tone of voice as to be wholly inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. LETCHER. Suppose they took a portion of it before there was a town site there, and were in possession of it?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would suggest to my colleague, that it is possible that every township, or every mile square of land, would be a town site.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, the whole difficulty in this case seems to grow out of the excessive liberality of Congress in the first instance. Why, they gave so much land to the settlers in Oregon that they are scattered miles apart; they cannot, therefore, have the benefit of schools and all the other conveniences that more compact settlements enjoy. Under these circumstances, after all this liberality has been extended to them, it is proposed to allow them, not to conform to the language of the law as it originally stood, and under which they received those grants, but to sell it at speculative prices which they may put upon the land. Now, I think as they made a bargain with the Government, as they took the land upon certain stipulations and conditions, they ought to be required to fulfill the terms of the bond. If they have come here and asked too much, more than it is convenient for them to use, instead of being authorized to sell it, I think it would be more liberal and just for them to give it back to the Government. That is my idea about it. If they have got more land than they can use; if the Government has been prodigal in giving it away to them, and they cannot now use what they have got and are required to dispose of it, let them return it to the hands of the generous donor rather than put it in the market, and pocket the money derived from the sale.

And not only that, sir, but there may be a system of underselling resorted to by these individuals for the purpose of forcing settlement. The land has cost them nothing; and they can, therefore, well afford to sell it for fifty, or seventy-five cents, or for a dollar an acre; and, by this competition with the Government, they may stop the sales of the public lands altogether. By repealing this proviso, you would enable them to do this, and to reap the profits of the sale, after the Government has generously given them more than they ought to have had.

Mr. BISSELL. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, and I am in favor of the second section of the bill, as it stands, and, I think, not without good reason. I believe this Oregon land law was passed in 1844, was it not?

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. No, sir; the law was passed in 1850.

Mr. BISSELL. The object was to induce emigrants to go to Oregon. It was thought that a less inducement than six hundred and forty acres would not be likely to tempt men to go out there with their families. But, sir, the simple promise that, on getting out there, they should be entitled to six hundred and forty acres of land did induce a great many men, and a great many families, to go out to Oregon. Well, they got there. That was all you wanted. You wanted that remote Territory to be settled up, as fast as it could be done with propriety and convenience to the Government and to the citizens. You have secured that object, so far as it has gone. Those emigrants who went out under the inducement thus held up to them are not going to return. They say, "We have got out here, and here we are, ready to defend the Territory, and to perform all our duties as citizens. But some of us have received more land, under the law under which we settled here, than we can conveniently or profitably make use of. We ask permission, therefore, to sell that surplus land to our old neighbors and friends who have come out, and who would prefer to pay us something for it rather than go into some remote settlement and take your land for nothing."

Now, I should like to know what the Government will lose by complying with that request. I should like to know whether there is any mode by which the Government would be a loser in complying with this request. You grant six hundred and forty acres of land, but with a stipulation that the man shall occupy it for a certain length of time. What is the reason for making this restriction? Who gains anything by it? The settler does not, of course. He is presumed to know his own business best. The Territory will not gain anything in any conceivable way, for it is no advantage to the Territory of Oregon any more than to the General Government, for a man with no hand but his own to work his land, to be compelled to keep the six hundred and forty acres, merely because the law of 1850 declares that the settler must occupy the land himself for four years, without the privilege of selling or mortgaging any portion of it to any one else.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] says, if these settlers have more land than they want, let them give it back to the General Government. Not at all. They have no more land than they want. But they say that they have more than they can cultivate with profit, because their grown up sons, perhaps, have left them, and they are compelled to hire hands to work their lands. If they were permitted to sell a part of their lands, settlements would in consequence extend rapidly, schools would multiply, and they would be enabled to devote their surplus means to improving their condition in every respect. Thus all parties would be greatly benefited. But because it was nominated in the bond that they should not be permitted to sell any portion of their lands, it is argued, therefore, that we should hold them to it, although benefit inures to nobody by it.

You say they agreed to occupy the lands for a certain length of time. Virtually, I grant you they did. You desired to have your remote Territory filled up with hardy settlers. You passed a law providing that those who should go to that remote Territory, and remain upon the land four years, should be entitled to six hundred and forty acres. Those emigrants have gone there with their families and settled, but tell you that they can make no profitable use of their lands. They have no more land than they want, but they desire to have the privilege of disposing of a portion of it to improve the other portion, and to enable them to build mills, school houses, and churches, and in other respects to improve their condition. They desire to possess the means of educating their children.

Mr. LETCHER. If they can sell their lands for the purpose of buying horses, wagons, furniture, and various other things, I would ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] if he will maintain that Congress can make a direct appropriation to supply them with these things?

Mr. BISSELL. Certainly not; but the Government has dispossessed itself of the lands, and cannot get them back again. I should like to know by what process the gentleman would have the Government reclaim the lands again. The Government, to be sure, can refuse to sanction the policy of their selling any portion of this land. What then? The land does not return to the Government, but the ownership remains still in the hands of those to whom the lands were originally granted.

Mr. LETCHER. Suppose these persons sell out and return to the United States.

Mr. BISSELL. Well, sir, they can do it, I grant; but it is so improbable a thing, and the instances of it are so rare, that the matter does not deserve to be taken into account, I hold, in legislating on this great subject. I cannot believe that men will be found to go out to Oregon with their families for the sake of six hundred and forty acres of land, and then on their being permitted to sell out—after having lived there two or three years—to turn right about, dispose of their land at the price which land is worth there, and come back again. But even though there might be an instance of the kind, still the purchaser would occupy the place of the original owner.

Mr. LANE. In addition to the excellent remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] I will say to my friend from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] that it is the best thing for the Government and Treasury of the United States—if they want to make money out of the land lying in Oregon—to allow the claimant to sell a portion of his claim. At this time, Mr. Chairman, a married man is entitled to three hundred and twenty acres of land. All who have emigrated to the Territory since 1851 are entitled to this privilege. If the claimant has taken a claim, and sells the half of it to an emigrant, he thereby prevents that man from going and taking three hundred and twenty acres for himself. If the claimant divides with the emigrant who comes in, the emigrant remains there, and the Government is saved from losing three hundred and twenty acres of land, worth perhaps, if brought into market, from five to ten dollars an acre. Now, if this bill prohibits selling a portion of these claims, the emigrant goes and takes a claim for himself, and the Government loses that quantity of land by it. This would not, as has been stated, be encouraging speculation. Do gentlemen imagine that, because land is granted by the Government, it shall always remain in the hands of the person to whom it is granted? Certainly no such thing can be claimed. And if you do not let the claimant sell forty, or fifty, or a hundred acres of his land, the emigrant will go and take his three hundred and twenty acres, and the Government will have lost that much by this unwise restriction.

And again, let me say to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] that no man will return from Oregon Territory who has taken a claim in this way. He will not find one out of ten thousand to do it. In the first place it breaks up a man to get there—I do not care much what he may have been worth. If he were worth five or ten thousand dollars at the time he starts from Missouri, after purchasing his teams and wagons, and everything necessary to make his family comfortable, he has, by the time he arrives at Oregon Territory, expended the whole of it. Perhaps he has not a dollar left. And thus he has paid more than ten dollars an acre for the land you give him. And because your law has given him more than he wants, or more than is necessary for his agricultural purposes, do you say that he shall not sell a part of it to the emigrant who follows him, and that the latter shall have to go and take twice as much land as he wants, or as he otherwise would? Is there any common sense in that proposition? Is there any good policy in it? Is there anything in it that is worth the consideration of my excellent friend from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] I know his good sense. I like his principles. I appreciate his opinions; for, in most instances, they are right; but I think he has taken a wrong view of this matter.

Let me remind the gentleman again that the man who has taken three hundred and twenty acres of land will reconcile his neighbor who comes to it to settle on the half of that claim. He will do it that he may make sale of this moiety of his land, and by so doing he will save to the Government three hundred and twenty acres of land.

Now, it seems to me that it would be in every respect wise and politic to allow the settler so to dispose of his land. And I appeal to my friend from Virginia to let that principle in the bill stand unimpaired, and so allow the Government to hold as much unoccupied land, when it comes into the market, as possible.

If you allow the emigrants who go there to settle upon smaller portions of the territory—as you can do by removing this restriction, and permitting them to purchase lands of those who have gone before them and availed themselves of the benefits of the act donating the land—the Territory will become more densely settled. But if you refuse them this, and compel them to take up claims of three hundred and twenty acres, the population will be scattered all over the country. Thus, with the same population merely, the Government of the United States will lose a large amount of money, as has been the effect already.

I do not think it necessary that I should say anything more upon this subject. I think my friend from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] must be satisfied that it would be wrong to strike out this second section, and thereby leave the original restriction upon the settlers upon these lands in full force.

I wish to say one word further to my friend from Virginia in reference to these town sites, and then I will yield the floor.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office decided that all town sites in the Territory of Oregon are subject to the provisions of the law of 1844; that they were not the subject of donation under the act of Congress, and that a claim can only be taken up, under the provisions of the law, for agricultural purposes, and not for purposes of trade and speculation in them, as town sites. I was not satisfied with that decision, for we had many town and village sites all over the Territory of Oregon, and I took an appeal from the decision to the Secretary of the Interior, and he has confirmed it. Why now pass any law to conflict with that decision? I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his amendment.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to say a word in reference to this matter of town sites by way of explanation, suggested by the question which was put by the gentleman from Virginia a few moments ago. It seems to be supposed, by gentlemen who have not made an examination of this matter, that the term "town sites" applies to those particular tracts of land upon which towns may be built—that is which are favorable for that purpose. "Town sites" means lands upon which towns are actually standing.

Mr. LETCHER. That is what I understand by it.

Mr. DISNEY. So I presumed; but I referred to another gentleman from Virginia, who, with his friends, suppose that it means tracts favorable for the location of towns. This is not so. By the act of 1844, it is provided that when towns, as such, are located in whole or in part upon the public lands, the corporate authorities of such towns have a right to enter the lands, by the payment of $1 50 per acre, in trust for the respective occupants of it. In other words, the practical effect and operation of the law of 1844, is to allow pre-emption right to particular owners of town sites where they are located upon the public lands—that is, to each respective owner. Hence the provisions of this bill, and the provisions of the act of 1850. And the decision, which has been referred to by the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] recently made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, is the law which applies to the case.

We have properly provided that the donation privilege provided for in the act of 1850 shall not extend to those town sites. By that decision a claim is defeated which might be set up by an individual, and which might embrace a whole village. All claims of that sort are defeated, and each individual occupying such lands has a pre-emptive right to the particular land which he may hold. Now, sir, with regard to the provisions of this section, the whole subject lies in a nut-shell. The whole object of the Government in making these provisions originally was to induce emigration to the Territory of Oregon, for the promotion of which emigration six hundred and forty acres of land were to be granted to him upon his arrival there. Relying upon the promise of the Government, the emigrant went there, settled upon the lands, cultivated them for the time required, and performed the conditions prescribed by the Government as necessary to the issuance of a patent giving him full possession.

Now, sir, in the case of this individual, the object of the Government has been accomplished. The purpose of the Government was to induce the individual to increase the population of the Territory of Oregon to the extent of one person. The condition imposed was for the purpose of more effectually accomplishing that object; and now that he has settled there, and cultivated the land for the time specified in the grant, as these settlers have in perhaps a majority of cases, I say the purpose of the Government is accomplished; but owing to the incompleteness of the surveys, and other circumstances, the patent has not issued, and the occupant has not legal title to the lands.

Mr. Chairman, under these circumstances, these settlers come here and ask that if they cannot have their patents issued to them, by which they might come into full possession of the land that you will at least give them the right to sell or dispose of their claim to it, and not deprive them of the rights which they would otherwise enjoy under the general laws of the country. This restriction denies to them the power of exercising that right, and they ask that you will remove it. That is all this section proposes to accomplish. There are, without doubt, other cases where the parties have not fulfilled the conditions of the donation; where they have not cultivated the land for four years; but in these cases, as in the others, I maintain that the purpose of the Government has been accomplished. They have increased the population of the Territory by going there and becoming citizens. The Government, by promising them six hundred and forty acres of land, has induced them to emigrate there; and so long as they remain, the Government loses nothing by removing the restriction. Suppose the party does sell a portion of his grant, and it inures to his advantage, what does the Government lose by it? A question which was properly and forcibly put by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] Does the grant suffer any injury by it? Does any one suffer by it? Will it not contribute to settle the country more rapidly and more densely? Has not the Government received a full compensation for the land by the settler becoming a citizen of the Territory?

But suppose the extraordinary case put by the gentleman from Alabama should occur, and the settler should sell out his entire claim for the purpose of speculation. If he does not leave the Territory, the Government loses nothing; and if the individual is benefited by the operation, what injury is it to the Government? Why, then, should this barrier be interposed to prevent the settler from coming into the possession of his land? I can see none. No gentleman has, and I do not believe any one can, point out any advantage that the Government will derive from continuing this restriction.

It may be said, as it has been said, that the parties interested will reap advantage from its removal; but it seems to me this is a strange argument against it, so long as no other party suffers from it. Suppose a man does dispose of his claim to his friends and neighbors! If no objection more reasonable in its character can be brought to show why this restriction should be removed, I trust the section of the bill will not be stricken out. It may be an objection, if it can be shown that the Government will be injured by it; but in this case it cannot be shown that any injury inures to the Government, while advantage inures to the parties who are in possession.

I said, when I got up, that this affair lies in a nut-shell, and so it does. The Government agreed to give six hundred and forty acres to each man who increased the population of Oregon by his presence. The parties who have gone there have complied with the conditions. The Government has attained its object. The good which it desired to accomplish has been secured; and whatever disposition the people of Oregon may make of their possessions, the good desired by the Government remains. Certainly, it can be of no sort of interest to the Government whether the party who originally located the land should retain it, or a party purchasing from him should become the occupant.

But, said the gentleman from Alabama, this land will fall into the hands of speculators. What injury results if it does? Why, by the provisions of the law, the original donee, if he sell or dispose of his land, is not competent to take another donation. He cannot get another. He has had a contract with the Government. He has executed it. He has received his compensation, and rendered the service which the Government desired. There is an end of the affair; and even if he disposes of the land to speculators who shall not occupy it—putting the most extreme possible case—still the party remains there, and he is debarred the right of having any other land except by sale and purchase. The gentleman wished to ask me a question. What is it?

Mr. COBB. What was the object of the Government when it made the grant, in requiring that the land should be settled on and cultivated for four years? When the gentleman answers that question, I will ask him others.

Mr. DISNEY. Those words were merely a repetition of the idea conveyed by the words that the grant was for the general improvement. What is the other question the gentleman desires to ask me?

Mr. COBB. I may be so fortunate as to get the floor presently, and then I shall embody the questions I have to propound in my five-minute speech.

Mr. DISNEY. I now yield the floor, then.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Chairman, I am from the coast which has been referred to in this debate. I was an inhabitant on it long before the land law was passed. I have seen, and well know the operations of that law. And here let me say, in the beginning, that I am opposed to all restrictions against the sale of land in that Territory. Many persons were on that coast previous to the passage of the land law; and when it was passed they felt that they had been wronged by this unwholesome restriction. Its operations can of course be better seen in the Territory than here. Before any of us had gone there, a bill had been introduced into the Senate of the United States by the lamented Dr. Linn, of Missouri. It passed that branch of Congress. Another bill was introduced here, and defeated in the other House. So the measure was alternately introduced and lost; and during this time persons emigrated to that coast in expectation of receiving six hundred and forty acres of the public land each. They expected that amount in consideration of settling on it, with their families, after having endured all the perils and hardships of an overland route across a barren wilderness. I was among them. I was there before the land law passed; and when the law was passed, it gave us this amount of land with the unwholesome restriction that the land should be tied up, and should not be sold until we obtained a patent for it. The lands were not then surveyed; the boundary question was not even settled, when the earliest of us got out there. Well, when this land was given to us, as it was said, to pay us for going over there, it was so restricted and tied down that we could not sell or mortgage it, or raise funds upon our possessions. It has remained so tied down ever since. No man can sell his land, or incumber it any way. He is there, and has been there with this possession, the gift of the Government, so tied up, that he is without the power of using it. He may raise turnips and potatoes from it, but the Government has required him to make the improvements upon it with his own hands. I have fulfilled the condition strictly and legally, and not constructively. I have lived for four years on a portion of six hundred and forty acres of land, and improved it by these hands. I have thus fulfilled the condition of the grant. The Government of the United States required the labor to be performed by my own hands, whereas, with my profession, if I could have put another person on the land, he could have performed twice the labor that I could. But that was the condition emanating from the wisdom of Congress, and it has borne heavily on me, and upon every other person on that coast. If the land was a gift to them for going there and improving the country, and bringing it into notice, for aiding to settle the boundary, and for raising the American flag there, let them have it without trammels and conditions imposed upon them by the Government.

I may say further, that before the land law passed, a provisional government was established on that coast, American in its character. And the inhabitants who assisted in the organization of that provisional government, and who resided under it, and helped to maintain it until the territorial government was formed, were paid by the Government of the United States in so much wild land, if they would cultivate it with their own hands, without being able to sell any of it, or to incumber it, until they got a patent for it. And who can tell when they will obtain those titles—when the Government of the United States will enable them to incumber their land, to raise funds on it to educate their children, and to improve it.

Then, sir, there are town lands where it is necessary that ships shall load and unload, and warehouse their cargoes. The farmers, too, must have some place in which to store the produce of their land; that there shall exchanges take place, and that, too, on shore, and not on ship-board.

The man who, in good faith, has built a warehouse on his lot, and engaged in that business, is prevented by the unwholesome provisions of that law from obtaining a title to his lot.

Now, I say, as the Representative of Washington Territory, that I desire that the land which the Government of the United States has seen fit to bestow upon those who have crossed the plains and taken their families into that country, shall be really given to them, that they shall receive their titles, and be allowed to mortgage the land and raise money upon it. I desire that the young man may be able to sell half his land and raise money to come to the States and obtain a wife, and then return there and become attached to the soil by cultivating it and being a citizen and the head of a family. There are more than five hundred young men in the Territory of Washington, who, if they had the power, would mortgage the land or sell a portion of it, and come here to the country where women are to be had, and take them to that country to settle on those lands. I know that to be the case. But at present their hands are tied and they are crippled. Every man throughout the Territory is crippled. I hope that you will not continue this restriction upon the interests of that Territory. The coal fields, the lumbering interests, the fishing interests, and a thousand other interests there, ought to be protected and fully developed; and you should not require or expect a man to remain upon his land four years, keeping a wretched bachelor's hall, without a place to call his home.

Mr. COBB. Before the gentleman from Washington concludes, I desire to offer the following proviso by way of a compromise:

Provided, The recipients of said act shall have lived four years upon said lands thereby granted.

Mr. LANCASTER. I object to the gentleman's proviso, and I am honest and candid in what I say.

Mr. COBB. Then I cannot compromise.

Mr. LANCASTER. I wish to say in conclusion, as I stated before, that I believe Delegates from Territories ought not to occupy the floor with speeches upon matters in which their constituents are not directly interested. The reason why the restrictive clause, to which I have already referred, was made, was this: that Mr. Thurston, a Delegate from the Territory of Oregon upon this floor, was fearful that the officers of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the servants of the Puget's Sound agricultural company might make claims of large tracts of the country, and hold them in trust for the benefit of such companies. He was fearful also, that Dr. John McLaughlin, of Oregon City, would reap some benefit for the labor and money he bestowed in promoting the interests of American citizens; for in the time of their greatest need, he gave them liberally seeds, provisions, teams, and clothing, and did everything in his power, which his charitable heart could suggest, to promote their comfort and welfare. But it was feared by Mr. Thurston that he would receive some benefit from holding these lands, and this was one of the reasons why this restriction was placed in the act. No man can be hired to go into that country—especially a single man—and live four years upon his land, keep bachelor's hall, and carry out the spirit of the law, unless he is an honest man, intending to make that place his home. The law, as it now stands, requires four years of consecutive residence upon the land; but how would my friend from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] like to live in the wilderness, in a state of solitude, with a prospect of keeping bachelor's hall, having even to wash his shirt, without the power to part with or dispose of his lands. It is too hard to require that our young men shall be subjected to these conditions. It ought not to be insisted that they should live in such a state of wretchedness any longer. I hope that these onerous and unnecessary trammels will be removed; and that I may have the pleasure of sending this gratifying information to the people there. Should it be placed in my power to send them the information, such rejoicing will take place there as was never before witnessed there or anywhere else. But I will detain the committee no longer.

Mr. WALSH. I have heard with a great deal of attention the reply of my friend from Washington, [Mr. LANCASTER,] in regard to all the privations which he and his associates have endured in that Territory. I can well appreciate how great a calamity it may be for a number of full-blooded young men to be washing their own shirts, and going without wives and the society of ladies. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I believe there is another Territory where there is an abundance of ladies, and where they are not compelled to come into the Atlantic States to obtain wives. [Laughter.] There must be injustice done to the women, if there are a superabundance of them, as every woman, I believe, is entitled to one husband.

But, sir, in relation to the second provision. We are told that the Government gives these six hundred and forty acres as an inducement to emigrants to go there and settle the lands. The Government has fulfilled its part of the contract, and if these gentlemen who have reclaimed the land which they have received, in God's name, if they find that they have too much to hold profitably, let them give away the surplus to the men who come after them, and who are there, ready and willing to endure the same privations that they have encountered. I repeat, sir, the Government has fulfilled its part of the contract; and if six hundred and forty acres is entirely too much land for one man to cultivate, let him, instead of driving his fellow-man, who comes after him, to an unknown wilderness, exhibit his gratitude for the gift which he originally received from the Government, by dividing with those who come after him. There is no law to prevent him giving away his land in this way, and I see no reason to prohibit him from doing so.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would say, for the information of the committee, that the persons making application for a patent of land shall swear that they hold their lands in their own right, and not for others, and that they have not disposed of, or put away any part or parcel of it.

Mr. WALSH. Yes, that they have not parted with it for a consideration; but I suppose a man has a right to give away a portion of his land.

Mr. LETCHER took the floor.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. If the gentleman from Virginia will allow me, I will move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. LETCHER. No; I want to say a word or two first.

Mr. LANE. If my proposition suits the gentleman from Virginia, I will make the motion—but not otherwise—that the committee rise, with a view of closing the debate on this bill.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. LETCHER. The proposition will not suit. I desire to say a word or two first.

Mr. LANE. Well; will five-minute speeches do?

Mr. LETCHER. Not unless a man could have an opportunity to weld three or four together.

Mr. LANE. Well, let us hear the gentleman.

Mr. LETCHER. Mr. Chairman, things are now tending very rapidly to the point to which I supposed, some time ago, they would ultimately get. I expected, before I had finished my term in Congress, to find men, who, if not making a direct proposition to the House, would at least present the idea as fair and proper, that Congress should not only give to settlers farms out of the public domain, but should supply them also with the means of working these farms and making them valuable.

But the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. LANCASTER] has gone even beyond my expectation, and has reached a point which I never expected to hear broached. He now insists upon it, that it is the duty of Congress to so legislate as that wives can be furnished to them in addition to the grants of lands. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I take it that every man, in any part of the country, who wants a wife, and who is worthy of a wife, will get one. [Renewed laughter.] And I think that the Government need not interfere in respect to this little domestic matter, which should very properly be left to the parties themselves.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You are for non-intervention.

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, sir. I am for non-intervention in all matters of that sort. I want neither the Government nor individuals to interfere in a matter of that kind.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand you.

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, sir, neither North nor South should interfere. It seems to me that the Government has been liberal to those persons who have gone to Oregon, as well as to those who have gone to all the other Territories which have been organized. It has given them an immense quantity of land; and so large and valuable has been the gift, that even now, upon this floor, we hear it said, and complained of, that they have more than they know what to do with. The Government established the terms and conditions upon which the land was granted to them, and that, too, very shortly after the Territory was organized. What are those terms and conditions, and to whom were the grants to be made? Here is a part of the fourth, and the entire fifth section of the act of 1850:

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That there shall be, and hereby is, granted to every white settler or occupant of the public lands, American half breed Indians included, above the age of eighteen years, being a citizen of the United States, or having made a declaration according to law, of his intention to become a citizen, or who shall make such declaration on or before the 1st day of December, 1851, now residing in said Territory, or who shall become a resident thereof on or before the 1st day of December, 1850, and who shall have resided upon and cultivated the same for four consecutive years, and shall otherwise conform to the provisions of this act, the quantity of one half section, or three hundred and twenty acres of land, if a single man, and if a married man, or if he shall become married within one year from the 1st day of December, 1850, the quantity of one section, or six hundred and forty acres, one half to himself and the other half to his wife, to be held by her in her own right; and the surveyor general shall designate the part inuring to the husband and that to the wife, and enter the same on the records of his office; and in all cases where such married persons have complied with the provisions of this act, so as to entitle them to the grant as above provided, whether under the late provisional government of Oregon, or since, and either shall have died before patent issues, the survivor and children or heirs of the deceased shall be entitled to the share or interest of the deceased in equal proportions, except where the deceased shall otherwise dispose of it by testament duly and properly executed according to the laws of Oregon.

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That to all white male citizens of the United States, or persons who shall have made a declaration of intention to become such, above the age of twenty-one years, emigrating to and settling in said Territory between the 1st day of December, 1850, and the 1st day of December, 1853; and to all white male American citizens, not hereinbefore provided for, becoming one and twenty years of age, in said Territory, and settling there between the times last aforesaid, who shall in other respects comply with the foregoing section and the provisions of this law, there shall be, and hereby is, granted the quantity of one quarter section, or one hundred and sixty acres of land, if a single man; or if married, or if he shall become married within one year from the time of arriving in said Territory, or within one year after becoming twenty-one years of age as aforesaid, then the quantity of one half section, or three hundred and twenty acres, one half to the husband and the other half to the wife, in her own right, to be designated by the surveyor general as aforesaid: Provided always, That no person shall ever receive a patent for more than one donation of land in said Territory in his or her own right: Provided, That no mineral lands shall be located or granted under the provisions of this act."

Now, sir, it seems to me that the provisions made by the Government for granting lands to those who are within the limits of the Territory of Oregon are exceedingly liberal and generous. It not only gives land to every American citizen who is there, but to every half-breed Indian; and not only to those who are there, but to those who shall go there before a certain day, which is designated by the act—three hundred and twenty acres of land, if a single man, and if married, six hundred and forty acres.

This provision was not confined to those who were there at the time of the passage of the act. It went beyond that, and applied to those who came within twelve months afterwards. And it gave the same indulgence not only to married men, but to those who might hereafter marry within twelve months after a certain date therein specified.

Now, sir, there are some provisions attached to this law. They are as follows:

"Provided, That no alien shall be entitled to a patent to land, granted by this act, until he shall produce to the surveyor general of Oregon record evidence that his naturalization as a citizen of the United States has been completed; but if any alien, having made his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, before the passage of this act, shall die before his naturalization shall be completed, the possessory right acquired by him under the provisions of this act shall descend to his heirs at law, or pass to his devisees, to whom, as the case may be, the patent shall issue: Provided further, That in all cases provided for in this section, the donation shall embrace the land actually occupied and cultivated by the settler thereon: Provided further, That all future contracts by any person or persons entitled to the benefit of this act, for the sale of the land to which he or they may be entitled under this act before he or they have received a patent therefor, shall be void."

Now this last proviso is to be stricken out, and the result will be, that if the occupant has not been upon the land for three months, he is to be relieved from the restriction which requires him to settle and cultivate the same, and he is to be allowed to go into market and make a sale of his land.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] says, what does the Government suffer by this? What is lost to the United States? They have already given the land, and by striking out this proviso, you authorize them to sell a portion of it, in order that they may acquire the means of carrying on their farming operations upon the rest of it, as the gentleman says.

Well now, sir, it strikes me that, under this state of things, this may occur, that the Government of the United States may, at least, give lands to others which will go into the hands of those who have already received them. For example: suppose one man has three hundred and twenty acres of land there now, and if a new comer arrives there, under the provisions of this section he can sell to him one half of his claim, and the new comer himself can enter a claim for three hundred and twenty acres more, and in his turn may sell one half of his claim to the first, or they may agree to make an exchange of portions of the land which each holds.

Mr. LANE. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to say that, as we have many bills relating to territorial business yet to dispose of, and as this provision is likely to consume the time of the committee, to avoid detaining the committee any longer upon the matter, I am willing, so far as Oregon is concerned, that the privilege of selling portions of claims shall be restricted, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARKER] proposes, to persons who have perfected their right to the lands; that is, to those who have lived upon their claims for four years. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire more than that?

Mr. LETCHER. If they have complied with the conditions of the law, they have the right to dispose of their lands as they please, and there is no need for us to adopt such a provision.

Mr. COBB. But they cannot get their patents.

Mr. LETCHER. If they have lived upon their lands four years, they have a right to a patent for it, and they can enforce their right.

Mr. LANE. No, sir; they cannot enforce their right. But, if the gentleman will allow me, what I desire now is, to indicate my willingness, in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, to confine the privilege of selling portions of claims to those who have perfected their titles by living upon the land four years.

Mr. PARKER. That is the amendment I proposed to offer.

Mr. LANE. Now I ask the gentleman if he will yield me the floor for five minutes?

Mr. LETCHER. I will for that length of time.

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the permission of the gentleman from Virginia to say a word at this point? The gentleman has put a hypothetical case, in which he thinks the Government might possibly get a portion of the claim of another person. If I mistake not, he puts it thus: Suppose an individual who had, under the act of 1850, entered and taken possession of three hundred and twenty acres of land, should, under the provisions of this section, avail himself of the opportunity to sell one half of his claim to a new comer, who, in his turn, should locate another three hundred and twenty acres, and should dispose of half of his tract to the first, what would be the consequence? Each one would have three hundred and twenty acres still, and what would be the difference? By the existing laws each resident is entitled to three hundred and twenty acres, and, of course, each new comer is entitled to three hundred and twenty acres more; and whether they take it by collusion, or without collusion, makes no practical difference. The operation of the law is precisely the same, and nothing is either gained or lost, either by the individuals themselves, or by the Government.

But, sir, suppose you take the case which has been put by the gentleman, and in reference to which the gentleman from Oregon seems disposed to yield the point, so far as this section of the bill is concerned. Suppose a party has been in possession of his claim only three months and feels disposed to sell out. (I wish the gentleman to remember the fact that the condition on which the right was acquired under the act of 1850 was that of four years' occupancy.) And if an individual occupies the land for three months, and the party who purchases from him does not continue the occupancy, the condition precedent on which the grant was made is not carried out, and no right accrues to either party. Hence there is nothing in the case that the party who occupies might sell out. There must be a continued occupancy either of the party originally making the location, or of his assignees, or the condition precedent fails, and neither party is entitled under the act of 1850. Such is the law; and the gentleman from Oregon is yielding to that in which there is no point.

Mr. LANE. I am willing that the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia shall be embodied in the bill. Let the proviso be repealed, so far as claims of the description indicated are concerned. Now, I believe that the gentleman has no other objection to the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, I have something else.

Mr. LANE. I want about five minutes' time.

Mr. LETCHER. Wait a moment, and you shall have it; my remarks will not be long.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] has one of the happiest faculties of any gentleman within the limits of my acquaintance. I have never yet seen him opposed to anybody that he was not perfectly satisfied that he was in the right, and that nobody else was, or could be, right. [Laughter.] I have observed his course on various occasions, not only in the discussion of land questions, but in other matters in this House, and I have yet to see the very first man who ever differed from him in opinion, no matter how wide or how slight the difference, that he did not come to the conclusion, and with a great deal of self-complacency, that he was right, and that it was utterly impossible it could be otherwise.

Now, the gentleman says that my objection to this section has no sort of point to it. What is the objection? I object to the surrender of the whole of the public lands of the country in these Territories. The gentleman admits that these parties may go in there, and that they may, after taking up these lands, divide them to suit their own convenience. With this authority, it will be hard to tell how much land will be occupied by these parties. Under the doctrine of the veto which went into the Senate to-day, I think that we may possibly hope, ere long, to arrest some of this squandering of the public lands. The President says that they ought not to be given up unless there is a full equivalent in value given for them; that the Government ought not to lose the price of them; and under this principle I hope that we may be able to check this principle of giving away. And I hope that it will check it for another reason. Look at the state of things now in this country in the organization of Territories. Here are five Territories organized in the North at this time, one organized in 1848, one which is now the subject of consideration; and, in the space of six years, it has grown so rapidly that at this very time there is a bill on the table to organize it as a State. Well, here are other of these Territories growing up under this spirit of liberality on the part of the Federal Government, which gives away lands to settlers, and withdraws them from the old States. We are building up northern power to create a disparity far greater than at present exists between the North and the South.

I have no objection to the organization of these Territories when they are needed, but I have an objection to using the power of this Government for the purpose of stimulating a hot-house system, that shall encourage these Territories, and bring them upon us of the South as States when we are weak enough already in this Government. Under the old policy, our custom was to admit into this Union a free State and a slave State at the same time, and that policy was adhered to for a long series of years, until squatter sovereignty and military authority controlled California, and brought her into the Union as a free State, thus destroying the equality.

If men choose to go into these Territories voluntarily and settle there for the purpose of bettering their fortunes, let them go. But do not let this Government undertake to destroy us of the South by holding out stimulants to the encouragement of northern Territories, the propagation of northern sentiment, and the multiplication of northern representatives here and in the Senate. We are the weaker party now in both bodies, and I hope we shall not so legislate as to place us at a greater disadvantage.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Most of the arguments presented by the gentleman from Virginia, might have been very appropriate when the bill proposing to give six hundred and forty acres to the emigrants was before the House for consideration. That, however, is now a law. The question whether it was a proper law or not, is not now before us. I think I voted for that law, and that it was a proper one. We wanted to have Oregon settled up, and it was necessary to offer inducements to the people of all parts of the country to go there. It was in the nature of a military occupation. It was consistent with the policy of the Government in various other instances. It was in perfect consistency with the policy of my own State. In the early settlement of Georgia large grants of land were given to any individuals who would come and settle the country. I think the policy a wise one, and I am prepared to defend it.

But the only question before us at this time, is whether the individuals who have gone out to Oregon and settled there, shall be hampered and restricted by the provisions of that law. Sir, the policy of the Government, whether right or wrong, was for the benefit of those who hazarded everything to go out to that country. Now, if that was the policy, I appeal to the gentleman from Virginia—is it wise, is it just, that we should still trammel and restrict them? The object, when that law was passed, was to benefit the pioneer. Why should we not go on and still benefit him? Let us carry out the same policy. I do not see why we should continue the restriction; and I am, therefore, for repealing this proviso. The Government cannot be injured by it. It is not proposed by this bill to give away another acre of the public lands.

The gentleman argues as if we were disposing of the public lands. He says he is against giving away the public lands in the Territories. This bill does not propose to give away an inch of the public lands. The propriety of such grants is not now the subject-matter of discussion. The simple question is, will you do this act of justice to the western pioneer? For one, I am disposed to do it.

Mr. LETCHER. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly.

Mr. LETCHER. When the gentleman voted for the Oregon land bill, what did he mean by putting in the proviso?

Mr. STEPHENS. The proviso was put in, I suppose, as was stated by the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. LANCASTER] just now, to satisfy the scruples of some gentlemen who thought that the Hudson's Bay Company would be benefited by the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. That is another thing altogether.

Mr. COBB. There was no objection made in the House to the proviso, for I was here at the time.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not undertake to say why the proviso was put in the bill. I only say that it may have been put in for the reason assigned by the gentleman from Washington Territory. I have no distinct recollection of the history of that bill, or why the proviso was put in at all. It may have been thought proper at that time to prevent the claims from being sold. I do not know what the reason was. But when the case comes up now, and the pioneers come here, and through their Representatives here, state to us clear and just reasons why the restriction should be removed, why should we insist on retaining it? There is no reason for it that I can see.

The question was then taken upon Mr. LETCHER's amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. COBB. I modify my amendment by adding a proviso:

Provided, The recipients of said act shall have lived four years upon said lands thereby granted.

But, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARKER] thinks he has an amendment that will answer the purpose better, I will adopt his suggestion.

Mr. PARKER. I offer the following amendment, which the gentleman from Alabama accepts as a modification of his own.

Provided, That no sale shall be deemed valid until the vendor is entitled to a patent for the land.

Mr. COBB. The remark of the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] that he is willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. PARKER,] supersedes the necessity of replying to some of his remarks, as well as those that have fallen from other gentlemen.

Mr. LANE. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARKER] will change the phraseology a little, so as to provide that "no person shall be entitled or allowed the privilege of selling his claim until he shall have resided upon it four years," I will accept his amendment.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Oregon, I trust, will be satisfied that the objection I made to the section is a correct one.

Mr. LANE. To what section does the gentleman refer?

Mr. COBB. I am not going back to the original section. One word of reply here to the remark that has fallen from the honorable gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] that the citizens of Oregon were capable of taking care of themselves. I know that there was a time, perhaps, when the proposition came up in regard to the people of his Territory, that he would not have suggested this second section in the bill. It clearly shows that he was not only capable in his individual capacity, but as their Representative, of well representing them. But let me tell the gentleman from Oregon that while I have been a friend to Oregon, and have endeavored to promote the interests of the people of that Territory, since I have been a member of this House, I once had occasion to answer to my constituents for a vote I gave in relation to a matter before Congress, which was to put the gentleman from Oregon upon an equality with every other American Representative, so far as his mileage was concerned. My vote upon that occasion was thoroughly scrutinized, and I was compelled to take the stump to defend it. The gentleman himself was not then capable of managing his own affairs to his entire satisfaction. I came to his rescue then, as I have come to the rescue of his citizens whenever I could possibly do it in this House. I was obliged to take the stump in defense of my vote upon that occasion; but, thank God, my constituents vindicated my course, and declared that the old war-worn soldier should be put upon the same footing with every other American Representative, and that he should be paid for the distance that he traveled. I want to announce to him that I gave that vote, and my people have indorsed me in doing so.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] for his kindness now and on former occasions. And I will say to him that he represents a very sensible constituency, [laughter;] and that he is a very good Representative of that constituency. And to both those facts I shall always be happy to testify on this floor, twenty years hence as well as now. There are one or two words which I feel it to be my duty to say. I desire to call the attention of the committee, not to the amendment—for I am willing to agree to the amendment—but to a few words which came from my friend from Washington Territory, [Mr. LANCASTER,] in relation to the late Delegate from Oregon Territory. My friend from Washington Territory took occasion to say for that gentleman—my predecessor—that while here he secured the passage of this proviso, for the purpose of preventing the servants of the Hudson's Bay Company from taking and occupying claims; and particularly to deprive Dr. McLaughlin of his property, known as the Oregon City claim. He went on to say that it was this which prevented Dr. McLaughlin—who is the most generous man on the face of God's earth, according to him—from possessing property which he was entitled to. He, who had lavishly expended his money for the benefit of American citizens arriving in Oregon in a destitute condition, was thus prevented from enjoying the property to which he was justly entitled!

Now, Mr. Chairman, I cannot sit here and listen to assaults on the memory of my predecessor, without at least attempting his vindication. Mr. Thurston was among the pioneers of Oregon—the men who, years ago, braved the perils, and endured the hardships and privations of the plains and mountains, in migrating to that remote and then comparatively unknown region. He was a man of noble impulses—a spirit adventurous and enterprising, undaunted by dangers, unconquered by difficulties. He was, if not the discoverer, the man who pointed out to others the way to the beautiful and fertile regions that lie beyond the Rocky Mountains.

Possessed of fine literary attainments, of pleasing address, affable and kind, he early gained the affections, and secured the confidence of the people of Oregon; and when a territorial government was organized, he was selected as their first Delegate to Congress. No Territory ever had a better Delegate, no people a more vigilant and faithful representative. Among the measures whose passage through Congress was secured by this indefatigable servant of the people was the donation law of 1850, under which law the gentleman from Washington now enjoys a domain of six hundred and forty acres on the banks of the Columbia, worth, perhaps, $30,000, for all which he is indebted to the labors of the lamented Thurston. And yet, he rises in his place, in this Hall, and charges his benefactor with an unwarrantable exertion of his influence to secure the passage of a law aimed at, and designed to gratify his malice against a particular individual. Such a charge he brings, Mr. Chairman, not merely against a benefactor, but a benefactor who fell a victim to his untiring labors in the service of his constituents. Having finished his term in Congress, Mr. Thurston set out on his return, with his health impaired by the many cares that pressed on his mind in the discharge of his official duties. He died on his passage from Panama, and was buried at Acapulco. But the gratitude of the people of Oregon would not permit his body to rest in foreign soil. His remains were brought by them to Oregon, and now repose at Salem, the capital, in a tomb moistened with the tears, and hallowed by the affections of a grateful people.

Such a charge does injustice, gross injustice, to that man; it does injustice to his memory; it does injustice to his wife, to his orphan children, to say that he procured legislation for the purpose of injuring any individual, or used his position and influence with such unworthy motives.

The Oregon City claim, I would here add, belonged to the General Government, and Congress saw fit to grant it to the Territory for educational purposes. Of their action none have a right to complain.

I have nothing to say, Mr. Chairman, about the individual who has been eulogized so highly by the Delegate from Washington Territory. I know him well. I know that he has some high qualities. And I know another thing, that although he may have expended $60,000, as the gentleman says, for the benefit of destitute emigrants arriving at Oregon, I have not always found him so liberal, and no man knows him more intimately, I think, than I do. I only say this much to vindicate the character of one who represented Oregon Territory, and who did, I think, as much as any man on the Pacific coast could have done for the good of his constituency. There are many men here who knew him, who served with him, and who, I believe, will bear me out in saying that I have not spoken too highly in vindication of his memory.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is proper that I should make an explanation. I spoke hastily what I have spoken, but nevertheless I spoke the truth. I was a resident in that country before my learned friend [Mr. LANE.] [Laughter.] I call him "learned" on the authority of his friend here, [Mr. COBB.] [Renewed laughter.] Being a stranger here, I take things as I find them upon this floor. I state here what I know to be the truth. I have no interest which would lead me to promulgate what might be deemed untrue, to this House.

I was in that country before General LANE, the Delegate from Oregon was there, and before that Territory was organized. I make these remarks because I wish to show how it is that I have some knowledge upon this subject. Dr. McLaughlin has done more for the American settlements upon the Pacific coast than all other persons put together. I know it to be so.

And I state further, that there is not a single scientific work which has any relation to that country, there is not a report of a naval or of a military officer, there is not a report of a learned gentleman of any profession, who has ever visited that country, in which the hospitality of Dr. McLaughlin is not spoken of. Look at Lieutenant Wilkes's and Colonel Fremont's reports, and at the reports of every other person who has visited that country, and you will see that my statement is correct in every word; and then you can add to that the testimony of hundreds of persons who have gone into that Territory.

Now, what was done in the case of Dr. McLaughlin? He alone, of all the persons upon that coast, was singled out and deprived, by an act of legislation, of his possessions. This old man, gray-headed, and about to tumble into the grave, with all the good qualities which he possesses, was singled out, and his claims taken from him. Who has those possessions which formerly belonged to Dr. McLaughlin? My friend [Mr. LANE] has part of that which was claimed by him. He knows that perfectly well. Who has the balance of it? A part was appropriated to the endowment of a university. What sales of his were confirmed in Oregon Territory? and what lands in Oregon are held by title under that law? The lands which Dr. McLaughlin had given away, and which cost them only the expense of survey and titles. What was his claim? Oregon City. Who hold the lands now? Real settlers. Up to a certain day the gifts which he made were confirmed to the persons to whom they were made. What else was confirmed? Every particle of the balance was taken from him, and he does not hold a foot by virtue of that donation. He is the only man who could not receive the benefit of that donation act. That was brought about by Mr. Thurston, the Delegate, at that time, from Oregon Territory. I state the facts as I know them. Had I his speeches here, I could prove to you the correctness of my assertions. He stated that the reason why he was deprived of the benefits of the act was because he would not grind custom-work at the mill, which he owned, for the toll. At the island mill there, they would grind for custom. For his refusal, Mr. Thurston said the mill and his property should be taken from him. Now, what are the facts of the case? On a certain day, Mr. Thurston and myself, while I was proceeding in the discharge of my duties as supreme judge of the Territory, were together, and we crossed over the Willamette river. The Doctor's mill was standing still. We then remarked that the time would come when that water-power would be used—speaking in reference to the water-power of the river. On another day we stood at the same place. The mill was then running, and the mill was surrounded by wagons drawn by oxen and mules, with the teamsters and people who were waiting for their grists. We both saw it. Mr. Thurston knew that Dr. McLaughlin was grinding for customers, and yet not long after, in a speech upon this floor of Congress, he made a statement that the Doctor would not grind grain for customers. I do not say these things to detract from his memory, but I do say that the statement which he made here he knew not to be founded in truth.

Mr. COBB. I can tell the gentleman from Washington what Mr. Thurston said.

Mr. LANCASTER. I know what he said. I read his speeches as they were then published.

Mr. COBB. He said Dr. McLaughlin was British.

Mr. LANCASTER. He said he was British; he called him an old Jesuit.

Mr. COBB. I do not recollect that expression.

Mr. LANCASTER. He said it, and he made the charges which I have suggested also.

Mr. DISNEY. I rise to a question of order. This discussion is certainly wide of the subject under consideration.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no, let him go on.

Mr. LANCASTER. Well, sir, I thought it proper to state the causes which led to the insertion of this restrictive clause. It has been said that it was to prevent the Hudson's Bay Company from coming into possession of large tracts of land.

Mr. COBB. There is no difficulty about that.

Mr. LANCASTER. There may be no difficulty. It may be that I have traveled out of the legitimate line of debate in stating these facts. I have had but little experience in the proceedings of this body, and it may be that I have not kept within the rules of order. I thought it proper, however, to state the reasons which led to placing this restriction in the donation act; and I think so still. I stated that I believed it was to prevent the Hudson's Bay Company from holding the land taken by their servants within the limits of the Territory, and I stated that the object of Mr. Thurston in procuring its insertion was to prevent Dr. McLaughlin from enjoying his possessions, and to prevent the sales which he had made from being confirmed.

A MEMBER. Did Dr. McLaughlin ever receive anything from these sales?

Mr. LANCASTER. I believe, in some instances, he received a nominal sum; perhaps five dollars. But, Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee. I have stated what were the reasons which induced Mr. Thurston to procure this restriction; and I hope it may be the pleasure of the committee to repeal it.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will bear with me patiently for a few minutes.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and "Go on!"]

Mr. LANE. The gentleman from Washington has stated that Mr. Thurston had procured the passage of a law for the purpose of depriving Dr. McLaughlin of certain property which was now in his hands.

Mr. LANCASTER. I said you owned it.

Mr. LANE. Well, that is about the same. The gentleman is intentionally honest in his statement; but he misses the mark widely sometimes, as I will show. I hope the committee will bear with me, and I will make my explanation as brief as possible. It will be necessary to trace this matter as far back as 1841, in order to understand it perfectly. About that time some American missionaries erected a mill upon an island in the Willamette river. The building was commenced in 1841, and the mill was set running, I think, in 1843.

About that time Dr. McLaughlin took a claim upon the main land adjoining, and not upon the island, as the gentleman from Washington has erroneously stated. His claim extended only to the banks of the river. He laid no claim to the island, as the records of the surveys in the land office will show. I am certain of the fact, for I have looked at them several times. It can be proved by persons now living in Oregon that he never did a lick of work upon it, or made any improvement on it at all; and he has never been deprived of any property in consequence of this act to which he was properly entitled, except the Oregon City claim.

The records do not make the island Dr. McLaughlin's. The surveys do not make it Dr. McLaughlin's. The proof does not make it his. It never was his. He was at the head of the Hudson's Bay Company, and had been at the head of it many years before the Constitution and laws of the United States were extended over the country—before my venerable friend [Mr. BENTON] agitated the importance of taking hold of that country. The Doctor was there, a British subject, at the head of the richest company on the face of the earth, the East India Company excepted. High Heaven never made a more thorough, truer Briton than is the Doctor. He is a perfect aristocratic British gentleman. [Laughter.] He is British in all his feelings, in all his sentiments.

With regard to the gentleman from Washington, [Mr. LANCASTER,] I am not prepared to say what part he took in the Cayuse war, how many battles he fought, or how much blood he shed on that occasion. Dr. McLaughlin, although worth nearly $500,000, refused to give one single cent for the prosecution of the war. He refused to furnish a single load of powder and ball to fight the enemy. He said that the Americans were to blame; that Dr. Whitman was in the fault, and had no business to go into an Indian country; that his going there would bring on war. This he said, although it was well known to every person that Dr. Whitman was actuated by the benevolent design of elevating and improving the Indians. That kind of argument he brought forward as his excuse for not helping American citizens to fight the battles of the country. That is a portion of his history.

It is true, that he treated my friend, Colonel Fremont—a gallant man, whom I love much—and the gentlemen of science who visited that coast, well, handsomely. They all, with the honest impulses of the American heart, on their return from the Pacific, gave him credit for his good treatment of them. But when he got an opportunity to bear down on the poor man, he did it. He did not encourage the settlement of the country. He saw, in my friend from Washington, superior talent. A great lawyer had arrived on the Pacific coast, and it was his interest and advantage to use him, and he has done it. [Great laughter.] And he has a eulogist in that gentleman, as he has in all others whom he thought could promote his interests in this country. I know him well.

On my way to this city, after having a little row with the Rogue River Indians, I stopped in Oregon City to see my mills. And here I may say, that those mills nearly ruined me, pecuniarily. Their purchase was the worst thing I ever did. I agreed to give near $100,000 for them. I gave the earnings of twenty years of my life, and have now sold out for one third what they cost me. I am not now the owner of a single mill. When I stopped there I found American citizens coming into the Territory. Dr. McLaughlin lives in Oregon City. He is not the feeble, old, decrepit man that my friend speaks of. He is about seventy-five years of age. His hair is all white; but he is the finest looking gentleman that you ever saw. He is stout, stately, and weighs over two hundred pounds. He is stouter than I am, and I think that I am stouter than the gentleman from Washington. He bids fair to live for forty years yet, and I think that he will. He is the picture of health. If he does not die with the gout, I question whether he ever will die. [Great laughter.]

On my trip down I found the poor emigrants in great need of subsistence, worn down with the fatigue of a long journey, and, for the most part, without money to buy the articles so necessary in their then destitute condition. Dr. McLaughlin has mills, thousands of pounds of flour, and large amounts of money, but he would not let them have one pound of flour unless they paid for it. This occurred last fall. If they could get good security, he told them that he would give them credit. A note with good security was presented to him, and then he would not let them have it. They could not get even a pound of flour with security, although so very benevolent a gentleman.

I mention these facts as history—they are history. I am not here to represent British subjects or British interests, nor have I any feelings in common with British subjects and British interests. I am willing to do justice to Dr. McLaughlin. I should be sorry to see Congress deprive him of one particle of his property, but it is absurd to say that the Government of the United States shall not make what disposition they please of their own property because it is occupied by British subjects. The rights of British subjects were only to be respected by the treaty stipulations. They were placed on an equal footing with American citizens; and had not Congress a right to set aside that land for educational purposes, whether it was my claim or anybody else's claim? I should like some acute lawyer to say if they would. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. DISNEY,] [Laughter.] I am not joking. I want some gentleman to say whether Congress had not a right to appropriate the Government lands as they chose, to educational purposes, or any other purposes they thought proper?

A MEMBER. That would be a difficult question to answer after the veto.

Mr. LANE. Well, they did reserve that land; but they did not leave Dr. McLaughlin a poor man. I would not undertake to say what he is worth to-day, but he must be worth a quarter or half a million at least; and I should not wonder if he had more than $500,000 in cash besides his property. I regard him as an honest man; he pays all his debts. But he is not, in my opinion, entitled to receive any exclusive privileges at the hands of this Congress. I now ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. I merely desire to make a single statement. My belief is, that at the passage of this act, Dr. McLaughlin had declared his intention to become an American citizen; and I here state, before you, sir, and this committee, that he is, as far as a foreigner can be, an American citizen; that he has taken the oath of allegiance, and is, to all intents and purposes, an American citizen. How far he can be pronounced a British subject, under these circumstances, I do not know.

Mr. LANE. Allow me to state, for the benefit of the gentleman from Washington, that Dr. McLaughlin did take the oath in my presence when I was Governor of the Territory; but I am not certain that he has completed his naturalization.

[Here a message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed Senate bill No. 352, entitled "An act extending, in certain cases, the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to extend preemption rights to certain land therein mentioned,' approved March 3, 1853," and requesting its concurrence therein.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. PARKER,] providing that no sale shall be deemed valid until the vender is entitled to the patent for the land. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] moves to strike out the words "the vender is entitled to the patent for the same," and insert in lieu thereof the words "unless the vender shall have resided four years upon the land."

Mr. PARKER. I accept the modification. The question was then taken on Mr. PARKER's amendment as modified; and it was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I now withdraw my amendment. The fourth section of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the two townships of land granted to the Territory of Oregon by the tenth section of the act of 1850, for universities, there shall be granted to each of the Territories of Washington and Oregon, two townships of land of thirty-six sections each, to be selected in legal subdivisions, and applied to university purposes, under the direction of the Legislatures of said Territories, respectively.

Mr. HENN. I move to amend that section in the fourth line, by striking out the word "granted," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "reserved."

Mr. KNOX. I move that the committee rise. The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker pro tempore, (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee,) having taken the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order relating to the territorial business of the organized Territories, and had directed him to report bill No. 315, "to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes," with sundry amendments, but had come to no conclusion upon the other bills.

On motion by Mr. LILLY, the House then adjourned, at three o'clock and forty-five minutes, ill to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 4, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a bill from the Senate to change the name of the bark Albeona to Mount Vernon.

Also, that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore signed the bill.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, relative to the expediency of adopting further measures for the safety, health, and comfort of immigrants to the United States by sea; which was referred to the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the subject, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of citizens of Otsego county, New York, remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, a petition of citizens of New York, remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of one hundred and sixty-four citizens of New York, remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GWIN presented documents in relation to the claim of J. C. Edwards, for the payment of a draft drawn by G. W. Barbour, Indian agent in California; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented a resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, in favor of the establishment of a weekly mail from New Orleans to the Buras settlements, in the parish of Plaquemines; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the petition of William Moran, praying remuneration for a horse belonging to him, which was accidentally killed on the work of the extension of the Capitol; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I have a memorial from citizens of Missouri and Wisconsin in reference to what are known as "spiritual manifestations." I believe the memorial is similar in character to that presented recently by my honorable friend from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS.] It concludes by asking for the appointment of a scientific commission to which this subject shall be referred; and for such an appropriation as will enable the commissioners to prosecute their inquiries to a successful termination. I have such a respect, sir, for the right of petition that I do not hesitate to present this memorial; but, I desire to be understood as expressing no opinion upon its prayer. As the other memorial went upon the table, I ask that this lie there also.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was very much censured for not having the former memorial referred to a select committee; and I was in hopes that my honorable friend from Massachusetts would make up for my delinquency, and that he would ask for a select committee to which both memorials should be referred. I should be very willing to serve on a committee, with him as chairman, to investigate the matter in that way. I want to put myself right on this very nice point, for it has been charged that I have smothered a petition which was intrusted to me, and I am sorry now to see that my friend from Massachusetts makes himself liable to a similar charge.

Mr. SUMNER. My friend from Illinois will understand that I have but followed his lead in the course I have taken. Besides, I may add, that the petitioners, in forwarding to me their memorial, made no such request to me as I understand was made to my honorable friend. They did not ask that I should move its reference to a select committee.

Mr. SHIELDS. That may be so. I was asked to have it referred, and the only trouble was, that I said at the time I did not know that it was possible for a select committee to consider such matters, but I did not promise that I would have it referred. I was in hopes, however, that when a proper occasion arose in the Senate, I should be accorded an opportunity to show the interest I take in this investigation; and to show that I wish to have the subject thoroughly examined. I understand the excitement in regard to it is increasing very largely throughout the country, and I was in hopes that my friend from Massachusetts, who I think is really a very scientific gentleman, would do this subject, as he does every other, ample justice.

The memorial was ordered to lie on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SEWARD. I beg leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate, the papers of Brinton Paine, which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims heretofore, and upon which an adverse report was made. The object is that they may be sent to the Commissioner of Pensions, who has been furnished with other papers, in order that the application may be renewed there upon new grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOOT. Some two weeks since, as a member of the Committee on Pensions, by their direction, I asked, and they were discharged from the further consideration of the case of Leonard Procter. Since that action additional testimony has been sent in which strengthens, in my judgment, the evidence of the case. I therefore move to recommit the petition and papers in the case of Leonard Procter, to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. MORTON, it was Ordered, That William G. Morehead have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham, reported it back without amendment, together with a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William Field, clerk of the United States district court for the district of Arkansas, praying to be allowed additional compensation for preparing an abstract of the bankrupt cases in the above named court, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Hardy H. Holstead and others, praying a modification of the bounty land law, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the memorial of Samuel J. Peters, praying to be allowed an amount of spurious coin received by him while collector of the customs at New Orleans, that item having been rejected on the settlement of his accounts, reported adversely thereon.

TRANSPORTATION OF TROOPS, ETC.

On motion by Mr. RUSK, it was Ordered, That the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, calling for the amount expended for the transportation of troops, supplies, and munitions for the land and naval forces in the Pacific; also, for the transportation of the mails for the last three years, be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed a bill to change the name of the bark Aebeona to Mount Vernon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore signed the above named bill.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BROWN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for carrying the mail according to time; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORT OF LIEUTENANT LEE.

Mr. JOHNSON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to forward to the Senate the report and chart of Lieutenant S. P. Lee, late commanding the United States surveying brig Dolphin.

I ask the Senate to consider the resolution at this time. It is for the purpose of bringing before the Senate, that it may be properly referred, this report, which is a matter of very high commercial interest to the country, as it is in reference to an exploration of the north and south Atlantic. The exploration was made in obedience to the law of March 3, 1849. The report is in the Navy Department, and the Department is willing and ready to send it to the Senate. I offer the resolution, therefore, in order that we may have an opportunity to have it before us.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PRINTING OF REPORTS.

Mr. BROPHEAD. I move that there be printed one thousand additional copies of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in regard to the current operations of the Mint, and one thousand additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint, in regard to the fineness and value of certain foreign gold and silver coins.

The PRESIDENT. That motion will go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I would like to have the two printed together, and to have five hundred for the use of the Director of the Mint to exchange with foreign Mints, and five hundred for the use of the Senate. I presume, if there be no objection, the order can be made now.

The motion was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

RAMSAY INVESTIGATION.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I ask leave to withdraw from the papers accompanying the report made by the Committee on Indian Affairs, in reference to the investigation into the official conduct of Governor Ramsay, of Minnesota, certain papers which I hold in my hand, for the purpose of having them referred to the accounting officers of the Treasury, to enable one of the commissioners to settle his accounts. The papers which I desire to have withdrawn, I hold in my hand, and I will send them to the Secretary's desk.

Mr. STUART. I should like to see what the papers are, or to hear some statement of them.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. They are certain vouchers for expenditures of money made by Judge Young, one of the commissioners in that investigation. It is necessary that they should go through the hands of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, for the purpose of having the accounts finally settled. That is the explanation which is given to me of the case, and I have no doubt it is true.

Mr. STUART. I should like to hear some pretty full statement of this matter. As I understand it, the Senate, by resolution, has paid Judge Young out of its contingent fund. Now, I do not know what the accounting officers of the Treasury Department have to do with that. I do not wish to object to anything that ought to be done, but I think there is a great deal in reference to the Ramsay transaction which ought to come to light in some shape or other. Unless there is some exposition more than the Senator has now given us, I shall be compelled to object to his motion. I should like to have him look into the papers, and see whether they meet his sanction.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have not examined the papers myself, but I am told that they are vouchers of Judge Young's, which, having been connected with that transaction, have to go to the Treasury Department, in order that the Department may settle claims arising under the investigation. We paid Judge Young simply one item—his per diem. But an appropriation has been inserted in the Indian appropriation bill, by the Senate, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the investigation, and I take it for granted that the papers which are to be withdrawn are with reference to that matter. The papers are now on the table, and without making any motion in regard to them, I will allow them to lie there for the present informally, that the Senator from Michigan may look into them. I have no idea that there is anything wrong in the matter. The papers are there for the Senator's inspection.

REDEMPTION OF STOCKS.

Mr. BELL. I offer the following resolution; and I hope there will be no objection to its consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish, for the information of the Senate, a statement of the amount of the bonds, or other securities of the United States, redeemed since the 3d of March, 1853, specifying in such statement the date of issue of such bonds or securities, the rate of interest, when payable, and the amount of premium paid on each class of the same.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

COAL FIELDS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BADGER. On the day before yesterday I submitted a resolution, which was agreed to, instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the President of the United States to cause an examination and survey to be made of the coal fields in the neighborhood of Deep river, North Carolina, with a view to the establishment of a national foundry and armory. I desire now to present some papers in relation to the subject-matter of the resolution, and to ask their reference to the same committee.

In connection with the subject, I desire to state that within a few years past various explorations have been had of that region, which have led to a strong conviction that there are inexhaustible supplies of the best coal of several varieties, and of iron, and the probability that there is a large supply of copper ore also, immediately adjacent.

I thought it proper to bring this subject to the attention of the Senate, and ask its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, with a view that they should consider the propriety of taking the necessary steps by legislation for an examination and survey. I think there is abundant reason for thinking that no more eligible site is to be found in the United States for a public foundry than that.

I would add, in connection with this, that the Senate has passed a bill at this session, which has been sent to the other House, making an appropriation for the removal of obstructions in the Cape Fear river, so as to have free communication with the ocean; and that that bill will receive the sanction of the House of Representatives. I do not permit myself to doubt, so soon, as in the course of their proceedings, they can reach it. The necessity for the measure is so pressing, its propriety so plain, and the duty upon the Government is so obviously imperative, that whenever it comes up it must meet with their approbation. Therefore, I consider that there is an ocean communication near at hand. There is, indeed, one now; but I mean a better and more permanent one. It will be the means of establishing communication between these coal fields and the ocean, and the markets of the world. Besides which, a short line of railroad will soon, probably, connect them with the Atlantic ocean at the harbor of Beaufort, which, in my opinion, is the best and most valuable harbor for the purpose of navigation, and as a harbor of refuge, in the southern country. With these remarks, I beg to submit printed copies of two reports: one made by an eminent professor, Professor Jackson; and the other by the State geologist, Professor Emmons; and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

They were so referred.

ST. LOUIS AND IRON MOUNTAIN RAILROAD.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives, granting the right of way to the St. Louis and Iron Mountain railroad through the arsenal, magazine, and Jefferson barracks tracts, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the following proviso:

"That a good wire or other substantial fence be placed by the said company between the road and public grounds, with suitable iron gates and crossing places, at such points as may be designated by the commanding officer at Jefferson barracks, the number of gates not to exceed four at the Jefferson barracks, one at the magazine, and one at the arsenal."

and insert:

"That a strong substantial plank fence be erected by said company between the road and the public grounds, at such place and of such character as the commanding officer at Jefferson barracks shall direct, with suitable iron gates, not exceeding four, at such points as shall be selected by such commanding officer; and the said company shall also cause to be constructed two covered ways, at suitable places in part of said public grounds, and in such manner as shall be approved by said commanding officer; and if, after the fence herein provided for shall have been erected, and the said road put in operation, it shall be found, in the opinion of the President, to be insufficient for the protection of lives and property, he may require a fence of brick, stone, or iron to be constructed, and the said company shall cause the same to be erected accordingly, at their proper cost and charge."

Mr. STUART. I desire to suggest an amendment to the amendment, to which I understand the Senator from Illinois has no objection. It is to insert, after the words "insufficient for the protection of lives and property," the words, "or for any other reason," so that it will read:

"If, after the fence herein provided for shall have been erected, and the said road put in operation, it shall be found, in the opinion of the President, to be insufficient for the protection of lives and property, or for any other reason, he may require a fence of brick, stone, or iron, to be constructed," &c.

Mr. SHIELDS. "Any other sufficient reason."

Mr. STUART. I am willing to so modify it. The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that amendment will be made to the amendment of the committee.

There was no objection.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and was read a third time, and passed.

INDIGENT INSANE BILL.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate resumed the consideration of the message from the President of the United States, returning the bill making a grant of land to the several States of the Union, for the benefit of indigent insane persons, the pending question being upon the motion to print ten thousand additional copies of it.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I now move that the further consideration of the message be postponed until Monday week. I am very anxious, Mr. President, to get up another question, in which I feel a great interest—the Pacific railroad bill. It is known to many members of the body that I am very anxious to be able to have it disposed of, that I may leave here. It has been up at various periods, but has gone over to let other bills be considered. I hope, therefore, that I shall have an opportunity of getting the sense of the Senate upon it next week. I therefore move to postpone the consideration of this subject until Monday week.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the motion will prevail. It seems to me that we shall not be able to have a full Senate before that time, and I should not desire to see the question disposed of before all those who feel interested in the question are here.

Mr. SHIELDS. My only fear is that it ought to be postponed a little longer. For one, I shall not consent to have this acted upon until we have final action on the homestead bill. I am clear, sir, in my opinion, that it is the duty of the Senate to dispose of the homestead bill before action upon this measure. It has been smothered in this body once before; it has been pushed out of its place by a variety of other measures, and for one, I shall now insist, and do all that man can do, to have that finally determined before a debate arises upon this, because, in my humble judgment, the same kind of speeches—and I expect there will be many of them—that will apply to the veto message, will be applicable to the other case; and I think we may save time by having the two measures brought forward, and acted upon pretty much at the same time. The homestead bill has laid in this body, and has not been touched, I believe, since almost the middle of the session. My honorable friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. WALKER], who deserves a great deal of credit for the manner in which he pressed that matter upon the consideration of the Senate, has, as I have with some other measures, upon all occasions when they were brought forward, found that there was something else, in the opinion of the Senate, much more important than that, and it could not be attended to. I think the time has now come to act upon it; and for one, I am glad that we have this message before us; and I will tell you why. We can now, in my opinion, establish some general system in relation to the management and disposition of the public domain. It is all in chaos now; it is all in confusion; and my opinion is that this is a very favorable time for us to settle general principles connected with that subject. Therefore, if the Senator from Wisconsin thinks there is ample time to have final action upon the homestead bill before the discussion is entered upon in regard to this measure, I am in favor of postponing this measure until Monday week; if not, I am in favor of postponing it longer.

Mr. PRATT. If the Senator from Illinois is prepared to inform the Senate that the President of the United States will veto the homestead bill, if it passes here, there would be some reason for his argument; but unless this is so, I can see no reason for it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have no information upon that point. I have too much respect for the President of the United States to ask his opinion beforehand upon such a point, and my opinion of the character of the President is, that he would regard it as an insult to him to be questioned upon such a point before the final action of this body.

Now, sir, I have no such information. I do not know whether the bill will be vetoed or not; but what I do say is this, that it is an important question touching the management and disposition of the public lands, and that in the final determination of that question by this body, we are considering many of the principles laid down in the message of the President, which I have read with a great deal of interest, and for which I have very great respect. Therefore, I repeat, that I do not know whether the President will veto that bill or not. I will not pretend to prejudge his action upon it. I hope he will not; because I am in favor of the bill, and I should be very sorry to see him veto it; but whether he does or not, I want the opinion of this body upon it.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe, in the history of the action of the two Houses upon vetoes, it will not be found that either House has ever postponed for so long a period as is now proposed, a reconsideration of a bill vetoed. It seems to me that justice and courtesy to the President require that we should pursue the course which has been usual in regard to such matters. I am unwilling to postpone it longer than next Monday. It is due to the President that the question should be decided—that we should proceed to its consideration at once. I shall, therefore, vote against any proposition to postpone it to a later period than Monday next. So far as the homestead bill is concerned, the honorable Senator from Illinois is right; the same class of arguments will be used on the one as on the other; and I trust, therefore, that the Senate will not postpone this bill beyond Monday next. I believe it will be found that, in every case in which a veto has been sent to the Senate, they have not postponed it beyond the day after it has been sent in.

Mr. CHASE. The Senator from Virginia has anticipated what I was about to say. There has been no instance, I believe, in the history of the Government, in which the consideration of a bill returned by the President with his objections, has been postponed for any considerable period. In the instances which have fallen under my notice, the Senate, or the House to which the bill has been returned, has proceeded immediately to the consideration of the bill returned with the objections of the President. The Constitution seems to prescribe that course. It directs that the House to which the bill is returned shall proceed to the consideration of the bill, after the message has been received, and entered on the Journal. The message is considered by the usage of both Houses as spread upon the Journal whenever it is received; and hence, without delay, in a majority of instances, I believe, the House to which the bill has been returned, has proceeded at once to its consideration.

There have been, I believe, however, instances in which it has been proposed to assign a certain day for the consideration of the bill. It is not the message which is usually assigned for consideration, but the bill returned with the objections of the President. With the consent, therefore, of the Senator from California, I propose to submit a resolution that—next be assigned for the consideration of the bill (giving its title) returned by the President with his objections. In submitting this resolution, I do not propose to indicate any opinion upon the merits of the bill. I voted for it. It has been returned by the President with his objections, and in my opinion it is the duty of the Senate, and of each Senator, to give a careful and thorough consideration to those objections, and afterwards to act as his own judgment dictates.

Mr. BAYARD. I had intended to submit a resolution similar to that indicated by the honorable Senator from Ohio, and which, I think, is justified by both the practice of the Government and the inference which may be drawn from the language of the Constitution. Yesterday, when this question came before the Senate, after the reading of the message, the first motion made was, that it be ordered to lie on the table, and be printed. That was agreed to. The motion was then made by the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] to print ten thousand extra copies. On that motion a debate arose that went into the merits of the message, and had scarcely the slightest connection with the consideration of the propriety of making the order to print an extra number of copies of a public document of high importance, emanating from the Executive of the United States, and intended for the information of the people of the country, as well as of the Senate of the United States.

I had intended, under the practice of the Government, and it seems to me in accordance with the direction of the Constitution, to submit a motion similar to that of the honorable Senator from Ohio, assigning Monday next for the reconsideration of this bill, giving its title in the resolution, to which the President has returned to the Senate his objections. The language of the Constitution requires, that when the President does object to a bill, he shall specify his objections, and return it to the body in which it originated, which shall proceed to consider the same; and, in regard to the practice of Congress under that provision, I will give two instances, taken at different periods, to show what the course has been.

The first veto message was that of General Washington in 1792, and on that occasion, immediately after the reading of the message, the order was entered:

Resolved, That to-morrow be assigned for the consideration of the bill to which the objections apply."

In 1832, when the veto message of General Jackson came in, as to the bank bill, on the motion of Mr. Webster, the following day—"to-morrow"—was assigned for the consideration of the bill which the President had sent in, with his objections. That has been the usual course, I believe, with, perhaps, a single exception. I believe there is one solitary exception, in which the consideration of the objections made by the President of the United States to the bill, was postponed further than the following day.

It seems to me, as to-morrow is private-bill day, that there will be no impropriety in assigning Monday next for the consideration of this bill; but that there ought to be an early day fixed, appears from the very character of the business. The act has been passed by both Houses of Congress. It stands in such a condition that it cannot become a law unless two thirds of both Houses, after hearing the President's objections, agree to its passage. The language of the Constitution seems to require that the message should be considered, and disposed of before going into other legislation, and at as early a day as practicable. I therefore hope, in accordance with the previous practice of Congress, in times quite as exciting as regards political questions as the present, when, no matter how the majority stood, they always proceeded on the succeeding day to the consideration of the subject-matter on which the President presented himself as differing from the two Houses of Congress on cardinal questions connected with the construction of the Federal Constitution, that we will pursue that course now, because the questions involved in this message are questions of principle.

Gentlemen may draw different inferences from the language of the message; they may suppose that the President would veto one bill, and not another. All that may be so; but a full discussion of the doctrines of the Constitution, of the provisions of the Constitution, must necessarily come up in the discussion of this message. They must come up in such a shape now. Fortunately, they must go before the people of the United States. They must be made an issue before the people of the United States, on all particular projects which gentlemen have, no matter how important they may be, whether homestead bills, or Pacific railroad bills, or other railroad bills. They all sink into insignificance when looked upon in comparison with the general principle which covers the whole. Under the uniform practice of the Government, and the language of the Constitution, it would seem to require that there should be an immediate consideration of the bill returned, with the objections of the President; so that I hope a later day than Monday next will not be fixed by the Senate for the purpose of its consideration.

I do not mean, for one moment, to go into a discussion now of the principles involved in this measure. The time to do so will be when the day assigned for the consideration of the bill arrives; and surely the practice of the Government requires that an early day should be assigned. I prefer the form of my own resolution to that of the honorable Senator from Ohio; but it is very immaterial. Both, I believe, assign Monday next as the day for proceeding to the consideration of the objections of the President to the bill which has been passed by Congress. In doing that, I have followed the precedents as I have found them existing in the history of congressional proceedings. I have followed that, in the first instance, of a veto by the President, and also the case which happened after the lapse of some forty years. These proceedings cover the case now before us, and should govern the action of the Senate upon it.

Mr. CHASE. I ask that my resolution as it now stands be read.

Mr. BADGER. What is the motion before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion made by the Senator from California, to postpone the consideration of the subject until Monday week.

Mr. CHASE. I ask the Senator from California to accept the resolution which I send to the chair, and I ask that it may be read. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That Monday next be assigned for the consideration of the bill entitled "An act making a grant of public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons," returned by the President, with his objections.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to suggest to the Senate that we either take a vote now on this bill, and let the discussion come up upon the homestead bill, or postpone it for two weeks. Why, sir, there is very little discussion to be had upon this bill. We considered it before we sent it to the President. We considered it yesterday. Several gentlemen discussed it at considerable length. Many of the reasons given in the message operate against the homestead bill. I know that there are several Senators who desire to discuss our land policy; but their remarks can as well be made on the homestead bill. I therefore suggest that, by common consent, we take the vote now, or postpone it to the time indicated by the Senator from California.

Mr. WALKER. I was much gratified by the suggestions and remarks of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS.] He seemed to propound the question to me, whether I believe the time between now and next Monday week sufficient for the disposition of the homestead bill. My impression is that it is not a sufficient time. I agree with him that we should postpone the consideration of the bill returned by the President until after we shall have considered the homestead bill; and, assuming the time up to next Monday week to be insufficient for the consideration of the homestead bill, I should be pleased, for one, to see this bill postponed until the Monday following that, so as to be two weeks from Monday next.

I cannot appreciate the argument that is used, that we are showing a greater amount of respect to the President, by hastily proceeding to the consideration of his message, than by postponing it to a future day, and giving gentlemen time to reflect on it, and to make up their minds and arguments for or against the message. I do not think that the early consideration of this matter involves any very grave consideration; any great importance. Why, will not the matter be as well considered two weeks from next Monday as to-morrow? If gentlemen take time to reflect, and to consider for themselves—to make up their minds and their arguments—the probability is, that it would be considered better at a future day than to-morrow. In the mean time, we can take up this kindred subject—the homestead bill—mentioned by the Senator from Illinois. There are many Senators here who, for quite a number of sessions, have been very anxious to get that matter to something like a final vote in the Senate; and they have been, as often as they manifested that desire, put off, and the bill postponed, in consequence of something else before the Senate which was deemed of greater importance by the body; and it does seem that this subject is the most unfortunate one that can possibly be mentioned in the Senate. I have known gentlemen who, at the present session of Congress, have manifested the greatest anxiety for the consideration of the homestead bill, and the greatest anxiety for its passage, who were the most marked, apparently, in their determination, on all previous occasions, to postpone it to whatever came up. Some have always preferred propositions to grant land warrants to soldiers; others prefer railroad bills; others this thing, and others that; and everlastingly it seems that the consideration of the homestead bill must be postponed. Now, we have this message. It is conceded that the discussion upon it can about as well come upon the homestead bill. Then, I inquire, why not postpone it for at least two weeks, and in the mean time take up the homestead bill, which is the special order? If I am correct, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. CHASE] introduced his resolution, leaving the day blank. I intended to move to insert, "two weeks from Monday next;" but, from the reading of the resolution, it would seem that the blank has been filled with "Monday next." I therefore, before taking my seat, move to strike out "Monday next," and insert "two weeks from Monday next."

Mr. BADGER. I believe the actual question before the Senate, is on the motion made by the Senator from California, to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Monday week.

The PRESIDENT. That is the question.

Mr. BADGER. If I understand the rules of the Senate, the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio, is not now before the body. It is but an intimation of what he will propose, if the motion of the Senator from California shall be voted down. That is the state of the question before the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I do not understand that there is anything in the clause of the Constitution directing the body to whom the President may return a bill, with his objections, as to the time when the reconsideration of the bill is to be made. The provision of the Constitution is simply designed to direct what is to be done upon the disapproval by the President of a bill which passes the two Houses, and under what circumstances it may become a law, notwithstanding his objections. The language is—after stating that the President shall return the bill with his objections, to the House in which it shall have originated—

"Who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and, if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a law."

There is nothing that intimates that it was the will of the framers of the Constitution that the Senate or the House of Representatives, receiving the objections, should then proceed to reconsider; but that, if the President disapproved the bill, it should be reconsidered by both Houses, and, if passed by two thirds, become a law; and the Constitution directs that, in all such cases, the votes shall be taken by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill recorded on the Journal. It is nothing in the world but a reconsideration of this bill—a reconsideration directed by the Constitution. The time when we are to reconsider it is just as much at our control as the time was when we should consider the bill heretofore. We are to consider all the circumstances which are involved in the inquiry, when shall this reconsideration take place? We are neither unreasonably to delay, nor improperly to precipitate it. We must consider the question with a view to the state of our business, the period of the session, and the necessity for a full and thorough examination of the grounds taken by the President in his message, and the grounds on which the bill may be entitled to support.

I find that, although it has been usual, and although there is more propriety in proceeding at once to the consideration of such a message, in 1841, when Mr. Tyler sent to this body a veto message on the bank bill, which was passed by the Congress of that year, the message was received on Monday, August 16. It was ordered to be printed, and its consideration appointed for Tuesday, the next day, at twelve o'clock. On that day the Senate proceeded to consider the bill for distribution and preemption. It was considered and debated until twelve o'clock, when the bank bill, which had been vetoed, was taken up, and, on motion, its further consideration was postponed until Wednesday—the next day. The land bill was then resumed, debated, considered, and amended. On Wednesday, the bank bill was further postponed to Thursday, and the land bill was taken up, further considered, debated, and ordered to lie on the table; and on Thursday, after other business had been disposed of by the Senate, they resumed the consideration of the bill and message accompanying it, and finally disposed of it. It was agreed, on all hands then, that there should be no unreasonable delay; the subject was considered; but it was agreed, also, that there was no necessity for immediate consideration. That being so, the Senate has the same reasonable discretion on this subject as over the propriety of considering any bill originally. Why should they not? It is merely sent back, and the Senate must reconsider it, and pass upon it in the constitutional method. But what restrains them from selecting what they think the best and most expedient time? I see nothing in the Constitution; and with regard to the past practice of the Government, you must recollect, Mr. President, that this message of President Tyler was received on the 16th of August. The session was then nearly drawing to a close. There was a propriety, and I may say a sort of necessity, in disposing of that message under the circumstances, in less time than is required, or would be necessary or proper, in regard to this message. We are now in the early part of May. We have the whole session before us. Having said this, I wish to add that it makes no difference to me whether this message is postponed to next Monday or Monday week. Whatever may suit the convenience of other gentlemen on that subject, will suit mine too. I rose to make these remarks simply because I do not conceive there is anything stringent, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, in the Constitution as to the time when the reconsideration should take place.

I will add another remark, and not trouble the Senate further. It was said by the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] yesterday, and, I think, properly, that this is a large subject, and the important principles involved in the bill and the message of the President, make it highly proper that the subject should receive a full and thorough examination; and if, as has been said by gentlemen on this floor, that bill was passed through the Senate without adequate consideration and full discussion, it is the more important, I think, that we should take time to look with care into the subject before we discuss and dispose of the bill upon the President's objections.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, if I understood the precise object which the different friends of the postponement to Monday and Monday two weeks have in view, I should know better how to act. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WALKER] is anxious to take up the homestead bill, and therefore asks for a longer postponement of this question. Some of the friends of the homestead bill, I believe, think that the message upon your table does not affect or touch that bill.

Several SENATORS. We do not know about that.

Mr. DAWSON. Gentlemen who understand the character of the veto have been saying that it does touch the homestead bill; but, as I understand, there is not a gentleman on this floor who will undertake to say that the homestead bill falls within the principle of that message.

Mr. BAYARD. As one, I consider that it would certainly require the veto of the homestead bill.

Mr. DAWSON. Then, one considers that it does require the veto of that bill; and if that be the opinion of the friends of the Administration generally, wherefore should we occupy the time of this body by making long and tedious speeches upon the homestead bill, when we know it will be met by a veto?

Mr. BADGER. Long—not tedious. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWSON. Yes. I strike out the word "tedious." Now, for one, I am disposed to believe that the author of the message does not believe that the homestead came within the principles of the message; and the friends of the homestead and the friends of the Administration, being willing to have it taken up and acted on immediately, is an evidence of that fact. The Senator from California, who wishes to postpone this to the most distant day, is governed, not by a desire to take up the homestead bill, but the Pacific railroad bill.

Mr. GWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWSON. If that be the object, I shall vote for the earliest day; but if it be for the purpose of taking up the homestead bill and having the whole batch of land bills before the President at once in order to receive his veto, and then to have all the measures acted on at once, I will agree to any postponement you desire. That is perfectly fair.

Mr. BELL. But if you pass the homestead bill, you do not then know, on the principles of the message, whether he will veto it or not.

Mr. DAWSON. Then we shall have to wait, of course, for the President to send another message; but I rely very much upon the information which gentlemen will receive, that I may be informed what is the position of the land bills. I am one who opposed originally the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands. I changed my opinion, because Congress, by a continuous number of decisions, declared that we had the right to dispose of the public lands in the way we have been going on to do for years, and I saw the public lands all going to private companies and into the hands of individuals. I determined then to adopt the principle of the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands. That was right; and the first effort we could make was to touch the insane and the lunatics. Why? Because they could not go and occupy the lands under the homestead bill, having no volition, being controlled by guardians. They could not occupy it and settle it. Recognizing the principle of the President, that the General Government is the trustee for the whole of the people, and that we ought to regulate our trust funds, or the land in the States, on principles that a discreet landed proprietor would do, I considered that a discreet landed proprietor, if he had a number of children for whom he was trustee, and they were insane or lunatics, would make some provision for them, and that it would be for the general benefit of all; and, as I knew that the lunatic or insane had never received a dollar's advantage out of the public treasury of the country, or out of the lands which belong to them as well as to anybody else, I thought it was a fair ground at once to commence the distribution, and act as a sensible landed proprietor or trustee would do, by dividing the estate among the cestui que trust, and I went for that bill. But if the President is determined to arrest these railroad bills, and the homestead bill, and this bill also, and we shall adopt some new rule by which the public lands shall be disposed of, I am prepared to listen to it, and hear it, and if a better plan can be adopted, I will go for it. But for one, representing an old State, I am not going to suffer the public lands to go into the hands of private companies, or the States in which the lands lie; and be still, and not ask for any proportionate share to the old States, and show our modesty and diffidence in attempting to get justice. The bill which the President has returned to us was for the benefit of the people who are entitled to the highest claim, and to the kindest generosity and philanthropy of Congress. It was for the insane portion of the cestui que trust, residing in every State of the Union, and it divided the lands so as to make it equal throughout the country. Still, I say that if the President vetoes all these measures, and establishes the old principle that the public lands belong to the people generally, and ought to be disposed of for the payment of the debt due by the Government, and for a diminution of taxes, it will all be right; but if that rule is not adopted, and favoritism and partiality shall prevail, I go for the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, or the lands themselves, to all the States who are entitled to them. There is nothing wrong in that. But I come back to the point. The friends of the measure are most anxious to have it acted upon; but if the homestead is not to be discussed and decided before we decide on the veto, let us act upon the veto at once. There is no necessity for any delay. If it comes not within the principle of that veto, let us act upon this at once; but if the friends of the Administration think that it does, I am for postponing it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope the honorable Senator from California will modify his motion so as to postpone the consideration of the subject until two weeks from Monday. That may give us time to arrange both this measure and the other to which reference has been made. At all events, that allows little enough time.

Mr. GWIN. The resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio is, I believe, the most appropriate form in which a motion on this subject can be made; and I am, therefore, willing to accept it as a substitute for mine, leaving the day blank, so that the Senate can determine on what day they will consider the subject. Monday week suits me very well, because I want to vote on this bill, and I intend to be here, but I may not be here two weeks hence. Or, I am willing to take up the subject now, and proceed to act upon it at once.

Several Senators. Say Monday.

Mr. GWIN. I am opposed to taking up the message on next Monday, because I wished to have the coming week devoted to another subject, which I think is of more importance than this. My object is to have action upon the Pacific railroad bill during the ensuing week. I am willing, however, to take up this veto message now, and act upon it immediately, or I am willing to agree that it shall be postponed to Monday week, or even to two weeks from to-day, though I prefer Monday week for the reason that I shall be here then, while I may not be here two weeks hence. I am anxious that the other question to which I have alluded shall be disposed of. That, certainly, is not affected by this veto, because the message approves the principle of donating lands for railroad purposes. I refer to the Pacific railroad bill which is under my charge. That bill has been before the Senate for a long time, and it is absolutely important to me that I should have early action on it.

I am ready to vote on the veto message now; I am prepared to act on it now, as much so as I shall be on Monday next. I presume that no discussion can take place upon it which will change a single vote here. We all know how we are going to vote now as well as we shall know hereafter. The very speeches that will be made on it can as well be made on the homestead bill when that comes up. I am anxious to progress with business; but I fear that if this subject be postponed until next Monday, it will become the political question of this session, and there is no telling when it will be decided. It will be mixed up with other questions, and thus business will be delayed. I am anxious to have it acted upon now, or to have it postponed, so as to give us longer time, in order to dispose of other important business.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator from California, I understand, has accepted the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, leaving the day blank.

Mr. CHASE. I have no objection to modify it, so as to leave the day blank. That is accepted by the Senator from California.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then, I move to fill the blank by inserting Monday, the 22d instant—two weeks from next Monday.

Mr. BELL. I should like to know from the Senator from Illinois, what is his specific object in moving this long postponement? Is it merely to take up and discuss the homestead bill, and pass it, if the Senate shall think proper to pass it? Is it proposed to postpone the consideration of the bill granting lands for the indigent insane, which the President has returned with his objections, for the purpose of ascertaining from the President himself, by his approval or veto of the homestead bill, what are his views of it? Is this postponement asked, in order that we may know what the opinion of the President is upon the homestead bill, before we proceed to reconsider the bill granting lands for the indigent insane? If that be the object, I have to suggest, that when the homestead bill comes up for consideration, it will most probably be pretty fully discussed in this body, and other business will be intervening occasionally, so that we cannot look for a final vote of the Senate on that bill in less than ten or twelve days after it is taken up. Then, suppose it should pass this body without amendment, and be sent to the President in the shape in which it came from the House; he then would have ten days within which to approve it, or return it with his objections, if he should think proper to pursue that course. That would carry us beyond the period now proposed to be fixed for the consideration of the bill immediately before us.

Again, if the Senate should think it expedient, as it is very likely they will, to make amendments to the homestead bill, those amendments will have to be transmitted to the other House for concurrence or rejection. This will probably delay the bill some days longer; how long I do not know. I consider, therefore, a postponement of the whole subject for two weeks not likely to answer the purpose of ascertaining the sentiments of the Executive in relation to the homestead bill. In other words, we shall be just as much in the dark two weeks hence in regard to what are intended to be the principles asserted by the message, or what limitations are intended to be extended in practice to the general principles laid down, as we are now. I am willing to agree to any postponement which gentlemen may consider necessary for the purpose of ascertaining the sentiments of the Executive, let it be for three or four weeks if necessary.

These are considerations which I think are entitled to great weight now, before we proceed to fix a day when it is probable that we shall not attain the object intended in the mean time. If the intention is to ascertain whether the principles announced in the message are meant to be applied to the homestead bill, by a response from the President to our action on that bill, I am willing to postpone the consideration of this subject until that time shall arrive.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I am under a strong impression that the ancient practice of the Senate was, when a veto message came in upon a bill originating here, to proceed at once to the consideration of the subject, and to continue that consideration from day to day until the question should be settled. I do not mean to say by this that no sort of business whatever possibly could intervene. Something indispensably necessary might be occasionally taken up. But the impression which I have is, that the course which I have stated, has been the usual habit of the Senate. Certainly, if it has been, it must have originated from the impression derived from the words of the Constitution, that you shall enter the message on the Senate's Journal, and then proceed to the consideration of it as a matter entitled, in consequence of its importance, to priority over other measures. I know very well the language of the Constitution will admit of a different construction; but still, I think that a plain man, reading the Constitution as it stands, would be inclined to the impression that it is the duty of the House to which a veto message may be transmitted, after entering it on its Journal, to proceed at once to its consideration, and certainly to do so within a reasonable time. I think this has been the uniform practice. Now, sir, in the case referred to by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, I take it for granted, from what he read from the Journal, that there was a debate on that veto message, as there has been on all veto messages that I ever heard of here, and of course it was postponed from day to day.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator will allow me to say, that there never was one word of debate upon it, until the day when it was disposed of. It was taken up, and postponed from day to day without debate.

Mr. CLAYTON. Has the honorable Senator looked at the record of debate?

Mr. BADGER. I have looked at the record of the debates. The first day was fixed, and then it was postponed until the next day, and so on; but there was no discussion until the Thursday after the Monday on which the veto came in.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, sir, I do not know anything in regard to that particular precedent to which the Senator has referred; but I have learned from another gentleman, that complaint was made at the time, in the other House, that the Constitution was disregarded in this very particular, in the Senate not proceeding to the consideration of the message immediately. However, sir, be this as it may, would it not be more respectful to the President, and is it not due to ourselves, that we should go on within this measure, until we know the sense of Congress in regard to it? I do not mean to press the measure in hot haste, so as to prevent the Senate giving it a full and thorough consideration. It is entitled to that; but I think it is fairly entitled to precedence over other subjects; and whenever its consideration is called for by any member of the Senate, it ought, in pursuance of the spirit of the Constitution, to be taken up and considered.

I do not suffer myself, in giving the opinion which I do in regard to this measure, to be influenced at all by other matters. I have nothing now to do with the homestead bill, or the Pacific railroad bill, or anything else. If this subject is to be taken up, I shall desire on some suitable occasion, when no other gentleman wishes the floor, to give my views briefly in relation to this veto message; but I am quite ready to go on with the consideration of it now, and it is my impression that it is our duty to do so. I am ready to vote upon it to-day.

Mr. CLAY. So am I.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I concur entirely, Mr. President, with the view taken by the Senator from Delaware in reference to this question. I think the Senate owes it to itself, and to the dignity of the occasion, to pursue the course which he has indicated. I am decidedly averse to the proposition of my friend from Illinois, to postpone action on this question until another legislative measure to which he has alluded shall be passed upon by this body. Sir, no Senator, no created man, is more devotedly or ardently the friend of that measure to which he has alluded—the homestead bill—than I am. I am its friend, whether the President be so or not. I never connect one measure with another; nor do I wait for, or look to, Executive vetoes. I vote as becomes my position and my constituents, and the duty that I owe to them.

I believe, then, that it is our duty now to proceed to the consideration of the President's message, and to reply, by affirmative or negative action, to the positions which he has taken in that message. For one, sir, I return him my thanks for the veto which he has sent here. I believe it is right in every word, phrase, and sentence. I furthermore believe that if he had not vetoed this bill, he would have been false to that party whose representative he was in the last presidential election—false to the resolutions of that convention which nominated him, and which unanimously resolved and re-resolved that the Democratic party was opposed to a distribution of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands.

These are my views. I regard this bill, as I stated in some remarks which I submitted when it was passed by this body, as distribution in the worst phase that has come up here—worse than ever the genius of Henry Clay conceived—far more odious than that which John C. Calhoun, Silas Wright, and Thomas H. Benton, deprecated in the memorable session of 1841:—ay, sir, a distribution, not of money from our Treasury, but of lampblack and rags, French assignats, from the Treasury of the United States, to the value of ten millions of acres of land to the sovereign States of the Union.

Sir, the Senator from Vermont spoke yesterday of unclean, dishonorable, or corrupt legislation touching the public lands. My position as a representative from one of the new States, and my position upon the Committee on Public Lands, of which he is a member, requires that I should demand from him, in this presence, whether he meant to insinuate that any corrupt or dishonest bill had emanated from that committee, or from any one of the new States, so far as he is cognizant of those transactions? And if so, I demand of him that he now disclose, in its full length, and breadth, and extent, every particle of that corruption or unclean legislation. Sir, I make the demand with perfect respect to the gentleman. I do, sir, because of our kindly personal relations; but this is a great question, and his insinuation, if I may call it such, may affect individuals. I make the demand with perfect respect. I pause for a reply.

Mr. FOOT. Mr. President, I have only to say that I have made no imputation of the sort which is now attributed to me; and the publication of my remarks, as taken down by the reporter, will show that an entire misconception has been placed upon them. I have cast no imputation upon the action of the committee of which I am a member; no imputation upon the action of this or of the other House; no imputation upon the new States of this Union. No man here, as I took occasion to state yesterday, has voted more liberally in favor of the application for appropriations for various purposes by the new States than myself. I had no reference to any past legislation upon the subject of the public lands. This, I think, is a sufficient disclaimer.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Perfectly so.

Mr. FOOT. An entire misapprehension has been placed upon the remarks which I submitted.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. In that misapprehension I am not alone, as the Senator knows, from the construction immediately placed on his language by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Doga-

LAS;) and neither of us, as he knows, has any disposition to do him injustice, because of our personal respect for him.

Mr. FOOT. Certainly not.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, I said that I regarded this as one of the most fatal bills, one of the most ill-advised, looking at our complex but admirable system of Government, that has been passed by this or any other Congress. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] was clearly right, when, on yesterday, he remarked that this bill had not been thoroughly discussed, or considered by the Senate. How long has it been since the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] who, notwithstanding his notions upon certain slavery questions, has some good views respecting State rights, defeated a kindred bill? Not more than two years since. What, then, were the provisions of this "Miss Dix bill," as it is called? Nothing more nor less than that New York should hold in the very heart of Iowa or California more than ten counties, in superficial area; to hold that land up at any price which she might choose to fix upon it; hold it there as Indian reservations or other reservations have been held in the center of some of the new States, to be increased sufficiently in amount to control the entire politics of the States where the lands lie. How long has it been since the respectable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Underwood] moved his amendment to the Iowa railroad bill; that the States in which there were no public lands should, as States, be allowed to hold land within the borders of other sovereign States of this Union? How long is it since the provision originated for issuing this bank rag currency, stamped all over with pictures, to be issued at the Treasury? Only since it was shown in the discussion on Mr. Underwood's amendment to the Iowa land bill, but about two years since, that the proposition, if carried, would lead to domestic insurrection and bloodshed. Then originated, for the sake of getting rid of the difficulty of allowing one sovereignty to hold lands within another, this paper money invention. It is due to a respectable member of the other House, [Mr. Bennett, of New York,] to say, that his genius conceived this mode of getting rid of the difficulties of allowing one sovereign State to hold land within the heart of another, controlling its politics and disturbing its peace and harmony.

Sir, without intending to make any imputation upon any human being, and least of all, upon the dignified Senator from Vermont, let me tell him that, without intending it—and I know he does not intend it—his bill would have produced scenes of speculation, scenes of disgrace, and of plunder, and pillage, such as this country has never witnessed but for the wise interposition of President Pierce's veto. It was, in my opinion, the commencement of a system which, if it had been prolonged, as it certainly would but for the death blow which the President has struck it, would have swallowed up the whole of the public lands, and have established a system of trading and peddling at Albany, Montpelier, and other seats of government, under the control of the dominant majority which has heretofore proved so fatal. These cords of French assignats would have been taken there to be squandered and bargained off by corrupt legislative majorities, to control and influence the politics of our distant States. The lands would be disposed of at those seats of government for political purposes. Cords of these bank bills would be carried off from the Treasury of the United States, and bought up at low prices by favorites, who would go and locate them on the public lands (rich as the Delta of Egypt) in Iowa, Wisconsin, Louisiana, and other new States.

These were the provisions of the bill. It is a revival of that old system of selling lands at the court-houses and seats of government, which led to so much confusion. What then would become of the provision that the land should be applied to the support of the insane? Why, it would be disregarded, just as the sovereign States once disregarded your mandate, put in the shape of law, that they should send their members of Congress here by districts, instead of by States. The State of Mississippi was one of the States which refused to comply, and my friend from California reminds me that his State now elects her Representatives by general ticket, in the face of your law. So it would be in the disposition of this bank paper. The States would do as they please with it, and where is your power to coerce, or compel, or to alter their legislation? You have none.

But, sir, so far as I am concerned, I never stop to inquire what the President will do with the homestead or any other bill. He has sent us here his veto of this bill. I am ready to record my vote on that veto. I am ready to proceed to that reconsideration of the bill which the Constitution requires. I hope we shall do so, according to the former usages of the Senate. I am unwilling to postpone its consideration for any longer time than is necessary for deliberation. Let us pursue the usual course on such occasions. I am anxious and desirous to accommodate my friend from California in anything, but I cannot agree to postpone the consideration of the question, with a view to action on other kindred subjects.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not wish to procrastinate this debate, but I have a word to say to my friend from Iowa. He seems, I think, to misunderstand the object of my proposed postponement of this measure. The object which I have in view is this: I look upon this as a very favorable occasion afforded to the Senate, to settle and establish some principle in relation to the disposition of the public domain. I regard this as the best chance, the fairest opportunity that has ever been offered to the Senate, since I became a member of the body, to fix some general principles in relation to the future disposition of the public domain. I am as anxious for that as any member of this body. That is my object; that is the reason I wish to postpone this measure. Now, when the honorable Senator from Delaware rises up in his place, and says he thinks it is respectful to the President, that we should not act on the measure at the present time, I should like to know if that honorable Senator entertains a higher respect for the Chief Magistrate, either personally or politically, than I do. I doubt whether any member of this body can say he does. I am not in the habit of making professions; but if any gentleman supposes or believes the object of the proposed postponement is disrespectful to the President, he does me as much injustice as he does the Chief Magistrate. I would be the last man in this body to do an act disrespectful to the President.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. My friend wholly misunderstood me if he supposes that I attributed any such thing to him at all. I only spoke of the necessity of our pursuing the usual course.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not mean to say that the honorable Senator from Iowa intimated anything of the kind; but the honorable Senator from Delaware seemed to intimate, and actually did declare, that he thought it would be respectful to the President that we should act promptly on the message, even to-day. Now, even on that ground, considering that this is a great subject, and that the message embraces, if looked at properly, the future management and disposition of the public domain, I think it is more respectful to the President that we should take sometime to dwell upon this message, and meet it with that deliberation which is due to it. I think we should consider it in all its bearings, in reference to all its principles, not only upon the measure immediately before us, but upon the homestead bill, the Pacific railroad bill, and the grants of land to the new States for railroad purposes, in which the honorable Senator from Iowa takes so deep an interest.

Now, sir, that is the reason why I have made this motion. It is my opinion, honestly entertained, that if we enter upon the discussion of this bill now, which will open the door to constitutional arguments, there is a farewell to the homestead bill, or to any other practical measure in relation to the public lands for this session. The Senator may be a friend of the measure, he may desire its passage; but I assure him that if he goes into this discussion now, he will defeat that measure as effectually as if he votes against it. That is my opinion now. Time will either verify it, or show that he is right. I say it is our duty to take up the homestead bill and consider it, and at the same time we shall be considering the bearing, and import, and future effect of the great measure now upon your table.

Now, sir, with regard to the veto power, allow me to say that I regard it as a fortunate power; and I think the exercise of it, even in this case, may be a fortunate matter. And why? Because it will bring us to review our action upon these subjects, and what is still better, it will bring us to establish some principles that will govern us in our future conduct in relation to this important matter—the disposition of the public domain. My opinion, however, is, that if we take up this message, and enter into a discussion of it now, we shall never see the homestead bill, nor any other practical bill relative to the public lands carried through Congress at this session.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, there seems to be a great anxiety, on the part of certain gentlemen here, to postpone the consideration of this bill, after they have each made some half dozen speeches upon it. I rise now, however, to give notice, that if the blank in the resolution is not filled as the Senator from Illinois proposes to fill it—for I understand the question is now upon the motion of that Senator to fill it with next Monday two weeks—I shall move to fill that blank with next Monday, believing that propriety dictates that we should at an early day proceed to the consideration of this measure. While I am up, I wish to say that I intend to be heard at some length upon this veto message, and upon this bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator has a speech, I suppose, and he wants to make it.

Mr. PETTIT. The Senator from Illinois says that I have a speech, and I want to make it. Let me say to that Senator, that if he had been as industrious as I was last night, sitting up to one o'clock examining these questions, he would be as well, in fact better, prepared than I am for their discussion; for he has powers for mastering a subject with greater facility than I have.

Mr. SHIELDS. Do not have that reported. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETTIT. Well, sir, I have nothing to conceal from reporters. [Laughter.] I propose to discuss this question, as I have said, at some length. I propose to show that the power of this Government (even at the time of the acceptance of these grants while we were under the Confederacy) to dispose of the territory, of the soil, of the public land was unlimited; that it ever has been and now is unlimited; and that the unconstitutionality of this bill—for that it is unconstitutional I have no doubt—consists not in the granting, or giving away, or disposition of the soil, but it consists in two other things. Its unconstitutionality consists first in usurping the power and authority here to tell States how they shall dispose of the proceeds of the lands granted; and secondly, in directing them to account to us as their masters—a thing that I entirely deny your power to do.

The bill, for these two reasons, in my judgment, is unconstitutional; but not because it disposes of land generally, in any form or in any manner whatever. I take the broadest ground on that subject, and wish not to be misunderstood. The bill is objected to for another reason, not reaching the point of unconstitutionality, but as to its inexpediency and impropriety. That objection, in the language of the President, is that it makes us almoners, to take care of all the indigent, all the needy, and all the suffering; to usurp the offices of charity, the offices of humanity, that properly belong to the States. For that reason, if for no other, it ought, in my judgment, to have been vetoed. I fully and cordially approve of the result.

I believe that a fair construction and fair reading of the veto message will not put this veto upon the basis that we have not power to dispose of the lands, but upon the other ground which I have named, that we have not the power to direct how their proceeds shall be applied, and how, at what time, and under what circumstances, they shall be accounted for by the States to us. I shall endeavor, and I think I shall be able to show, when the proper time arrives, that the veto does not involve the principles of the homestead bill, and will not necessarily bring a veto from the President upon that bill.

But, sir, I did not rise now to discuss the subject, nor to bring these questions to the consideration of the Senate, but to ask that some definite action be taken. It is due, as the Senator from Delaware has properly said, that we should at a reasonable and an early day, proceed to the consideration of this question. Nor do I think, its discussion will, by any means, occupy the whole residue of this session, and deprive us of the opportunity of considering other important measures. The very fact that important measures are behind this, and are to be considered after it, will shorten the deliberation and consideration on this bill, and for that very reason, if for no other, I should ask that an early day be assigned for its discussion. Then, if the blank be not filled, as proposed with Monday two weeks, I shall move to fill it with next Monday.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I think the experience of to-day has demonstrated that the best policy is to proceed at once to the consideration of the message from the President. I believe, with the Senator from Delaware, that such was the intention of the framers of the Constitution, when they used the phraseology which they employed in that provision of the Constitution which has reference to this subject. I know of no public considerations why we should not immediately proceed to entertain and dispose of this question. The fair, legitimate presumption, is that every Senator examined it before he originally gave his vote. I know it was said yesterday by my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER,] that this matter had not been considered—that it had not been discussed. It is true there was but a limited discussion in the Senate upon it at this session; but the presumption is, that every Senator investigated the question before he proceeded to decide upon it. For myself, I may say that there never has been a bill introduced in this body for which I was so anxious to give my vote as this bill, which has been vetoed by the Executive. It was a bill which appealed to all the sympathies of my heart. It was one which appealed to all the warm and generous impulses of my nature; but, upon calm and patient investigation of the important principles involved, I dared not, as an American Senator, with the obligations of an oath to support the Constitution resting upon me, give my vote for it. I was therefore reluctantly compelled to vote against its passage.

The principles announced by the Executive in this message, are those by which I have been governed since my entrance into public life. I am a strict constructionist. I do not believe in that latitudinous construction of the Constitution which invests Congress with power and authority to do whatever the "common defense and general welfare," in their judgment, may demand. That class of politicians has usually been styled expediency politicians. I have been compelled to apply the constitutional test to all questions upon which I am compelled to vote; and the application of that test to this bill compelled me to vote against it.

Now, sir, I say that we have been discussing this question to-day, and we may as well proceed with that discussion. There are some important bills that are yet to be disposed of. There is the one which has been alluded to by my colleague, and, for personal reasons, connected with himself, I am exceedingly desirous that it shall be acted upon within the next two weeks. Then, again, there is the homestead bill. Some Senators think the general principles enunciated in this message cover that bill. That is my opinion. If all the principles announced in the communication made to us yesterday be correct, the homestead bill is a violation of the Constitution. But, so far as that point is concerned, I desire to remain uncommitted until I can hear the discussion, until I can hear, particularly, my friend from South Carolina, who is almost the father of strict construction.

Mr. President, why can we not proceed to discuss this question now? We are in the habit of adjourning over, oftentimes, from Thursday to Monday. This is a very bad practice. It has been introduced by my friend from North Carolina; and such has been the unbounded confidence I have usually reposed in him, that I have very generally followed his example, and voted for all motions to adjourn over. Now, I propose to reform, and to devote Friday and Saturday to business, instead of visiting the Departments; and I must say that the Senators who make that excuse have no business at the Departments at all. [Laughter.] Nobody has any business there except the representatives of the new States, and they have more than they can attend to. I know that it is so in regard to myself. I am sure that I have more business there than I can attend to. My friend from North Carolina has usually urged that as a pretext; and I venture the prediction that he does not have business at the Departments once a month. [Laughter.]

Mr. BADGER. Will my friend allow me to state that I have made the motion for that very reason. I have no business there; and I thought, therefore, the motion had better come from me, rather than put any of my friends from the new States to the necessity of making an application for their personal convenience. [Laughter.]

Mr. WELLER. I knew the motion was dictated by some benevolent motive on the part of the Senator, but I did not know that it was out of personal consideration to me. [Renewed laughter.] Now, why can we not proceed at once to the consideration of this question?

Mr. BRODHEAD. We are considering it.

Mr. WELLER. The Senator from Pennsylvania says we are considering it. I do not know that we are considering it. We are undoubtedly discussing it, but discussion does not always lead to consideration. Some speak without any consideration.

Mr. BADGER. We are talking about it.

Mr. WELLER. I shall vote against the postponement to next Monday week. I think it is due to the President, it is due to ourselves, it is due to the country, that we should proceed at once to dispose of this question. I believe it was the design of the Constitution that we should proceed at once to reconsider a bill which is vetoed by the President. The effect of the veto is simply this: It is, in effect, a motion to reconsider, and that motion to reconsider puts the bill in a position where it requires a vote of two thirds to pass it. Does any body believe that two thirds of the Senate will ever vote to pass this bill? There is not a Senator here who believes it. Then why continue a long discussion on the question when no practical good can result from it, and when it is known in advance, that a majority of two thirds cannot be obtained in a full Senate for its passage? I undertake to say, upon a nice calculation which has been made by a friend of mine, who is "strong" in figures, that there cannot be even a majority of this Senate in favor of this bill, and that upon a full vote there will be thirty-one Senators found recording themselves against it. Then, wherefore postpone it for two weeks, when you know in advance that the bill can never become a law? It is one which, in my judgment, ought never to become a law. I know, sir, that it is one upon which strong appeals have been made to the sympathies of Senators; but that is a very unsafe guide of action. A Senator had better always keep his eye upon the power of attorney under which he acts—that is, the Constitution. The people never intended that we should travel beyond the Constitution; but whenever we are in a charitable mood, let us feel in our own pockets, and not in Uncle Sam's. That is the way to show our charity and benevolence; not by a violation of the Constitution, not by transcending the authority vested in us by that written instrument which constitutes our power of attorney, but let us show it by applying our hands to our own purses to relieve the distressed and the indigent.

Mr. President, I do not know whether, if the discussion is to be continued, I shall debate this question further. I have not much to say about it. I have not spoken now because I desired to hear myself speak, but because there were other Senators who had plunged into this debate, and I endeavored to show that we had better go on with it now. If we do go on with it now, and if my friend from North Carolina shall have the temerity to move an adjournment over, I give him notice now that I shall abandon him, and vote against the motion.

Mr. GWIN. I will withdraw the resolution, so that we may now take up the message.

Mr. PETTIT. Then I move to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Monday week.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has a proposition before the Senate.

Mr. GWIN. I accepted the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, leaving the day blank, and therefore I can withdraw it. I withdraw it, because I wish the discussion to go on now, in order that we may devote next week to another subject.

Mr. MALLORY. As I understand, the motion now before the Senate is to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Monday week.

The PRESIDENT. There is no motion before the Senate, as the proposition of the Senator from California has been withdrawn.

Mr. MALLORY. Then I move to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Monday next.

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon that motion.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, yesterday upon a simple motion to print, which seemed to me to be a matter of course, a debate sprang up which involved the entire policy of the country upon the subject of the public lands. It involved a great many other things, and occupied the body throughout the remainder of the day. Now, upon a proposition to postpone, we are again discussing not only the principles upon which the public lands are and ought to be administered, but we are discussing the principles of bills which have already been passed and determined. I am in favor of going on with the discussion of this bill now, because we are discussing it, and will continue to discuss it. Every gentleman who rises upon the floor proclaims that he is not discussing it, but that the time for debate will come, and that he will be prepared, at that time, to debate the question fully. I think, therefore, we had better take it up now, and commence the regular discussion immediately. Though I have made a motion to postpone until Monday, I am in favor of going on with the discussion now, if we can; but I am for a postponement to Monday next, in preference to any other postponement which can be made.

But, sir, one reason given for the postponement by the honorable Senator from Illinois, was that since the period when he first became a member of this body, there never has been so favorable an opportunity for taking up and establishing a general system for the administration of the public lands, as the present. It is admitted upon all sides that no more important subject can come before this body than the establishment of some just and equal policy, satisfactory to all, in reference to the administration of the public lands. The honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] depicted to us the other day, humorously, how this subject enters into almost every presidential canvass; and, as was said by him, every man who comes to these Halls comes with some predisposed policy in reference to these lands, and yet he finds himself in opposition to a large number of his brother Senators and Representatives.

Well, sir, if this be so important a measure as the Senator from Illinois supposes, why should we discuss it indirectly? He recommends us to take up the homestead bill first, and he thinks that by discussing that bill, we shall obtain a knowledge of the subject now before us; or, in other words, that we should discuss the merits of this subject indirectly through the merits of another. Why, sir, the merits of this measure involve the merits of the homestead bill. It comes necessarily before us; and if we determine, by a large majority, against the principles involved here, it will influence many, as a matter of course, to go against the homestead bill. If you were to put both in a fair position, and ask which was entitled to priority, from the argument of the Senator from Illinois, I would say, as a matter of course, that we should take up and dispose of this subject first.

Mr. President, it is apparent to me from a little inquiry and comparison around the Chamber, that this veto is perfectly safe. Two thirds of this body will not vote against it. I hardly think any discerning member of the Senate can come to any other conclusion. Then why not take it up now? Why postpone it? As to the matter of disrespect to the Executive, I think it will be no disrespect to him whether we postpone it or not. Many of the friends of the Administration, I see, are for the postponement, and it would be exceedingly unkind to suppose, for an instant, that they mean the slightest shadow of disrespect to the President. But, sir, a respect for the important measure itself, the necessity which the Senator from Illinois has pointed out, for the establishment of a great policy for the whole country, should induce us to discuss and consider the subject now.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I shall not make an apology for not discussing this question upon the motion to postpone. I have waited all the morning, in hopes that there might be a question taken; and I seconded the motion of the honorable Senator from Florida for a postponement to Monday; but, to my great surprise, he has come out in an elaborate speech against the motion itself.

Mr. MALLORY. I shall vote for the motion. I was giving my preconceived opinions; but I made the motion to postpone until Monday, and I intend to vote for it.

Mr. SEWARD. Then, all I have to say is, that I prefer to have the subject postponed until Monday, in order that we may have a discussion of the merits of the question itself—a deliberate and considerate one—a discussion which will enlighten us. It is very apparent that this sporadic, irregular discussion, bringing in everything foreign to the subject-matter, is not calculated to fit us for a deliberate review of the question before us; and, as there are but two legislative days between this and Monday, I hope it may be agreed on all hands that we drop this question for to-day, take up what other business we have before us—and there is enough of it—and come here prepared, on next Monday, to give this subject a considerate, deliberate, regular, ordinary, and orderly disposition; so that, while we are discussing it, we may avow that we are doing so, and that the responsibility may rest on each member to do it with such deliberation, candor, and ability as he can bring to bear upon it.

Mr. GWIN. I withdrew my motion to postpone, for the purpose of bringing up the discussion now. I believe we can discuss and dispose of the question now as well as hereafter. It is well known to the Senate that I wish to get another bill, which I deem of great interest, before the body for action. My object is to get this subject disposed of until that can be acted upon. Therefore, as a test question, to see whether we are to have any more talking on this subject now or not, I move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Florida, to postpone the consideration of this bill until next Monday.

Mr. BADGER. That motion carries the bill with it.

Mr. GWIN. No, sir; I think not. That is a separate question. My motion is, that the motion of the Senator from Florida lie on the table.

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to a point of order. Does not that carry the bill with it?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly it does.

Mr. GWIN. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope we shall go on with the debate now.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida, to postpone the further consideration of this subject until Monday next.

Mr. GWIN. Is it in order to move to strike out "next Monday," and insert "Monday week?"

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order.

Mr. GWIN. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brown, Butler, Clay, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Morton, Norris, Pettit, Seward, Slidell, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, and Williams—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Brodhead, Chase, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Fish, Geyer, Gwin, James, Jones of Tennessee, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Walker, and Weller—20.

So the motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill, reported from the select committee, to provide for the construction of a railroad from the valley of the Mississippi to the Pacific ocean, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall not take up that bill. I trust we shall go on to-day with the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. GWIN. The Indian appropriation bill is not suffering for time. The fiscal year is not yet out, and we can act upon that bill at any time.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon the motion of Mr. GWIN to take up the Pacific railroad bill, resulted—yeas 20, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Bright, Chase, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, James, Jones of Tennessee, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Slidell, Sumner, Walker, and Weller—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Byard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Cooper, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Johnson, Mallory, Norris, Pettit, Sebastian, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, and Williams—23.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855, the pending question being on the amendment reported by Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to insert the following:

To the Creek nation of Indians, in full for all demands against the United States, the sum of $500,000, in payment for eight million acres of land at six and a quarter cents per acre, taken from the friendly Creeks without compensation, by the treaty or capitulation of Fort Jackson, of August 8, 1814.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, when I was interrupted yesterday by the message which was received from the President, I had reached that point in the explanation of this case which brought me to the statement of the manner in which the friendly Creeks had been treated by the capitulation of Fort Jackson. It had been shown, I think, that, although they had been faithful allies of the United States; had fought against the hostile members of their own tribe, and against the British, and in favor of the United States, under the American flag, and under the command of the American military officers, yet, when peace came to be made, they were compelled to pay the expenses of the war; and that, so far from the treaty or the capitulation taking the form of compelling the hostiles to pay the damages, it assumed the form of compelling the friendly allies of the United States to assume the position of hostiles for the purpose, enter into a capitulation, and give up their country. I am sustained in this history of the matter, not only by the more ancient documents connected with the subject, but by the information, the admissions, the statements, and, I may say, the reports, which have been made by the Indian Bureau and the Department of the Interior recently. I have them before me, but they are too lengthy to refer to in this explanation. I will simply advert to them, and say that the history of this matter which I have given, is not only correctly stated in the memorial and in the documentary history, but expressly admitted to be true by facts which we have, not only from the proper Department of the present, but of the late Administration.

This capitulation was made with these Indians by General Jackson. Agent Hawkins, at the time, in communicating with the Department, expressed his astonishment at the manner in which the conclusion of peace was conducted. I do not mean by what I have said to censure General Jackson's conduct; or, if it were in my power, to throw a shade upon his memory. In his report to the Department of War, or to the President, he gives what seem to be very strong State reasons for his conduct upon that occasion. In that report, he lays the condition of the country before the administration; he states that he felt himself bound by considerations of public policy to take possession for the United States of the country which then bordered upon the Spanish dominions. We know, sir, that at that time we were involved in difficulty in reference to the Spanish dominions. We know they were made, as it were, a harbor of refuge for the enemies of the country; a kind of recruiting ground for rebels; and that General Jackson had been forced to enter, what it was claimed then he had not the right to do, a friendly country, seize upon munitions there collected, and not only that, but we know he there seized upon Arbuthnot and Armbrister; that he had them shot for insurrection, and for stirring up difficulties in the country.

Seeing this state of facts existing in regard to that region, he felt himself under the necessity of depriving the Indians of that country, and, if possible, placing our southern border in such a condition that it might be more easily defended; or, at all events, that it might not be in a condition to be made so easily a point of annoyance to the Government. These were the reasons which he assigned. These are not his words, but I have given the general idea which he gave for treating the friendly Creeks as he did. He was unable to assemble the hostiles. They were not there to treat with him. What became of them? Why, when they found that they were conquered, that they would be looked upon as enemies, and would probably be severely punished if they could be caught, they made good their escape into Florida, joined the Seminoles, and have remained a portion of the Seminoles, I believe, ever since. Then he had no one to treat with but the friendly Creeks. The direction was, that the treaty should assume the form of a capitulation; and in order that he might get a capitulation of that country, he forced the chiefs of the friendly Creeks into the position which has been named. They then executed this treaty, or these articles of capitulation, but let it be borne in mind that when they did so they protested against it most solemnly. They not only protested in fact, but they required, before signing it, than an instrument should be drawn up declaratory and explanatory of their views. An instrument was drawn up, in which it was alleged and conceded that they were the owners of the country; that they alone had the right to dispose of it; and that they had received no equivalent for the cession which they made by the capitulation. That instrument was drawn up at their request, contemporaneously with the articles of capitulation, and sent on, as their part of the treaty, to the War Department. That will be found set out at length in the State Papers on Indian Affairs, abstracts of which are incorporated in the report from the Department of the Interior, to which I have referred. In that report, it is stated that this was their understanding of the treaty by which they had been forced, as it were, to capitulate, to cede their country, though they had received nothing for it; and that whatever may be due to any person, to any portion of the tribes for this land, is due to them.

Well, sir, what was the extent of the country taken from them? I have here the report of the Department of the Interior, by which it appears that over twenty-four millions of acres of land were taken by the capitulation. Deducting from it what was left really within the hostile country, and with which the friendly Creeks did not deem that they had anything to do, deducting what was left between the Coosa and the Tallapoosa, we still have an amount of ten millions of acres which have been taken from them; but, sir, the committee do not report in favor of paying them for ten millions, but only in favor of paying them for eight millions of acres.

Mr. HUNTER. How do you make out the ten millions?

Mr. WALKER. That is according to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, received from him yesterday. It appears from that report, that the amount of land taken from the friendly Creeks was upwards of twenty-four millions of acres; but, deducting from it what was left in the really hostile country, we find that over ten millions were taken from them. The committee have reported in favor of paying them for eight millions of acres of land; and the rate we have now fixed is different from that which was fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He, after consultation with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, addressed this letter to the Secretary of the Interior:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

"OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, January 21, 1853.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter addressed to you on the 18th instant, by the Hon. R.

W. JOHNSON, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, inclosing a copy of my report of the 17th instant, on the claim of the Creek Indians for lands relinquished to the Government by the treaty of Fort Jackson, in 1814, requesting an estimate of the amount, which, in your judgment, should be appropriated on that account.

"Referring to my report for my views in regard to the merits of this claim, and considering the great length of time that it has remained unsatisfied, I am of opinion that twenty cents per acre would be a moderate compensation for the lands belonging to the friendly Creeks, and relinquished to the Government by said treaty."

That was the opinion of the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs, (Mr. Lea.) The Committee on Indian Affairs have taken no such estimate of the value, as their criterion; but, after reducing the amount acknowledged to have been ceded by the friendly Creeks, without any consideration whatever, from ten to eight millions of acres, they have, in place of reporting twenty cents per acre, provided merely for the payment at the rate of six and a quarter cents per acre. Thus they have not only brought down the amount of land, but brought down the compensation to be paid for it, from the amount mentioned by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, twenty cents to six and a quarter cents per acre. Eight million acres, at six and a quarter cents, make up the amount proposed to be appropriated by the amendment.

Mr. BELL. What does the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommend?

Mr. WALKER. The present Commissioner has sent us a report, in which he estimates the quantity of land at even more than was estimated by the previous Commissioner, but I do not think he gives an opinion in regard to its value. I do not know that he has been addressed on that subject. We addressed him an inquiry as to the amount of this land which had been sold, and the amount of proceeds which had been received by the Government from those sales. That matter he referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and the Land Commissioner said he thought it would take about six months to ascertain the facts. There is, however, an estimate somewhere among the documents which, perhaps, approximates somewhere to the truth; and from that it appears that the Government of the United States has sold seven million five hundred and seventy-one thousand three hundred and fifty-four acres of those lands, leaving yet unsold six million seven hundred and thirteen thousand four hundred and forty-six acres, which, at the usual minimum price of public lands, would amount to $8,391,807 50. The Government has received from the lands sold, $11,359,947 98. This makes about $19,000,000 which the Government will have received, if it shall sell all the lands for the minimum price. These lands were obtained from friendly allies, without ever paying them one farthing, but by forcing them into the position of enemies. Now, sir, at this late day, the committee propose to pay them, as a consideration for the subject-matter of this great speculation on the part of the Government, the sum to which eight millions of acres amount at six and a quarter cents per acre—that is, $500,000.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the Senator allow me to propose a question to him?

Mr. WALKER. Certainly.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It is in reference to the previous history of this application. Why is it before us at this late day?

Mr. WALKER. I will give the answer which is given in the memorial itself. It will be borne in mind that, at the time of this capitulation, the Indians were promised indemnity for spoiliations committed on their personal property, their villages, and houses; and $195,000, I believe, were appropriated for those personal losses. About half that amount was paid at an early period, but the balance was withheld. The reason why they have not ventured to present their claim for these lands is, that they have not been able to obtain satisfaction for their other injuries. We know the fact to be that, up to 1850—the time when this claim was brought before the Senate—they were continually urging payment for injuries to their personal property, and they did not get that until that late day, when a balance of $87,000 was paid to them.

Mr. BENJAMIN. They did not get that remainder until 1851?

Mr. WALKER. I think not. But the chairman of the committee is, perhaps, better posted on that subject than I am.

Mr. TOOMBS. They are getting some of it in this very bill. The chairman of the Committee on Finance reported a provision for them as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. WALKER. I was going on to remark that I believe they have not all been paid yet. They have been prosecuting another claim; they have been prosecuting a demand which they had for injuries to their personal property, their villages, houses, &c., until the time when this claim originated; and, I believe, I may safely say that the whole of the claim for personal injuries has not yet been paid.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe all have been paid, with the exception of two who were left out in the census. That is what the Senator from Georgia referred to, I suppose.

Mr. TOOMBS. Yes, sir. I say a portion of the claims for injuries committed by the hostiles during the last war, has not yet been paid, and that the Committee on Finance have reported for the payment of some of them in this bill.

Mr. WALKER. That is the only reason that I can give in answer to the Senator from Louisiana. Whether it be a good one or not, I do not pretend to argue; but I can say that these Indians have been most singularly ill-treated, if my judgment does not fail me entirely. When they have been treated as they were, it seems to me not at all surprising that they should have long since despaired of getting anything like fair play from the Government. The Government made a promise to indemnify them for personal injuries, and yet it has delayed the fulfillment of the promise till now. Is it surprising that this should have operated on the Indians, particularly when the Government was so prompt to make provision for the payment of the citizens of Georgia, and, I believe, of Alabama, who had sustained injury during this war, and when it so promptly set aside funds to pay for those damages, and when, after everything had been proved up against that fund which could possibly be, there were yet $100,000 of it left, which were paid over to Georgia. These Indians saw that this sum of $100,000, which could not be claimed by anybody, was, for some cause or other, without reason, rhyme, or justice, absolutely ordered to be paid over, in gross, to the Governor of Georgia, and it was done. The residuum of the fund which was set apart to pay indemnity to the citizens of Georgia could not be exhausted by the sums proved, and a balance of $100,000 was left; and General Jackson ordered it to be paid over to the Governor of Georgia. Since I have been in the Senate of the United States, the injustice of that provision was seen to be so clear that Congress appropriated the money to the Indians again. When these facts are considered, I do not think it at all wonderful that these people should have slumbered on their rights.

Mr. TOOMBS. Will the Senator allow me to correct him in reference to General Jackson? I will do that old General, though I have never had a very strong regard for him, the justice to say that that was not done by him, but by an act of Congress, which was passed in 1834. The original appropriation, I believe, was for $340,000 to pay for certain damages; and in Mr. Monroe's time a number of claims were ruled out, but during General Jackson's administration, the balance referred to was paid over by legislation to Georgia.

Mr. WALKER. Then I take back that remark; but I thought I recollected enough of the history of the matter to know that Congress had not interposed.

Mr. TOOMBS. Congress did it; but being satisfied subsequently of the wrong, which I have no doubt they committed, they passed, within the last six or seven years, an act paying to the Indians, the money which had been improperly applied to Georgia. It was paid to Georgia in 1834, during the administration of General Jackson. I helped, myself, in getting the act passed for paying the money over to the Indians.

Mr. WALKER. Then I will ask that the portion of my speech in relation to General Jackson be stricken out; for certainly there are few greater admirers of him and of his memory than I am; but I was of the opinion that the history of the transaction which I have given was correct. Be that point as it may, these Indians did not get justice in that particular until within the last few years; since I have been here, I think it was in the year 1849 or 1850, that they got justice done them in this respect.

Now, sir, it is a question for the Senate to say whether they will make this appropriation to these friendly Indians for what they have certainly been deprived of. They ceded their country to us under peculiar circumstances, and they were deprived of the benefit of it. The benefit of the cession has gone to the United States. That this Government long since derived millions of dollars from that for which it is now proposed to give these Indians a small pittance, cannot be disputed. If, however, the Senate shall deem it now not just to them, or unjust to the Government of the United States to pay them this money, be it so. But I think that, when we are entering upon something like a permanent policy for the Indians, we may, with great propriety, look about us, and see whether we cannot grant them their due. I think we ought, as far as possible, to throw aside the assumption of anything like a position which will place us in the attitude of bestowing charities on them. If they have anything due to them, by which can be created a fund for their support and civilization, it is well that Congress should appropriate it to them. It is better, I believe, to make an appropriation in that light, than to make general appropriations, such as were asked for the other day for the California Indians—as a matter of gratuity. I think the policy is a better one for the country, to pay them what is found to be justly their due, than make independent appropriations for their support, or for the preservation of peace with them. I shall say nothing more on the subject of this claim at present.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow, for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. HUNTER. As the Senator from Arkansas stated yesterday that there was pressing necessity for an Executive session, I will not interpose any objection to the motion, but I wish merely to express the hope that we may be able to take up, and dispose of this bill to-morrow.

Mr. BRIGHT. To-morrow is private bill objection day.

Mr. STUART. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia, that if he desires to do anything of the kind, it will be necessary to move to suspend the rule, and he must give notice of it to-day or he cannot do it.

Mr. HUNTER. I give notice, then, that I will to-morrow move to suspend the rule.

Mr. SUMNER. I would ask if to-morrow is not objection day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Rusk.) It is.

Mr. CHASE. The rule ought not to be suspended to-morrow.

Mr. SUMNER. There is a strong reason for not suspending it then.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to make one request of the Senator from Wisconsin, as he seems to have investigated this subject. It is, that he will turn his mind, first, to the treaty of 1818 with the Creeks, the arrangement made by the party headed by McIntosh, by whom the original claim is stated to have been made; then to the treaty of 1826 with the same Indians, made by Mr. Barbour, the Secretary of War of the late President, Mr. Adams; then to the treaty of 1832 made with these Creeks; and ascertain whether they ever presented such a claim in the first, middle, or final adjustment of all their demands against the Government of the United States; and whether this claim was referred to in any one of those negotiations. I merely want him to turn his mind to it, and see if he can find such a reference.

Mr. WALKER. I will remind the Senator from Georgia that he will find that those treaties related to a different subject-matter. They could not treat in relation to this matter, for the capitulation of Fort Jackson of 1814 had divested them of all interest here. But I will say to him, and furthermore, in reply to the query put to me by the Senator from Louisiana, that it will be found that with the inception of this matter they put their protest in form against the treaty or capitulation of Fort Jackson; and it will be found among the archives of the Government.

Mr. DAWSON. But did they, in any subsequent treaty, claim the payment of damages?

Mr. HUNTER. That will all come up tomorrow, when the question comes up again.

Mr. DAWSON. I merely wished to turn the Senator's attention to it, that he may be able to satisfy me on that point.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope my motion to suspend the rule will be entered on the Journal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be entered.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. SEBASTIAN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened,

And the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 4, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

THE AMERICAN BOOK OF ORATORY.

The SPEAKER. Mr. John Egan addresses me a letter and sends a book, copies of which he desires Congress to purchase. If not objected to, the letter and book, without reading, will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. HAVEN. Where is the letter from?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the letter.

Mr. HAVEN. From what source has it come?

The SPEAKER. From New York.

The Clerk proceeded to read the letter in question, asking the favorable consideration of the Speaker to an accompanying book, and that he might present the same to the House of Representatives, and ask Congress to aid him in its circulation.

Before the letter had been read through, Mr. COBB. Oh, that is enough! What is the title-page of the book?

The SPEAKER. The title-page of the book is "The American Book of Oratory; or Guardian of Liberty." [Laughter.]

Mr. COBB. Oh, we have oratory enough, and too much, in the House at present! I object.

THE TERRITORY OF OREGON.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon, submitted the usual resolution to close debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on bill No. 316, to amend the act approved September 27, 1852, "to create the office of surveyor general of Oregon; and also, an act amendatory thereof, approved February 19, 1853," in five minutes after its consideration shall have been resumed by the committee.

The question being upon the adoption of the resolution—

Mr. HENDRICKS demanded tellers.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to amend the motion of the Delegate from Oregon by striking out "five" and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen," so that debate shall close in fifteen minutes after the committee shall resume the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to amend, by making the time one hour.

Mr. COBB. That is right.

Mr. LANE. I accept the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question then being upon the amendment offered by Mr. LETCHER, it was put; and the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the original motion, as modified; and it was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, here reported as correctly enrolled the bill entitled "An act to change the name of the bark Albion to Mount Vernon;" which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker.

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS IN UTAH.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on Territories have directed me to report a joint resolution in reference to the settlement of the expenses of a board of commissioners in Utah. I send it to the Clerk that it may be read.

The joint resolution was then read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

A joint resolution authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the expenses of a board of commissioners appointed by the Territorial Assembly of Utah to prepare a code of laws.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

SURVEYOR GENERAL OF OREGON, ETC.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session it had under consideration the bill of the House (No. 316) "to amend the act approved September 27, 1850, to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon," &c., and also the act amendatory thereof, approved February 19, 1853.

The question pending is upon the adoption of the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HENN,] to strike out in line four, section four, the word "granted," and insert the word "reserved."

Mr. HENN. It has been customary, in the organization of Territories, to reserve lands for the benefit of universities, and thus secure them from sale, until the Territory came into the Union as a State. When they are granted, I wish to conform to the usual custom in such cases, and I have, therefore, moved to strike out the word "granted" and insert "reserved." If this amendment shall be adopted, I will then move to amend the fourth line of the same section, by striking out the words "and applied to," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "for." The section will then read:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That, in lieu of the two townships of land granted to the Territory of Oregon by the tenth section of the act of 1850, for universities, there shall be reserved to each of the Territories of Washington and Oregon two townships of land of thirty-six sections each, to be selected in legal subdivisions, for university purposes, under the direction of the Legislatures of said Territories, respectively.

The question was severally taken on the proposed amendments, and they were agreed to.

The sixth section was read, as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That all the provisions of this act, and the acts of which it is amendatory, shall be extended to all the lands in Oregon and Washington Territories; and, for the purpose of carrying said acts into effect in said Territories, the President shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a register and receiver for each of said Territories, whose powers, duties, obligations, and responsibilities shall be the same as are now prescribed by law for other land officers and for the surveyor general of Oregon, so far as they apply to such officers. They shall keep their offices at such place as the President shall, from time to time, direct; and their compensation shall be $2,500 each per annum, and office rent; but they shall be entitled to no fees or other emoluments of any kind whatsoever, except the receiver's actual and necessary expenses in depositing; and, on satisfactory proof that either of said officers, or any other officer, has charged or received fees or other rewards not authorized by law, he shall be forthwith removed from office.

Mr. LETCHER. This section, as I understand it, proposes to give to locators upon the public lands in the Territory of Washington, which has just been organized, the right to sell out their claims, as was provided for Oregon in the second section. Now, is that the design of it?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know that it is the duty of the Chair to explain what will be the legal effect of the bill; and that seems to be the inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I should like to know from the gentleman from Oregon what he proposes to accomplish by it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Territory of Washington having been taken from Oregon Territory, and the law having granted land to settlers in the latter Territory, consequently those who lived in the Territory of Oregon prior to its organization were entitled, under its provisions, to the donations made; and I presume the object of this bill is to place the settlers in the Territory of Washington on the same footing as the settlers in the Territory of Oregon have been placed.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, then, it is giving up the lands altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there be objection, the bill will be laid aside, to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House as indicated.

SURVEYOR GENERAL OF UTAH.

The CHAIRMAN. The next bill on the Calendar for consideration is House bill No. 317, entitled "A bill to establish the office of surveyor general of Utah, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes."

Mr. HENN. I move that the committee do now rise, that general debate may be closed in committee on this bill.

[Cries of "No!"]

Mr. KERR. Is the motion debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Has the bill been yet under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not yet been read through.

Mr. JONES. The rule says that the bill shall have its first consideration in committee; and, unless it be considered, it will not be in order to close debate upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read by its title. Unless objected to, the bill will be considered as having been read through the first time for information.

Mr. DISNEY. That was the motion which I was about to submit.

There was no objection.

The question was then taken on the motion that the committee do now rise; and it was disagreed to.

The first section of the bill was read for amendment by the Clerk, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a surveyor general for Utah, whose power and authority, duties, compensation, and allowances for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, &c., shall be the same as now provided by law for the surveyor general of California; and he shall locate his office, from time to time, at such places as may be directed by the President of the United States.

Mr. DISNEY. To make the bill correspond with the one passed on the same subject for New Mexico, I move to strike out all of the section after the word "Utah," and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Whose annual salary shall be $3,000, and whose power, authority, and duties shall be the same as those provided by law for the surveyor general of Oregon; and he shall have proper allowances for clerk hire, office rent, and fuel, not exceeding what now is or hereafter may be allowed by law to the said surveyor general of Oregon; and he shall locate his office, from time to time, at such places as may be directed by the President of the United States.

Mr. HAVEN. I would inquire of the gentleman from Ohio whether this provision is precisely like that in the New Mexico bill?

Mr. DISNEY. Verbatim.

The question was then taken on Mr. DISNEY's amendment; and it was agreed to.

The Clerk then reported the second section.

Mr. DISNEY. In order to make this section correspond with the amendments made to the New Mexico bill, I move to strike out from the first to the seventeenth lines, as follows:

"That to every white male American citizen of the United States, or to every white male inhabitant who has declared his intention to become such, over the age of twenty-one years, who removed to and was residing in said Territory prior to the 1st day of January, 1853, there shall be, and hereby is, donated one half section, or three hundred and twenty acres of land, if single, but if married, one section, or six hundred and forty acres; and to each white male American citizen, who shall have removed, or shall remove to, and settle in said Territory, between the 1st day of January, 1853, and the 1st day of January, 1858, there shall, in like manner, be donated one quarter section, or one hundred and sixty acres, if a single man, or if married, one half section, or three hundred and twenty acres, on condition of actual settlement and cultivation for not less than four years."

and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That to every white male citizen of the United States, or to every white male, over twenty-one years of age, who has declared his intention to become a citizen, and who is now a resident of said Territory, or who prior to the first day of January, 1855, shall remove to and settle in said Territory, and shall continue to reside therein, be donated a quarter section or a hundred and sixty acres, on condition of actual settlement and cultivation for not less than four years."

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to state, for the information of the committee, that it is the identical amendment adopted in the New Mexico bill reported by the committee to the House on yesterday.

The question was then taken on the amendment; and it was agreed to.

The third section was then read, as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That on proof of settlement and cultivation, as required by this act, to the satisfaction of the surveyor general, or other officer designated by law for that purpose, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, a certificate shall be issued to the party entitled, on presentation of which, if approved by the Secretary of the Interior, a patent shall issue thereon: Provided, however, That on the death of any such settler, before the completion of the four years' occupancy and cultivation required by this act, the right shall descend to his heirs-at-law, who shall be entitled to a certificate and patent as aforesaid on proof, as before provided, of continued occupancy and cultivation by such settler to the time of his death: Provided, however, That when lands are claimed under any of the provisions of this act by persons who are not citizens of the United States, patents shall not issue therefor until they become citizens: And provided further, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than one wife.

Mr. BERNHISEL. I move to amend the third section by striking out all after the word "citizen," in the eighteenth line, being the last proviso.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope the committee will adopt the amendment of the Delegate from Utah, [Mr. BERNHISEL.] One reason is, that I do not desire, by any legislation which we may enact here, to recognize any such institution as that in Utah.

Mr. LETCHER. I think it would be as well to leave this matter alone; but the only objection I have to it is, that the committee did not apply the same sort of provision to gentlemen who are to get $3,000 a year out there in the way of salaries. I cannot understand why a section of the bill was reported authorizing a salary of $3,000 to be paid to men who had half a dozen wives without any restriction whatever, and why this third section should be reported with a restriction confined to settlers alone. My object in rising was to ascertain from the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands the reason for this discrimination, why the settler should be punished for having more wives than one, while officeholders, who are in the receipt of large salaries, not only have the benefit of money, but of the women to boot. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. I do not see that this discrimination is any worse than that of inserting the word "white" in these territorial bills. I do not see that it is legislating in favor of any worse institution than we have already prepared to establish by making this other discrimination in favor of white citizens alone. I do not know that it is any worse than legislating in favor of an institution which knows nothing of marriage between a large class of people, which does not even regulate the institution of marriage in any form whatever. And yet, with all the defects of Utah, they have some regulation as to the relation of man and woman. And it seems to me, as far as I can discover, that the institution of the South is calculated to denationalize our Territories, and to prepare them to introduce a system of promiscuous concubinage, so far as one portion of the community is concerned, and to give one portion of the community full power and control over another portion of the community.

I do not particularly object to this amendment, unless the other amendment is also carried; and I see no good policy in making such a distinction as this. I would as lief have Utah come into this Union with their defective institutions as to have a slave State come into it. I do not think that there is more evil in the one than there is in the other; but I am opposed to the admission of either without conformity to the general and well settled principles of the moral laws, as they are known and understood by every reasonable man.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I only take occasion to remark, that nothing surprises me more than to hear gentlemen who never were in a slave State, perhaps, in their lives, discourse ex cathedra on the character of our institutions. Now, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. Davis] speaks upon this subject as though a common indiscriminate intercourse of the sexes existed among a portion of the population of the southern States. But I would have that member to understand that the tie of marriage is, in many respects, to a very large extent, as sacredly observed among the negroes of the South as it is among the people from whom he comes. And I do not hesitate to say that the crime of incontinence is as rare in the southern States as it is in the great State of Rhode Island. If, however, the gentleman from that State is prepared, in connection with this subject, to get up and justify the institution of Mormonism—an institution which authorizes a man to have as many wives as he can maintain—if, I say, he is prepared to maintain such an institution as that, on so poor a pretext, let him go home and justify himself to his constituency. I hope, sir, the provision will not be stricken out. I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB.]

Mr. COBB. The honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] propounded a question to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. As he has not answered that interrogatory, I will do it for him. The honorable gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, did not, perhaps, have the opportunity of knowing the circumstances attending the introduction of this provision into the bill. He was not present at the meeting of the committee when that provision was discussed and resolved on. But I can give an answer for myself to the question proposed by the gentleman from Virginia.

Sir, I advocated that provision before the committee, and I shall advocate it here, believing that it is right. I believe that this Government, when they propose to grant donations without any particular consideration, should—and it is their province to—discriminate and encourage that class for whose peculiar advantage these donations are intended.

Mr. LETCHER. That is not the point of my question.

Mr. COBB. I am coming to the other point in a moment. The gentleman from Virginia speaks of giving large salaries to persons occupying the position which I understand the Governor of Utah does. Now, without intending any disrespect even to the Delegate from that Territory, I will say that I am myself opposed to the principle of encouraging these individuals by giving them large salaries. And so far as my own action is concerned, I am opposed to increasing their salaries. And when the time comes, the gentleman from Virginia will find that my opposition is real and sincere.

As I have been the zealous advocate from the first of ingrafting on the bill the provision now proposed to be stricken out, I desire to propound a few questions to the Delegate from Utah, which, if he answers to my satisfaction, I may, perhaps, and in all probability will, vote for striking out the provision to which he objects.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman will allow me to interrupt him a moment.

Mr. COBB. But I want to propound a question to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. LETCHER. Exactly; but as my friend from Alabama has not got exactly to the right point, I want to bring him to it before he undertakes to catechise the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. COBB. I do not want to catechise the gentleman. I wish only to propound a question or two.

Mr. LETCHER. I wish to know, while you will vote for this restriction to the third section of this bill, why you did not put the like restriction upon the first section, which relates to the salaries of officers, &c.?

Mr. COBB. Permit me to say to the gentleman that my vote, when I come to vote upon the bill, will answer his question.

But I wish to put a few questions now to the Delegate from Utah, [Mr. BERNHISEL.] I may have been too rigid in the principles which I have been accustomed to entertain, and I desire to propound a few questions to the Delegate from that Territory, with a view to correct my own judgment, if it should appear to be wrong.

As I have been upon former occasions, so I am now, disposed to do what I believe to be right; and if I have formed an incorrect idea of the practices which exist in Utah, and of the actions of individuals there, I may be doing great injustice to them by advocating the retention of this proviso in the bill. I will accordingly ask the gentleman from Utah whether this proviso, which limits the benefits of this act to persons who have now, or hereafter have, only one wife, will, in his opinion, work any very considerable injustice or hardship to any considerable number of the inhabitants of the Territory of Utah?

I do not desire to do any great injustice to any set of people, or to any individuals; and if the gentleman, the Delegate from Utah, will tell me that the proviso will work any great hardship to a considerable number of individuals in the Territory which he represents, I may perhaps change my mind and views upon this question. Until I am satisfied upon that point, I must insist, so far as my vote is concerned, upon the retention of the proviso in this bill.

It is a most wholesome proviso, and one which the Government ought to see carried out. The principle that an individual should have only one wife is a good one, and should be supported. I hope the proviso will not be stricken out.

Mr. BERNHISEL. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Alabama, I will state that the proviso will work injury to a very considerable number of the inhabitants of the Territory of Utah. The more wives a man has, the more farms he needs to support them. [Laughter.]

Mr. COBB. That is all I wanted to know, and I am glad to hear the response of the gentleman.

Mr. GIDDINGS. If there is any one feature of legislation which should be adhered to by statesmen, it is that of dealing out the same measure of justice to all who are affected by their legislation. Now, sir, for weeks and months, I have sat here and heard gentlemen denounce all attempts to interfere with the domestic institutions of our Territories. From the commencement of the discussion upon the Nebraska question to this day, scarcely a southern man has spoken who has not sneered at, condemned, and repudiated all attempts "to interfere with the domestic institutions of our Territories." They are now in favor of interfering with the domestic institution of marriage in Utah, among the Mormons.

Now, sir, I do not understand this practice of facing to the "right and left," and to the "right about" and "left about" at the bidding of some drill sergeant. How long are we to sit here and see gentlemen assume one position to-day and another to-morrow? When will gentlemen upon this floor learn that the people of this great nation expect something like consistency of action on the part of their statesmen?

I am earnest upon this subject. I am myself in favor of this proviso, taken as an independent proposition. It is in favor of morality, of propriety, of decency, and good order. But I never will go for it while we legislate for slavery in our Territories, and the admission of slave States, and permit the inhabitants of Nebraska to make such regulations in regard to their domestic institutions, including slavery and unlimited concubinage. I would deal out to the Mormon the same measure of justice and freedom that I would give to the citizens of Nebraska, with their hundreds of concubines. I will permit the Mormon to enjoy his dozen wives, and I believe I could do it with a great deal better conscience than I could give the slaveholder the privilege of an unlimited number of concubines.

Now, sir, when the Mormon marries, he does it openly before the public. The act is lawfully registered; and, when it has taken place, the woman assumes and takes the same standing in society and in the community as her husband. He recognizes her as his lawful partner. His children are legitimate. They are educated; they are taught to understand the laws of the country, and its Constitution. They become enlightened and intelligent, and may become useful members of the community.

Sir, the Mormon does not sell his wife, nor does he sell his children. No, sir. God forbid. The Mormon recognizes his child as entitled to his care, to his attention, to his protection, to the privileges of education. He does not sell his own offspring to a slave dealer. No, sir; no, sir. The gentleman over the way, from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH] says that negroes in the South are entitled to marriage. Why, sir, am I to stand here at this day and proclaim that there is no such institution as legal marriage among three millions of slaves in the United States? A fact of which we all are conscious. Is it not true that the gentleman who has made the declaration, would sell the wife of his slave to-morrow, if he could get his price for her? Or, that he would do worse, perhaps? That there is no law in Virginia to protect that female from the outrages of a brutal owner. Are we to sit here, month after month, and hear discussions in favor of promiscuous, unlimited concubinage in the South, and then turn round and pass laws limiting the Mormons in Utah in respect to marriage? Mr. Chairman, if you will adopt a rule I will follow it. I would deal out the same measure of justice to the Mormons that I would give to those of Nebraska. I would exclude slavery and polygamy from both, and from all Territories.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I do not rise to reply to anything which has fallen from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Giddings] who has just taken his seat, for I could not, nor could any man who knew what was due to himself, or what was due to the respectability of the House of which he is a member, trust himself to reply to such language as has fallen from that gentleman. I leave him to his own conscience, and to the reprobation of his constituents; and if neither of them can serve as a monitor, I shall not undertake to correct or counsel him. I have no further reply to make to him.

I rose, sir, when the gentleman from Ohio obtained the floor, for the purpose of expressing my entire concurrence in the motion to strike out this provision. I say that it is a provision which has no parallel in the legislation of this country. It is another step onward in the progress of centralization on the part of this Government, of which this Congress has already given some strong evidences. We are not only now undertaking to regulate the industry of the country, to regulate the education of the country, to become the general almoner for all its charities; but we are now undertaking to regulate its morality. Sir, where, in the legislation of Congress, will any gentleman point me to a precedent where such a provision as this has ever been annexed to any legislation of Congress? Why, sir, in the homestead bill which this House has passed, was there any provision that no man shall become a settler who had been an adulterer; that no man should be entitled to the benefit of a homestead who had taken the life of his brother, or who had committed a larceny, or any crime whatever? Is there to be found such a provision in any of our laws making donations of land to settlers? Why is it that in this bill, in reference to the only Territory where this is regarded as a legal institution, this provision is inserted. Why, sir, if in Utah, which is an organized Territory governing itself, the marriage of more than one wife is illegal, it is punishable there as a crime; and if legal, it is a most extraordinary thing, that having permitted the organization of a Territory where this is a known legal institution, that when we pass bills for that Territory we exclude from its benefits all the persons who are living in said Territory.

Why, sir, I say that there is no principle whatever on which this is founded; and the remark of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] to the inquiry was perfectly legitimate. For if we exclude these men from the benefit of settlements on the land, on the ground that they are in the commission of a crime, why, I ask, do you not annex the same condition to the salaries of the important officers in the same country? You have given salaries to the Governor and judicial officers of that Territory. Why, then, has not this condition been annexed to those salaries?

I say that Congress has nothing to do whatever with this transaction. We are disposing of the public land. It is not necessary or proper for this Government to make this condition. How is it to be worked out? Who is to investigate the fact? If you are making a provision, it ought to be a provision with some sanction; there should be some mode of enforcing it. What provision is there here for ascertaining the fact whether the party is entitled to make the entry?

To what tribunal have you delegated the inquiry to know whether the person applying for this benefit is subject to the condition? Sir, there is nothing of all this; and it looks to me to be most out of place, and most inopportune. It is certainly without the slightest precedent in the past history of the country; and I trust, therefore, that this motion to strike out will prevail.

Mr. CAMPBELL. For the present, I am not very particular whether this provision is retained in the bill or not. I believe that Congress has the right to intervene in the regulation of all matters that appertain to the welfare and morals of the people who may settle in this Territory. I subscribe fully to the doctrine of intervention, so far as the people of the Territories are concerned during their territorial existence. I believe that in every State of this Union it is made a high offense to have more than one wife, legal and moral. It is regarded by public sentiment as a moral offense, and it is made by law a penal offense; and I believe that Congress has a right to interpose a provision of this kind, providing that the recipient of its bounties shall not perpetrate a great moral wrong.

But I rose more for the purpose of replying to the suggestion that was made by the honorable member from Alabama, who says that our legislation is tending strongly to centralization and consolidation. I, like my colleague, [Mr. Giddings,] desire to see something like consistency here. I have always, during my whole career, opposed this doctrine of centralization. The gentleman professes to be in favor of State rights, and in favor of having public sentiment reflected in the halls of legislation; and yet, I apprehend, that no member in this House more readily yields an acquiescence in the suggestions which come from the other end of the avenue than the honorable gentleman from Alabama. Consolidation and centralization! Who is more ardently in favor of the bill which is now before this House, and which we are notified will be pressed forward next week—I allude to the Nebraska bill—than the gentleman from Alabama? What voice came here calling for that bill to repeal the Missouri compromise, from any sovereign State of this Union, by resolves of its Legislature, or by the declaration of the popular masses assembled in districts, in counties, in townships, or in town meetings? None, sir; it is an edict from the White House. I am in favor of State rights and of popular rights, and am for resisting all attempts that may be made to overwhelm in the halls of legislation that which is known to be the sentiment of the people of this land. Sir, it sounds strangely to me to hear a gentleman condemning that which may seem to be, in this instance, centralization and consolidation, who is in favor of hurrying through in hot haste a measure that is to affect a vast empire in the future, when no voice has been raised from any State or from any portion of the people of this land in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must remind the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] that he must confine his remarks to the subject immediately under discussion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am considering this doctrine of centralization and consolidation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must again remind the gentleman from Ohio that the discussion must be confined to the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am in favor of State sovereignty and popular rights, and I would to-day, if I could, before the sun sets, give the public domain, were it necessary to do so, to construct between this Capitol and the other end of the avenue a gulf so wide and deep that it would be impassable. I would fill it, if I could do so, with burning lava from the hottest crater of Vesuvius, so that no member from Alabama, or Ohio, or any other State of this Union, could ascertain what was the Executive will in regard to pending bills. I would have a sort of subterranean telegraph, so that we might understand that the laws of the land were executed; but I would never permit a member of the House of Representatives to know what was the presidential will in reference to measures before this body. Resistance to centralization and consolidation was the doctrine to which I subscribed in early youth, in the contest of 1832, when I first became a voter, when I looked upon the record of public doings and saw in what manner the Executive power of this country controlled popular will. There was a veto sent down, yesterday, to the other Chamber—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman from Ohio that he is not in order in referring to what took place in the Senate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I beg pardon—

Mr. DISNEY. Are we not acting under a special order?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suppose we shall be considering this veto some of these days, and I hope we shall hear then from the honorable gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] something more about this doctrine of centralization and consolidation of power.

Mr. PHILLIPS. If the gentleman desires to know what I would do in reference to the veto, I will inform the gentleman from Ohio that he will find me one of its warmest advocates, because of the principle of State rights which I have advocated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind gentlemen that the veto is not under discussion here.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope when the veto message does come here that we shall meet this matter of consolidation, compare notes, and go back and trace the whole history of the country, and see who has sustained Executive usurpations when in conflict with the public will.

Mr. ORR. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It has been intimated to me that I am perhaps taking too large a latitude. Perhaps I am making an old-fashioned Whig speech; and it may be proper that I should draw my remarks to a close. I wish it distinctly understood that I am a friend of these Territories. I have assisted the honorable gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, as far as I could, to facilitate territorial business, and I think the Delegates of the Territories will bear me witness that I am friendly to these Territories, and anxious to have the business relating to them disposed of.

Although this is a fruitful theme, and one on which I am not only ready now, but shall be ready in the future, to meet the honorable gentleman from Alabama, yet I do not wish to consume the time of the committee under such circumstances; and therefore I resume my seat until a more appropriate occasion.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to discuss the question of consolidation or centralization, nor will I discuss the other question broached by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] as to Executive dictation. There is one point, however, on which I will say that I totally disagree with that gentleman, and that is the wish expressed by him of placing a gulf between the two Houses of Congress and the Presidential Mansion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Such as would be sufficient to prevent members going there to know how they are to vote on questions before Congress.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not know that any members are in the habit of visiting the President for that purpose—

Mr. CAMPBELL, (interrupting.) I spoke rather hastily on that point, and therefore hope that the gentleman from Georgia will allow me to correct myself. It was a figurative expression that I used; and what I meant by it was, that I would have such a gulf between the Presidential Mansion and both Houses of Congress as would prevent members from going there to inquire and be instructed what way they should vote, which would relieve the legislative branch of Government from presidential pressure. That is all that I meant.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not know, I say, Mr. Chairman, how the fact may be as to members going to the White House for instructions. I know that it is the business of the President, under certain circumstances, to communicate his opinions on particular subjects to Congress. But I do not know that individual members go there for such a purpose. However, I am not going to discuss this matter.

The gentleman from Ohio speaks of the Nebraska bill; and he speaks of an effort being made to push it through this House in hot haste. He said that no State of the Union has yet spoken on this subject. How does this matter stand? Why, Mr. Chairman, we have been here for three or four months discussing this bill. Is that hot haste? As to there having been no voice from any State of the Union in favor of it, now how does this also stand? Sir, the State of Georgia, I know, has spoken; her resolves in favor of that bill are upon your table. The State of Louisiana, too, has spoken. Other States have spoken. And, sir, I see that the other day there was a meeting in the gentleman's own State, (Ohio,) a town meeting—a primary meeting—on the subject of the Nebraska bill. Sir, States have spoken, and the masses are rising in various quarters, demanding action on the bill. Can the friends of that measure then be charged with acting in "hot haste" on the subject—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] is traveling a little out of the record.

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I am. But I am now through on that point—

Mr. CAMPBELL, (interrupting.) What I intended to say was, that prior to the introduction of this element of commotion, none of the States, none of the people had expressed any desire for it.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I only want to set myself right.

Mr. DISNEY. I am extremely sorry, Mr. Chairman, to have to interrupt the gentleman; but all this is out of order.

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, I shall try to keep in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will proceed in order.

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CAMPBELL, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Georgia, I think, misunderstood my remarks. I wish to set him right: that I may be understood as I intended I should.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole of this discussion and explanations are out of order. The Chair has indulged the gentlemen in a very great latitude; but I trust that members will now confine themselves to the matter under consideration.

Mr. DRUM. I rise to a question of order. If I understand it correctly, the Chair decides that under the special order, members of the committee have no right to discuss anything except connected with the bill under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the decision of the Chair; and the gentleman from Georgia, I believe, is about conforming to that decision. The Chair permitted an ample latitude to the discussion which has taken place between the gentlemen from Ohio and Georgia; and perhaps they encroached a little upon the rule. But they were desirous to set themselves right.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is it too late to take an appeal?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has slightly encroached upon the rule, and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to take an appeal.

Mr. HUNT. I rise to a question of order. Is the gentleman from Indiana in order in interrupting the gentleman from Georgia while he was proceeding strictly in order?

The CHAIRMAN. But one question of order can be entertained at the same time.

Mr. HUNT. I did not hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DUNHAM. I hope I am not out of order because the gentleman from Louisiana did not hear me.

Mr. HUNT. The gentleman was interrupting the gentleman from Georgia while speaking in order.

Mr. DUNHAM. I understand that the Chair decides that the gentleman may discuss questions not connected with the bill.

Mr. ORR. The Chair has decided nothing of the kind, except that gentlemen must proceed in the discussion in order.

Mr. DUNHAM. What is the decision?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question of order, except that which has been raised by the gentleman from Indiana himself, and that is, that the gentleman from Georgia is not speaking in order. The gentleman from Georgia has the floor, and will proceed in order.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I should have finished my remarks in the time which has been consumed with the discussion of the question of order. My main object in rising was to declare my opposition to the principles and views of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] on the merits of the proviso under consideration in toto. I allude to the position assumed by him, that the General Government has not only the right, but that it is its duty to interfere in cases of morals, and to erect such a standard of morals in the Territories as Congress may think proper. I put it to the good sense and mature consideration of that gentleman, if this bill were to grant lands to every body who should be a Presbyterian, a Methodist, a Catholic, or of any other particular denomination of religion, whether he would hold it to be the duty of this Congress, according as a majority of their views might be, to pass such a law?

Sir, the Constitution of the United States has guarded this point. Congress has no power to establish any religion—none at all. Congress has no power to touch the question of morals, which lie at the foundation of all systems of religion. Congress can rightfully exercise no power which looks to the establishment of any particular tenets of any religion or any religious sect, or to the putting down of any such religion or sect, either in the States, Territories, or anywhere else. Congress can only interfere with such actions in a criminal point of view as come within the class of "mala prohibita." Congress has no right to look to those actions designated by ethical writers as "mala in se." None whatever.

The gentleman says that this practice of polygamy is regarded as a great moral crime in every one of the States of the Union. I am not going to discuss before this House the question whether that practice is moral or not. Congress has no right to set up a standard of morals for the people of any portion of this country. I meet this question at the threshold—I stand upon principle. I stand upon the Constitution of the United States. I will do the same justice to the people of Utah that I will to people of other Territories, without inquiring into their ecclesiastical polity.

I am in favor of granting lands to the people of the Territory of Utah in the same manner, and upon the same terms, as we do to the people of the other Territories of the Union. I would make no discrimination. If we discriminate to-day against Mormons, to-morrow, perhaps, we shall be asked to discriminate against Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, or Catholics. The evils of such discriminations, or even the attempt to make them, have been wisely provided against in the Constitution. Let us stand by the Constitution. Let us strike out this proviso, and let the people of Utah, amenable to their own laws, civil as well as ecclesiastical, have the rights and privileges of this bill, just as the people of all the other Territories within our jurisdiction. The power which will be exercised in this proviso will, if ever brought in full operation, break down the only safeguard we have for religious freedom.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Sir, I believe that no subject has come before us involving more important principles than this subject. I wish it might be discussed temperately and patiently, and passed upon deliberately and wisely.

I am in favor of retaining the proviso under consideration, and I have risen to say a few words in reply to the gentlemen from Alabama and Georgia, [Mr. PHILLIPS and Mr. STEPHENS.] Before doing so, however, I will notice what was said by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH.] That gentleman says that the marriage tie among the southern slaves is held sacred. I believe that it is held sacred to a considerable extent; and therefore I am willing to say so. But, sir, no thanks to the laws for this. Thanks for it to the faithful affections of the parties to the marriage, and to the kindness of masters and mistresses who permit the indulgence of these affections. But, sir, we are legislators, and we are to look at the legal character of things. We are not to accept concessions and privileges in the place of legal rights. We are to inquire whether marriage among the slaves is legal. Now, sir, there is no legal marriage among them. I go so far as to say that I am ready to stipulate in advance, that if the gentleman from Virginia can show that there is a legally married slave in all the South, I will give up all my opposition to slavery. The slave is incapable of any contract—even that of matrimony. The slaves, after they have passed under the ceremony called marriage, can as well as before it, be sold from each other, and separated forever.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I will tell him of one case.

Mr. SMITH. I will yield, certainly, for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. Some two years ago, in this city, I was speaking to a gentleman from Maryland about buying some slaves. He said his negroes had been married by a Catholic priest, that he himself was of the same religion, and that he would not sell them unless the priest was to go along with them. They were married by a Catholic priest, which I presume the gentleman would call legal. I have seen them legally married.

Mr. SMITH. I have no doubt of what the gentleman states.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will permit the Chair to interrupt him. The Chair ruled some time ago, that during the discussion in committee upon territorial business, he should confine gentlemen in their remarks to the discussion of the subject under consideration. The gentleman from New York will, therefore, confine himself to the amendment now pending before the committee.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Never mind what the Catholic said to the gentleman of Tennessee. I ask that gentleman whether he, himself, believes that there is legal marriage among the slaves? Sir, the gentleman has carried us into Maryland. I will follow him there, and I will say to him, that the Maryland books (1 Maryland Reports, 561, 563) show that a slave cannot be prosecuted for bigamy. He cannot be guilty of bigamy, for he never was a legal husband. He never had ability to contract legal marriage.

But, sir, to the subject before us. I agree with the gentlemen from Alabama and Georgia, that we are not to concern ourselves with the morals of the Territories. I make the province of civil government quite as narrow as those gentlemen do. I do not include in that narrow province the duty of promoting morals, nor even of protecting morals. All I would receive at the hands of Government is protection of persons and property. The office of Government is to hold a shield over the great essential natural rights of its subjects. Now, sir, I hold that polygamy invades a great natural right, and that it is, therefore, the duty of civil Government to suppress it.

I suppose it will not be denied that polygamy prevails in Utah. But it is said that polygamy is a part of the religion of the Mormons; and that, as we would keep ourselves clear of the offense of invading the religion of our subjects, we must not strike at polygamy. I admit, sir, that the reformation of religion cannot be a legitimate object of legislation. But, sir, that legislation may be sound and justifiable which incidentally affects religious systems. If a religious system tramples on any of those great rights which it is the office of Government to protect, then, at just those points where such system offends, Government is to meet it and overcome it.

I argue the duty of Government to suppress polygamy on just the principles that I argue the duty of Government to suppress land monopoly. I believe that all persons have an equal right to the soil. The Maker of the earth has provided one home, not two homes, for each person: not two farms, but one farm, for each farmer. The right to the soil is natural and equal. So, sir, the right of each man to one wife, and each woman to one husband, is a natural right; and for one man to get more than one wife, or for one woman to get more than one husband, is to violate this natural right, which it is the duty of Government to protect.
